Facts and Comments

WHICH is the most effective way for the exhibitor to make his personality count for his own personal advantage as well as for the general benefit of the motion pictures? A well-known exhibitor, who operates a chain of motion picture houses in one of the big Eastern states had a ready answer to this question. He said that the best way for an exhibitor to show to the public what he can do is in the choosing of his own programs. For the present the exhibitor can do much in the intelligent supervision of the music, the providing of extra attractions, the maintenance of order, the personnel of his help, the matter of projection, the cleaning and ventilating of his house and a scrupulous observance of all laws and ordinances. His power and influence in the community would however be ever so much greater, were he to have a free hand in the choice of his programs. He could then consult his own judgment and the needs and tastes of his audiences much better.

It is true that to some extent he may even now exercise his own discretion. It is also true that within the last year or two some of the manufacturers, but by no means all, have sought to put themselves in the position of the exhibitor and to supply him with films that will bring him money and prestige. We refer with sincere pleasure to the efforts of one manufacturer who has provided the exhibitors with films illustrating the efforts for social betterment. We recall no period in the history of our country when the public conscience was more keenly awake than now to the needs and claims of the unfortunate and the weak and the neglected. These pictures have everywhere raised the motion picture in public esteem. Other film productions of the same nature give the public correct and wholesome views of such mighty subjects as prison reform, the injustice and corroding influences of the social evil, the reclaiming for better lives of men and women whom the world and the newspapers complacently describe as outcasts. Another picture of the same kind demonstrating the effects of the loan shark system is projected. We can see great possibilities in these pictures for the intelligent exhibitor. Nothing better could be chosen. Such topics interest every human being. They enter into the lives of hundreds of thousands among the audiences who go to witness moving pictures. When they express the highest aspirations of enlightened modern thought and suggest a just and humane solution they not only emphasize the power of the motion picture for good, but they make the electric theater much more than a mere show house or circus, or dime museum. In the handling of such pictures the exhibitor has a splendid chance of putting original ideas into practice and making his theater a rendezvous for the best people in the community. It appears that these exceptionally meritorious films were all made in coöperation with societies and institutes devoted to various phases of social betterment.

Wise beyond the wisdom of his average competitor is the manufacturer who on occasions forgets the dreadful routine and solicits the coöperation of outside bodies and thus provides something new, something original, something which throbs with life and is gladly and readily understood by the great masses of the people. We cannot repeat often enough that monotony is the most deadly foe of the further progress and popularity of the moving picture. Five or six years ago two theaters out of every three were of small seating capacity, often hastily altered from stores and generally besieged by hordes of unwashed boys, who clamored for the "Wild West" and the cowboys. Then the seating capacity scarcely averaged more than three hundred and anything would do for a quick five-cent thrill. We all know that these things have changed. It is painful to note that the supply of these "nickel-thrills" far exceeds the present demand.

IT IS curious to note the distinctly opposite views and positions taken by churches and clergymen in their treatment of the motion picture. One faction, modern, liberal and discriminating, gladly recognizes the usefulness of the cinematograph. Men and women of this faction spend little time in bemoaning the occasional bad picture and never lash themselves into a moral frenzy howling for the police and demanding draconic laws. Instead of this they at once cast about for means of turning the picture to the advantage of the church. Instead of impeding the wheels of progress they try to turn them in the right direction. The other kind inveigh against the picture and cry out in alarm against its use in church or school. One clergyman recently said that the appeal of the church is "to the heroic and noble in men and women." Does the reverend gentleman imagine that no other agency in modern civilization but the church is making this appeal and making it in all earnestness and sincerity? We surely are not blind to the present faults and shortcomings of the picture but we could name at this moment scores of pictures that make this very appeal and, we think, a bit more effectively than the average Sunday sermon. A few years hence we will all be wondering why the churches have been so slow to take advantage of the motion picture.

A Catholic priest made some pointed remarks on this subject, when he recently gave up several days of his time in order to get enough pictures of a suitable character for the amusement of the children in his parochial school. This particular clergyman had much fault to find with the programs offered to the public by an exhibitor, who had his theater in the immediate neighborhood of the church. Instead of thundering "against the horrid moving picture," this eminently practical pastor put himself in communication with a film exchange and started a theater of his own. "The children," he said, "are bound to see the pictures. I think the good ones are just what children ought to see and I like nothing better than a funny picture. I am now providing that kind of pictures for them and I know there can never be anything in the films, which will offend or shock them. I do not want to compete with the man around the corner and the minute I have the assurance that his pictures will be what they ought to be I am going to stop mine and tell the children to go to his." What this priest is now doing in a small and experimental way will soon be done in a large and comprehensive way by all the churches.

Photoscenes of Travel.

By Louis Reeves Harrison

IF Americans are not the greatest travelers in the world, they run a close second to the English in a leadership that distances all other nations. Orient or Occident, North Pole or South Pole, Englishmen and Americans will be found traversing the highways and waterways, the byways and out-of-the-ways, pegging away up unscaled mountain heights, delving into long-buried ruins, always alive to what is new, interesting or of value from artistic, mercantile or educational points of view. If there is anything yet to be discovered they will never be satisfied until they know all about it.

Most of us are stay-at-homes from necessity rather than desire; the restless wanderlust pervades the whole nation; that is what brought men here; that is what sent them west; that is what spreads them out like overlapping waves of a coming flood upon territory adjoining our own. The cravings of a progressive spirit and the restlessness of nervous vigor keeps our men pushing onward, and they overcome resistance by superiority of intelligence rather than crushing force of numbers, bringing into action the knowledge gained in world-wide exploration.

Some of us must keep house. We who do are merely units of no particular individual importance in an enormous social and political organization, and our daily journeys are down to business and home again, with occasional relief in surrounding territory. But the longing to range seizes us powerfully at times and is never wholly absent. We hunger to see other parts of the earth, possibly from keen curiosity, probably for the purpose of making discoveries in general as to what is going on in lives and conditions remote from our own.

Admitting that our own country is the best to be born in, brought up in, educated in, work in, live in and die in, I prefer pictures of travel in Europe as a pure source of delight when they are properly taken, and we can not gain too much knowledge of the many interesting varieties of people who are gradually merging with our own population. Their history, their industries, their arts, their monuments, their customs, their sports, their comedies and their tragedies give charm and variety to screen presentations and offer a live stimulus to thought.

I will modify that statement. All that I have said in praise of travel pictures relates to what they should do. Those I have seen are far from satisfactory, most of them being as primitive as the earliest examples of the photo-drama. They look as though they had been taken by a camera man who had about the same interest in touring Europe we would expect to be evinced by the chauffeur of a motor car "doing the continent." Each of them is there to attend to a machine requiring some skill to run and keep in repair, and the sum of their interest is what they get for the job.

There may be camera men who know all about the composition of a picture, of balance and transition, of light and shade, of breadth and detail, but such men are rarely seen turning a handle or snapping a kodak, and composition is to the picture what a plot is to a play. It is the brains of all photography that seeks to become allied with art. I have met amateurs who could do better than the average professional photographer because their interest was heart-born, not commercialized. They were able to produce exquisite effects at small cost of time and effort because they felt pictures.

Not only are most of the Photoscenes of European Travel lacking in that artistic skill which is bound to please the audience, but there is comparatively little judgment exercised in selecting what is most enjoyable, with a little concomitant instruction added. There are a few exceptions. I remember a fascinating Gaumont release, affording a comprehensive view of Chateau Pierrefond because it was taken from an air-ship, but we were told nothing of the history of the huge castle built by the Duke of Orleans in 1390 and given no glimpse of its interesting interiors.

There was plenty of room on the film to tell us all about the glorious structure restored by Napoleon III, with a glance at its extremely picturesque court and a moment in its Florid Chapel. Its value would have then been enhanced a hundred fold as a means of culture. By the same method we should have a view of what is of mediæval interest or Renaissance importance at Carcassonne and its fifty-four towers, at Tarascon, at Bourges, at Tours, where Charles Martel defeated the Saracen invaders in one of the world's decisive battles.

There are hundreds of living historical and legendary objects crying for camera attention at Falaise of the Norman Conquerer, at fascinating Blois, with its royal palace of wondrous beauty and extent, at Orleans, where Caesar's forces were imperiled before Christ was born and Joan of Arc saved France from the English. There is a wealth of architectural delight and instruction at Rouen, Amiens, Chartres, Rheims and Poitiers, with amazing revelations of Roman remains in all their grandeur and tragedy at the old towns of Arles, Nimes, Orange and Valence.

The audiences watching from in front should never be kept in ignorance of the true meaning of what is thrown on the screen. If subtitling of the highest skill fails to take them beyond languid interest in the presentation, the imagination must be subsidized by some such tribute as a glowing scene or two from acute historical moments. At least, they must be given enough stimulus and encouragement in what is shown to inspire a keen quest for the remainder. If the inanimate objects and explanations do not suffice, inject the animate.

A weakness in all photoscenes of travel is that of taking the pictures in the full glare of day. This might be necessary where it was a matter of importance to clearly exhibit the expression of a human face at a critical moment of dramatic tension, but there is an indefinable charm in the softened mystery of old historic structures, and the vaporous quality of twilight effects powerfully stirs the imagination. We have already seen some startling sunsets in the moving pictures. Use the light of that hour to fasten an immortal scene to the imagination of the spectator.

It is compulsory now and then to force the studio lights upon a single character or object to give it prominence through the relief it exhibits. That is possible in studio interiors, but the use of half lights in an exterior can be wonderfully true to nature when no one point of the picture is given prominence. People in the audience must be made to feel that they are actually present when travel photoscenes are shown—they are on the ground and partaking of the pleasure of an actual traveler, enjoying the innumerable sources of human interest it contains.

"The form that it finds, is the fabric you wrought
"On the loom of the mind, with the fibre of thought."

"The Usurer's Grip" (Edison)

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison

A CONCEPTION of the highest order, pregnant with consequence and intrinsic meaning, a social phenomenon of deep interest presented in a way that will reach human hearts by the million, is this new Edison photodrama. It is one of the tendrils now reaching out from a vast accumulation of wealth to better the lot of those who seem to struggle hard all their lives, bare and flavorless lives, for mere existence, though they doubtless form so many necessary threads in the universal plan.

The pity we all feel for men and women of scant opportunity, who are not responsible for their ancestry and environment, yet who appear to carry all the burden of hardship, is impotent as a sentiment because the problem of labor and its reward is so overwhelming to the individual of limited resources. However hateful to us is the injustice of present social conditions, however sickening the wrongs imposed upon those who deserve the best the world can afford, we can not do better than extend a feeble hand now and then to those within reach, with a sense of shame that comparative poverty permits us to do so little, and a deeper sense of shame for those who use inherited millions for the degradation of themselves and their fellow-beings.

What can we do? The average wife and mother has her mission clearly indicated at home. The average husband and father realizes the danger of sharing what he has earned for the maintenance of himself and family with outsiders whose condition stands as a perpetual menace to his own little group. To whom but those of vast wealth can we look to exercise a salutary influence upon malignant forces operating in our social body that its organization may be lifted a step higher towards eventual enlightenment of the whole human race?

Very few of us looked to Russell Sage for active and abundant helpfulness to those in sore need. He was skilled in financial operations and had the power of judging what were the best means of attaining his ends, but this implied a marvelous ability to look carefully forward and grasp the consequences of present situations, an ability he proved in the wisest act of his life, that of selecting an intelligent and sympathetic woman, his own wife, to dispose of his vast accumulations with combined good will and good sense.

Sage in name and sagacious in action, the great financier laid the foundation of a noble beneficence named for him and formulated by Mrs. Sage and her advisors. A branch of the Russell Sage Foundation is The Division of Remedial Loans, an organization engaged in the removal of an evil which has destroyed working men by tens of thousands as well as the happiness of women and children and the growth of pure home life in our midst.

Every inch a man is the working employe who tries to maintain a normal standard of living for himself and family on a pitiful wage that affords bare necessities, giving the best of his years and strength to labor that adds to the value of his part of the world, always hoping and sustained by faith in his eventual advancement to reasonable compensation for honest effort, but operating on too slender a margin for unexpected contingencies. Accident to himself, illness in his family, a lull in production, enforced idleness from other causes find him unprepared, and he sinks down in despair or falls into the hands of a "Loan Shark."

The "Loan Shark" does a business of legalized blackmail under a pretense of lending money without security. New York State, to its everlasting disgrace, has protected this cancerous individual by permitting a percentage of an employe's salary to be attached in the event of judgment awarded, and a crooked lobby supported by money lenders at Washington, has attempted to secure the passage of a bill permitting extortions. Nearly every court in the land is a legally constituted collection agency, its tremendous power directed against the finest property any community can possess, the man who labors honestly for small wage in the direct interest and for the betterment of that community.

The "Loan Shark" is a sort of national institution of ours, a malignant growth on our body, for he is not any such factor in other civilized countries, and his elimination is not probable by inactive public sentiment when opposed by organized political decadents, as rotten their way as those who adventure a little money for purposes of outrageous extortion, but The Sage Foundation is organizing savings and loan associations which place borrowers upon their honor without attaching their wages and will drive at the root of the evil that lies in pernicious legislation, and they have the combined power of wealth and brains to accomplish their exalted purposes.

The Edison production is released in coöperation with the Remedial Loan Division of the Russell Sage Foundation and should prove an effective publicity feature in addition to the interest that will be aroused by its artistic merits alone. With such a theme—the noblest element in dramatic construction even though it may not be a full measure of value—the photodrama has its educational usefulness assured, and as it gives us the interweaving culmination of two destinies it fulfills the best ideals of what is dramatic. It deals with the vicissitudes of hope and fear, presents its characters as those of flesh and blood, and kindles a sympathetic flame in its moments of suspense because we know that we are looking into the warm and throbbing hearts of men and women like ourselves. The play itself is of masterly quality and has met with responsive handling by the producer.

THE STORY

Young Jenks is a clerk maintaining a small family including a frail wife and sick child. A vital question arises, that of the child's preservation at a time when both parents have exhausted their financial resources. They decide to borrow for the sake of the little one entrusted to their care, and fall into the hands of a "Loan Shark" through an advertisement Jenks finds in one of the daily papers.

Like most people in desperate straits for money, they are in a weak position to investigate or negotiate. They are lured by an attractive notice to the effect that quick loans at 6% per annum will be made on furniture without publicity and accept the terms offered without close scrutiny of the documents they are called upon to sign. These completely cover as security all the little attributes of home collected with economy and careful selective taste during years of married life.

Scene from "The Usurer's Grip" (Edison).

All the little self-denials and loving gifts to each other are included in the comprehensive mortgage, and the sum of twenty-five dollars is advanced by the "Loan Shark" on this collateral in addition to a wage assignment and notes for monthly payments aggregating double the principal. When at last the priceless cash is delivered into the hands of the anxious father, and he and his wife have complied with the unreasonable demands made upon them, the Shark seizes twenty per cent. of the amount to cover expenses of drawing up the papers.

Nourishment and medical attention are now provided for their child, and its life is spared. The father returns to his work, and the pictures of his home life show the fearful exactions the mother puts upon herself to help meet payments when they are due. Here is a life of mental, physical and moral starvation in order that the greed of the Shark and the majesty of the law that values inanimate property above the human being may be satisfied. Every penny saved costs a tear. The smallest error or accident now means degradation. They are as much enslaved as the lowest beings on earth.

The marvel is that a man and woman struggling under such unrelenting misery and humiliation preserve their moral balance. The Loan Shark provides one of the strongest incentives to crime in exhibiting the success of crooked dealings and the futility of honest endeavor. From his point of view and that of the average grafter they are mere "boobs," while he "is wise to the game." Both husband and wife remain true to their highest ideals, through persecutions of an outrageous nature in his office and within the sanctity of her home.

The "Bawler Out" visits the husband's place of business and not only humiliates him before the other employes but is so insistent upon getting Shylock's pound of flesh that the unfortunate clerk is dismissed for running into debt. He is shadowed when he searches for a new position until he secures employment, and the new office marked for further indignities. Such methods are so destructive of honorable ambition that they are as distinctly felonious as any threat for purposes of extorting money—they constitute a vile form of malicious mischief.

Where the wife is engaged in her divine mission of guiding the footsteps of a little human creature the "Loan Shark" goes to extremes that can only be indicated with delicacy. It is a case of unequal conflict between an unsuspicious woman and a con man long trained in obtaining money under false pretenses. Obtaining her signature to written instruments with deliberate intent to swindle constitutes a felony in all cases but his, and that is one of many reasons why the great mass of people are coming to regard our whole system of laws as farcical if not a supporter of crime against the individual.

The scenes revealed in the Edison film are not in the least exaggerated. The difficulty is to present a clear view of crooked methods employed and their demoralizing results in a drama whose first object is to enlist the interest of a mixed audience numbering many millions. Far from being exaggerated, the story told is absolutely true in every detail pictured and merely shows one of a thousand similar instances.

The "Bawler Out" follows the clerk into his second place of employment but encounters a New Man, an employer enlightened enough to understand Christ's doctrine of self-respect in the broad sense that accords respect to the honorable employe who is struggling to make his wage equal his necessities. Interest and suspense has been held up to this moment of relief so well that curiosity is now aroused as to how the ends of justice may be attained where criminal action is impossible and civil procedure of small value in the end.

The New Man understands that any soldier may return from his campaign to find himself and family in debt and be none the less brave and valuable to his country on that account—those are the fortunes of the incessant industrial war. He cheers the clerk by saying that there is a clear way out of his difficulties along which no further humiliation nor anxiety will be encountered. He may borrow according to his vital needs without mortgaging his little household accumulations, without assigning his salary and without giving other security than his honesty of intention.

The New Man leads his clerk to where one of his steady and straight purposes would not even be questioned nor subjected to secret investigation, the saving and loan department of the Russell Sage Foundation. There he does not have to pay 10% a month for the trifling sum he needs, nor $5.00 for papers, nor $2.00 for recording and acknowledgments before a notary. The exposition of Saving and Loan Association methods at this period of the photo-drama is of high general interest while it at the same time affords publicity to a noble and sensible enterprise of philanthropic design.

The Manager of the Association gives the New Man and his clerk a note to the District Attorney, and they proceed to the latter's office while the "Loan Shark" is carrying out his final act of contemptible oppression. Our farcical code enables any money-lending crook to issue execution against a wage earner and have the Sheriff's office operate as a collection agency to satisfy the debt. This may be regarded as a slight improvement on the methods of those good old days when an insolvent person could be sold into slavery, but it amounts to the same thing with an added incentive to crime.

The District Attorney accompanies the young man who is being hounded into a hopeless condition of mean ambition and doubtful progress to his home and finds the "Loan Shark" at work removing furniture, catching him in the act of removing the bed on which the little child is lying. A dramatic scene follows with recovery of the furniture and all money obtained under false pretenses, the only unsatisfactory part of it being that the degenerate money lender is not put away where he can do no more harm.

The play is admirably constructed, deeply interesting, broadly humanizing, exhibits a deplorable condition existing in our midst, offers a cheering and hopeful remedy and unveils the antiquated support given by our code of laws to those engaged in bleeding our working men and women to exhaustion. Best of all, the play helps us to understand what we owe to one another.

"God, what a world, if men in street and mart
"Felt the same kinship of the human heart
"Which makes them, in the face of flame and flood,
"Rise to the meaning of true brotherhood."

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

LINCOLN BEACHEY, aeroplane comedian and demon of the air, at the recent international meeting in Chicago, played so many antics in his biplane on Sunday, September 22nd, when he assumed the role of Mlle. Lavaseur, that Miss Kathlyn Williams, Stan. H. Twist and a whole bunch of other Selig celebrities were either immersed in Lake Michigan or had all their plans turned topsy turvy. As a Tribune reporter cleverly puts it:

"Mam'selle flew. She flew in becoming feminine distress. She flew high and low and wiggle-waggle. She flew with such startling effect that the police report cases of watchers toppling out of automobiles in the paddocks; also of seven persons who tumbled out of a launch off Van Buren Street when Beachey, as 'Mam'selle Clarice,' made a dive at them; also the case of a hydroaeroplanist who, with a passenger, gyrated upside down in water."

It is with the hydroaeroplanist and his passenger that we have to do, and again we let the Tribune scribe wield his fluent pen in describing the accident and the expose:

"Just five minutes before the launch tipped, Beckwith Havens, with a moving picture actor as a passenger in his hydroaeroplane, turned upside down in the water between the officials' stand and the government pier.

"Havens, abstracted by the evolutions of 'Mam'selle Clarice,' was driving his water-logged pontoon at too fast a clip over the wavy lake. Of a sudden the tail of the airboat was flung high in the air, where it rested a moment, then tilted over backward. Stanley H. Twist was flung out of his seat into the water. Havens clung to the rigging.

"Capt. George De Mar, of police motorboat No. 2, a spectator ashore, jumped into the swift launch Kusie and sped to the rescue. After lifting Twist, exhausted after a long swim, into the boat, De Mar had the launch moved close to the inverted airboat, where a rope was flung to Havens. .

"Fake Rescue" Fails.

"Havens left the launch, however, to cling to the pontoon of the inverted airboat while it was being towed ashore by a police motorboat.

"The entire mishap is registered on moving picture photographic films. Havens, the hero, was commissioned by 'Mr. Hawkins,' the father, to go to the rescue of 'Belle,' heroine, in a motorboat at sea. Havens was accompanied by 'Oliver,' Hawkins' secretary, the villain, who loves 'Belle.'

"Miss Kathlyn Williams as 'Belle' was out beyond the breakwater in a motor boat surrounded by launches containing all sorts of moving picture apparatus. Miss Williams had a quantity of flashlight powder on a pan in her boat, ready to touch it off in imitation of an explosion. Then she was to leap in the water and be picked up by Havens, who was to come flying up.

"All was timed well, but with no reckoning on the influence Beachey would have on the scenario. The pantomime was abandoned for the day."

Chicago Moving Picture Union, Local No. 2, Rescinds Strike Resolution.

In this recent unjust strike against Chicago newspapers the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union of Chicago took side with the strikers. At a meeting held by the Union on Thursday, September 19th, a resolution forbidding the members to read the daily papers was rescinded, the organization declaring that it had committed a great wrong in originally adopting it. The following letter from Secretary Hal Johnstone to the Chicago publishers explains matters:

"This is to inform you that the Moving Picture Operators' Union has rescinded a resolution adopted some time ago providing for a fine of $25 upon any member found reading a strike-bound newspaper. We also wish to make clear to you that we were deceived as to the merits of the strike and were led into the action taken by influences that we have since discovered emanated from the enemies of the trade union movement.

"The greatest of these was the Chicago World, a Socialist paper. Its course in the whole strike situation has been found to be not only vicious, but, to our minds, criminal, in that it sought to incite workingmen to commit volence and any other act that would injure the strike-bound newspapers or their employees. The World also kept up a most vicious campaign to instill class hatred into the minds of the honest workingmen. It encouraged slugging by denouncing the police and encouraged in every way assaults upon those selected to enforce the laws of our State and city. Our Union does not believe in violence. It is a Socialist weapon.

"It was no wonder that our members became inoculated with this venomous, anarchistic poison and thought that by passing the resolution mentioned they would help the men they believed to be honest in their strike. But we found since that it was not an honest strike. The rank and file of the strikers are not to be blamed, however. They are simply the victims of incompetent, vicious and crooked outsiders employed on other newspapers.

"We also found that the American Federation of Labor never indorsed the strike. We found that the World and a West Side sheet manipulated the strike in order to build up circulation for themselves. After learning these things from an extensive investigation we brought the matter to the attention of our Union to-day and the resolution referred to was rescinded, and I was ordered to notify the Chicago publishers of the fact. I also wish to state that we will try to undo the wrong we have done and our new business agent, Arthur Allison, has been so instructed. Mr. Allison is a genuine trade unionist, and will not be misled as others have been."

"Neptune's Daughter" a Fine Film.

I saw "Neptune's Daughter" run off at Nielsen's Parkway Theater one evening last week and was much impressed by the novelty and beauty of the production. The scenes are laid in the Wisconsin Dells and form ideal surroundings for the quaint and classical little story.

I was much delighted by the acting of Francis X. Bushman and Miss Martha Russell, the former in the roll of the artist, Charles Fleming, and the latter as Undine, the mermaid. Harry Cashman is imposing as Father Neptune and his rising from, and return to, the deep adds to the weirdness of the scene showing his interview with Undine. The pathetic ending has a mysterious atmosphere that harmonzes well with the mythical character of the story. The Essanay Company can plume itself on the fine photography revealed in this film.

Chicago Film Brevities.

W. W. Watts, president of the Vaudette Amusement Company, Springfield, Ill., writes that he has opened a picture theater in Jerseyville, Ill. P. L. Shepherd is the manager of the new house, and Mr. Watts sent in a year's subscription for the World, for Mr. Shepherd's special use.

The M. P. Machine Operators of the Chicago Theatrical Protective Union, Local No. 2, are now making arrangements for their regular annual ball to be given at the Coliseum Annex, on December 4th. Work on the program for the occasion has already begun. The program, in addition to advertisements, will contain short biographies of the leading figures in the film business, in Chicago, the sketches to be illustrated by cuts of the men under consideration. Jack Miller, former business agent of Local No. 2, was succeeded by A. G. Allison on September 5th. Mr. Miller is now operator of the U. S. Burlesque Theater, on South State and Harrison.

The official program of the first annual convention of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association of California has just been received at this office. It is quite a pretentious effort and contains about twenty-four pages of advertising in addition to three pages of cover.

Henry McRae left Tuesday evening for Los Angeles, Cal., where he will immediately enter on his duties as producer in Selig's Western studio. Before leaving, Producer McRae had just completed the Selig hydroaeroplane romance, in which Miss Kathlyn Williams figured prominently, an exciting incident therein being treated of in the opening article of this letter.

L. J. Edmunds, treasurer of Raton's Aerodome Theater, Raton, N. M., writes that he has remodeled the Aerodome, in order to play good road theatrical attractions for the season just entered upon. His theater has a stage 28 feet wide and 25 feet deep. It will seat 500 people and is heated by steam. The Coliseum, the theatrical house in Raton, was burned down some time ago and since that time residents have been obliged to go out of town to see anything good in a theatrical line. Mr. Edmunds considers that Raton is one of the best show towns on the road for its size.

WASHINGTON VISITS NEW YORK.

Mr. Wm. Alvine, manager of the Virginia Theater, Washington, D. C., was a welcome caller at our New York office during the week. He reports phenomenal business for the J. J. Noonan enterprises, of which the "Virginia" is but one. Mr. Noonan has the reputation of being very considerate of the welfare of his employees. Mr. Alvine says that the Virginia employees, by good treatment, are almost spoiled for working in any other theater. The reason he gives is that Mr. Noonan owns the Stag Hotel, just above the Virginia Theater, and that during the heated season they all have the privilege of going upstairs and getting under a fine shower bath whenever there is a lull downstairs.

THE SCREEN CLUB.

The third preliminary meeting of the Screen Club was held at Bryant Hall on Thursday evening, September 19th. The meeting adopted a constitution and by-laws, and the committee that has had in charge the formulation of them was authorized to make application for a charter. The next meeting of the club will be held at Bryant Hall on Saturday evening, September 28th, at which time the permanent officers will be elected. The officers to be chosen will include a president, first, second and third vice-president, corresponding secretary, recording secretary, treasurer, four members of the board of governors to serve one year and four members of the board of governors to serve two years.

Among the recent additions to the roll are: Lloyd F. Lonergan, George Ober, Harry A. Morey, E. B. Stockton, A. D. Francis, Wm. Dunn, Frank Mason, Fred'k A. Thomson, Geo. Larkin, Wm. Quirk, Guy Hedlund, Geo. Siegman, Wm. H. Sloane, Matt Ketcham, D. V. Wall, Frank Grandon, Budd Ross, P. Phad Bolkman, A. F. Mayo, John G. Haas, John Hopkins, L. G. Coover, Frank A. Grimmer, E. P. Hirsh, Gus Pixley, Ed Shulter, Fred Armitage, W. N. Drolinger, Anthony O'Sullivan, John Adolphi, G. O. Nicholls, O. A. C. Lund, Giles Warren, I. V. Willets, Hernandez Mejai, Thos. W. Evans, Will E. Sherrer, T. Hayes Hunter, Hopp Hadley, Wm. A. Humphries, Edwin Warren, John Arnold, Chas. D. Herman, Frederick Beck, Howard Crampton, Harry Collier, Carl M. Leviness, Herbert Blache, Worthy Butts, Roy Applegate, W. G. Slider, Stewart Holmes, S. M. Spedon, G. G. Oliver, Ed. Wynard, H. C. Matthews, Hughy Mack, George Magie, A. H. Moses, Jr., H. S. Mack, Herbert Miles and Charles E. Wynard.

TROY "MAJESTIC" MANAGER DROPS IN.

Mr. J. A. Boyer, proprietor and manager of the Majestic Theater, Troy, N. Y., was knocking about Gotham for a few days recently. Object, business and pleasure, but no pleasure on account of the nasty weather. Mr. Boyer reported that they are having some difficulty in organizing the Troy exhibitors, owing to non compos mentis in several quarters. There is a movement on foot for Troy exhibitors to unite in raising their admission price from five to ten cents on Saturday nights and Sundays. Mr. Boyer thinks this cannot be accomplished unless all the local exhibitors agree to it. The advice of the Moving Picture World is for those who desire it to go ahead and raise the price, regardless of those who do not. When the hold-outs get a look at the soft money coming in on those nights they will quickly follow suit. It has been done elsewhere; it can be done in Troy.

BRONCHO AND KEYSTONE NOT FILM SUPPLY RELEASES.

The Film Supply Company calls the Moving Picture World's attention to an error in the listing of pictures under the "Film Supply Company" heading in the Calendar of Independent Releases, explaining that the Broncho and Keystone brands are not Film Supply releases, but are being released by the Mutual Film Corporation independently of the Film Supply. The World makes this explanation for the reason that exhibitors taking the exclusive Film Supply program will not be able to get Broncho and Keystone pictures from Film Supply exchanges.

The situation is rather complicated just at present, but will probably be straightened out at an early date.

LUBIN WILL NOT MAKE RAW STOCK.

Evidently the Lubin press agent over-reached himself when he sent out the statement that a plant for the manufacture of raw film stock would probably be erected upon the Betzwood Estate recently purchased by Mr. S. Lubin. He now comes forward with a denial of that statement in an announcement from Mr. Lubin to the effect that he "had no idea of building a factory for manufacturing raw material like celluloid film." Mr. Lubin further states that he will devote Betzwood, with all its natural beauties and advantages, to the production of pictures, and, while he will erect studios and other necessary buildings on that property, he will not abandon his big Philadelphia plant.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY INCREASES PLANT.

The Nicholas Power Company has added another floor to its factory, increasing its area to 28,000 feet of floor space. The company announces that it is ten days behind in delivery of orders now and has been compelled to put on an extra force of 90 men in an effort to catch up. More than 225 men are regularly employed at the Power's factory.

"The Queen of Spades" (Eclipse.)

Reviewed by Jas. S. McQuade.

GEORGE KLEINE has among his regular releases, in the near future, a very interesting subject by Urban-Eclipse, entitled "The Queen of Spades." This single reel film should please all who view it, because of the novelty of the story and excellent photography. I do not wish to convey the impression that the story is original, because I have read others of a similar type; but I do wish to say that it is the first time I have ever seen the story told in moving pictures.

The principal character is a young and enterprising star reporter, who makes up his mind to discover the secrets of a suicide club in his city and thereby finds himself in imminent peril of his life. Indeed, he is saved, just in the nick of time, by his chief and other members of the editorial staff, who force their way into the club and scatter the death watch that has been stationed outside the room, where he has been locked, to see that he carried out his compact with the club.

It is a keen psychological study to watch the change that slowly comes over the young man as it dawns on him that his fellow members are in deadly earnest, and that he must either end his life or suffer death at the hands of the death guard, the members of which are muffled up in hideous costumes and standing outside the window, which commands a clear view of every part of the death room. A grim humor takes possession of us as the victim of fate squirms and wriggles in the vain attempt to break the meshes of the deadly net that entraps him. As he loses his self control and finally gives up in despair, we find ourselves deeply concerned and nervously awaiting his rescue in some way or other. It is with intense relief that we witness the sudden entry of his friends, just as his brain has lost its poise and he has seized a pistol to end his misery.

The characterization of Frank Pryor, the reporter, is forceful and shows delicate shading. The president of the club is another strongly drawn character. He is an epitome of reserved force and unrelenting action.

The scenes are all interior views and fully sustain the reputation of Urban-Eclipse for fine photographic effects.

Frank Prior, a bright reporter, gains the sanction of the editor-in-chief of the Daily Star to discover the secrets of a mysterious club, "The Friends of Plato," the members of which, it is believed, have bound themselves by a solemn oath to commit suicide when fate determines so. Young Prior has planned to become a member of the club through a friend, Mr. Davis, whom he knows has been initiated. He, of course, keeps the secret to himself that he intends making use of his experience as a scoop for his paper. He treats the whole matter lightly in his own mind, and is inclined to look on the grave and stern-looking president of the club, to whom he is introduced by Mr. Davis, with a jocose air. He grows more serious, however, when he reads the declaration which must be signed by him for admittance, and shows nervousness as he glances from the page to the flinty face of the president, who has the imperturbability of the Sphinx.

The first meeting of the club, at which Prior is present, shows the members seated around a large oak table, in a well appointed room. The attendant brings in a deck of playing cards with much solemnity, and places them on the table, in front of the president. As one scrutinizes the faces of the men around the table, he is struck by the general air of nervousness prevailing. The president is the only man whose impassivity shows iron nerve. Pryor's countenance betrays a half-concealed spirit of levity, akin to mockery of the proceedings.

The deck of cards is cut and is passed around to each member for the drawing of a single card. The fatal card is the queen of spades, for the man who draws that must end his life, that very night. We note the relief and the sigh of ill-concealed satisfaction which take possession of every man when he discovers that he has not drawn the black-visaged queen. It now remains for two men, Pryor and another, to complete the tempting of fate. Pryor draws the queen of spades and is congratulated by his brother members on his good luck. All file from the room except the president, who remains with the doomed man. The reporter scorns the selection just made, and tells the president to his face that he does not intend to make a tragedy out of such a ridiculous farce. The president remains calm and stern, and taking a revolver from his pocket, places it on the table, beside Pryor's right hand. He then walks from the room, saying good-bye with a light-hearted wave of his hand.

Pryor thrusts the weapon away from him and rushes to the door. It is locked. The only other chance of escape is by the wide series of windows. He determines to find safety in that direction. Before doing so he seats himself at the table, and is evidently occupied in writing a message to his young wife.

He is startled by a weird chorus of voices in deep bass, repeating the words, "We are waiting." Looking up he sees four ghastly figures, enveloped in dark costumes, from head to feet, guarding the windows. It is then despair seizes him, and he is saved by the intervention of his friend, Davis, who had notified the editorial force of the Star of his deadly peril.

JOE REX ENGEL, (Universal Feature).

THE classic features of Joe Rex Engel as here presented are equaled only by his literary ability, an attribute of which, by the way, Joe Rex is exceptionally proud. There are many achievements in this line to his credit, notable among which was his graphic description of the discovery of Europe and London by the Rex Company. As may be easily conjectured the sketch herewith shows our friend "hotfootingit" with a sheet of copy which he has just prepared for the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. The overwhelming smile which lights up his always benevolent countenance indicates that he is at peace with all mankind, including the printer. Aside from these few observations Joe Rex is an exemplary young man, abstemious in his habits, of charming personality and one of the "Who's Who" in the film game. Your acquaintance will be enriched through knowing him.

Joe Universal Brandt had his significant smile with him the other day, as he announced that the Helen Gardner Players will release through the Universal. The initial appearance will be in a two-reel subject.

Mark M. Dintenfass is most enthusiastic over the new home of the Universal at Forty-sixth Street. He says the Universal is spending $20,000 at the Mecca Building in the equipment of the new offices, projecting room, etc.

The Eclair company is making additions to its offices, two rooms having been acquired on the same floor. New carpets, rugs, etc., indicate that this company is making arrangements to handle a larger business. Mr. Offeman, the general manager, told me this week that he is expecting on the next boat two new cameramen to augment the forces at the studio. Also, and especially, there are expected two stage directors. One, Mr. E. Verneau, will be employed exclusively in the making of comedies dealing with American subjects. The other, Mr. Cohl, is one of the best-known animated cartoonists, and he will devote his efforts to producing something that will not only be new to Americans, but also will be as novel as it will be interesting. Both Mr. Verneau and Mr. Cohl speak English fluently. They have been in Eclair employ for many years.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company has closed a contract with the Democratic National Committee for the making of a thousand feet of film, in which Governor Wilson will appear. The Democratic candidate will be the center of a campaign story which is expected to appeal in a forcible manner to the voters. No. 1 Union Square is in a jubilant mood over the selection by the Democratic committee of the Universal as the medium for the dissemination of political doctrine. It is believed that this film will mark the first attempt on a large scale to take advantage of the possibilities of the motion picture as a factor in politics.

Mr. Paul Hernaud, manager of the Lux Film Company in New York, sailed Tuesday, Sept. 24, on the Kaiser Wilhelm II for Paris. A short business trip is the occasion of the voyage.

H. M. Warner, of Warner's Features, returned this week from Pittsburgh, Pa., where he had gone on a hurry call. It now appears that the occasion for the hasty visit was the release on the 13th inst. of a twelve-pound feature. Harry says that the assertion that the latest "Warner's Feature" is a howling success is an understatement of the fact. At last reports the mother and daughter were doing finely.

Looked in on Mr. A. Warner this week; he was some busy—says things have certainly been coming fast for him. He is this week opening offices in Dallas, Tex., Boston and Buffalo, making something like sixteen branches Mr. Warner now has booking his features. Mr. Warner will shortly release a big military drama, in which a thousand troops will take part. A dispatch just received showed that the Indian scheutzenfest—or whatever may be good redman's lingo for its equivalent—at Watonga, Okla., has been successfully filmed, and that the result will be a big picture. The government had granted to Mr. Warner's agents sole permission to "take" the doings of these three thousand Indians for the days of September 10, 11 and 12.

J. D. Tippett, of Universal Features, is looking for more worlds to conquer. Just now he is adding to his activities in the picture world by promoting the Film Publicity Company, designed to handle big industrial and advertising work. Mr. Tippett will utilize in this new departure some novel schemes in lighting effects in order to secure the best of photographic effects.

Mr. E. Arnaud, Eclair director, is going to Paris for a short visit. He will be accompanied on his return by Mrs. Arnaud, who has been spending a few weeks in the French capital. It is understood that the Eclair company will send a large force to California this winter, under the supervision of one of the foreign directors.

ESSANAY WILL NOT MAKE BASEBALL PICTURES THIS YEAR.

At the offices of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, Chicago, Mr. George K. Spoor, president of that company, stated that Essanay would not negotiate for the privilege of making pictures of the World's Championship Series this year. He gave as his reason that the price asked for the privilege was excessive and in his opinion baseball had been very much overdone in picture theaters during the past summer. "There is nothing new to take in the baseball game," said Mr. Spoor, "and each season's picture is more or less a repetition of the season before, and there is a doubt in my mind that the pictures would be profitable to the exhibitors. They certainly would not be to the manufacturer for the cost necessary to their making."

DEAGAN'S BELLS ADVANCED IN PRICE.

J. C. Deagan announces that his famous musical electrical bells will, in future, be advanced one-third in price. This extra cost is necessitated by reason of the new improvements added to the bells. Among these are: a new style keyboard, the same as on a piano, with a bracket to hold the keyboard in any desired position, either on a wall or on a piano. The keyboard is wired complete to a terminal and it has special soft and loud attachments. The electric mechanism and the bells have also been greatly improved.

The expense incurred in making the bells has necessarily been greatly increased, and Mr. Deagan is confident that the bells will be better value at the advanced price than at the old.

PICTURES FOR THE NATIONAL CONSERVATION CONGRESS.

Dr. Winthrop Talbot, in charge of the Exhibit for the Conservation of Vital Resources to be held in connection with the National Conservation Congress, which meets at Indianapolis, Ind., beginning September 30, 1912, was in New York City last week making a selection of motion pictures bearing on the several subjects coming within the scope of the Congress.

"At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs."

By G. F. Blaisdell.

THE gathering at the photoplay dinner at Coney Island made motion picture history. It marked the gathering of the clans—all the clans. If in the past there have been differences, punctuated at times by strife, of these on this most enjoyable occasion there was not a trace of evidence. Not only did the dinner make for solidarity. It will be remembered as being the initial attempt seriously to get together in a fraternal spirit of those having deeply at heart the elevation of motion pictures. That steps were taken to hold another dinner three months hence is the best possible index as to the successful issue of the first occasion. It is a fact not without significance that the committee of three designated to arrange the details for the next gathering is representative of the three chief groups in the industry. It may be said that such combinations will not alter the alignment of business units. Possibly this is true. They are bound, however, in their influence to soften asperities and to prove to the world that while men in this great industry may differ on commercial details, they are as one on the vital question of collective action on such measures as may be determined to be best for the steady progression of pictured dramatic art, for the permanence of the motion picture.

In a recent chat credit was here given to other than Thomas Santschi for the excellent interpretation of Padre Juan in "The Little Indian Martyr." An accidental uncovering of the cast of characters of this interesting picture pointed out the error. Chiquito, the Martyr, was taken by Roy Clark, and his work as well as that of Mr. Santschi was deserving of high praise.

New Orleans is now in the throes of a mild agitation on the censorship question. Charles I. Denechaud, representing the Federation of Catholic Societies, favors a censorship which prohibits the display of any pictures that refer to crime of any kind. One bold man down there urges that any pictures passed by the national board ought to be good enough. The inspector of police opposes any ordinance that puts the censorship on him—he says he has some troubles without the added burden of supervising all the films. Just think that over—cut out all reference to crime of any kind! Let's try it first on the speaking stage. If it is a success there, then we can try it on the screen.

"Eddie" August, long-time Biograph player, for seven months with Edison, and a few weeks with Powers, and now at the head of a Lubin company, received much attention at the photoplay dinner at Coney—and deservedly, too. Not only is he a good actor; he's a good fellow.

Two Wisconsin lads were recently arrested in Illinois. They were reported to be in possession of much shooting stuff and to have confessed to be on their way to the wild west to kill Indians, inspired by moving pictures. Do you get that? Very likely the story is as straight as their sense of direction.

It has been a pleasure as well as a revelation to watch John Bunny at the meetings of the Screen Club. If there were any of the "bunch" who were under the impression that he was just an exceedingly clever comedian they have discovered that they had seriously underrated him. He is a ready and entertaining speaker. More than that, he has a peculiarly sharp and keen intellect and an ability for getting at the root of a matter. He is one of those natural leaders of men who will come to the top of the heap at the outset. Mr. Bunny is enthusiastic over the general proposition of the Screen Club. The new organization is indeed fortunate to have at its command his knowledge, ability, and executive capacity.

The Des Moines News rises to make a prediction. The time is coming, it says, when the moving picture apparatus will be as common in the home as the phonograph, and that new films will be supplied just as new phonographic records are supplied the modern sound-producing machine.

Why doesn't the News go the limit? Why doesn't it add that in those days the films and phonographic records will be synchronous?

The federal authorities in the City of Mexico are reported to have established free picture shows for the benefit of the poorer people who could not afford to pay their way into the shows and have enough money left to buy pulque. The Government hopes to keep them away from the liquor by taking them into the shows. This seems to be sane government. Why doesn't Madero try that scheme on the insurrectos? Let him secure animated photographs of the insurgent groups—all in general's uniforms, if necessary—and then, for the surrender of weapons, offer to exchange admission tickets to houses where these films are running. Then on both sides of the Rio Grande there will be sounder slumber.

J. M. Ridgeley and his wife, Cleo Ridgeley, who is known to picture followers through her work with the Kalem and Rex companies, who are touring, ahorseback, from Brooklyn to the Pacific Coast in the interest of the Motion Picture Story Magazine, report record houses at the theaters they have visited en route. Their method is to parade through the principal streets of the town in which they are to appear in the evening, billing the theater. They are now in Western Pennsylvania. Borough President Steers started them off, and Pathe's Weekly took a shot at them.

Bishop William Burt, addressing the Central District Conference of Methodist ministers, in New York State, referred to the tendency manifested in some quarters to introduce moving pictures in an effort to attract large evening congregations. "Let us not turn the church of God into a place of amusement," he said. "By so doing we are appealing to a sentiment opposite to the one which we should cherish. We should not promise a good time, a picnic, a jollification. Ministers are making a mistake in not appealing rather to the heroic in the men and women of to-day."

After reading the foregoing, don't you think a man would be justified in regarding an invitation by Bishop Burt to come and listen to him as an appeal to heroism?

A new use of moving pictures was referred to by a friend the other day. He told a story of a man who had invented an appliance for battleships, which he was very anxious for certain Washington officials to see. The appliance, weighing many tons, was attached to a ship in the Brooklyn yard. The boat could not be taken to Washington. The inventor was going to have taken a motion picture of his scheme in operation and then take the film to Washington and project it on a screen.

The London picture houses have dug so deeply into the receipts of the regular houses that the actors' associations are taking steps looking to the opening of theaters and music halls on Sunday.

Mechanicsville, N. Y., has gone back to first principles for a board of censorship. A couple of religious workers dropped into town and threw on a screen some pictures that a crowd of a half a thousand didn't like. Decayed vegetables formed a considerable part of the inducements offered the visitors to leave town.

Marcus Loew during the summer entertained at his fifteen theaters in New York City about 75,000 poor children. It would be impossible even to approximate the amount of happiness this one man has imparted to these thousands in one summer. It is real civic service.

The Denver tax assessors have increased the assessment of the licensed film exchange in that city from $1,200 to $112,750. The independent company turned in its schedule at $880. The assessors went it several better—$56,330.

The New York Sun in a recent editorial article admitted that the picture theater has been notably improved in the last three or four years. It takes the rather unusual position, though—and gives its reasons—that an act which on the vaudeville or melodramatic stage would be permissible should on the screen be subject to elimination by the censor. The reason given is that while in the former case the dialogue is high-pitched, ridiculous and unhuman, its moralities are beyond question; this foil, the paper says, is lacking on the screen.

The Sun admits that the task of efficient censorship is made exceedingly difficult because of the unusual nature of some of the patrons of motion pictures—boys and girls of an impressionable age and women equally subject to morbid suggestion.

There is one fact of which many lose sight in discussing the subject of censorship. That is, that the majority of those who support motion pictures are normal adults. As such they are entitled to some consideration.

New York City's Board of Education has granted the Parents' Association of Public School No. 5, of Brooklyn, permission to occupy the auditorium of that structure on the evenings of November 8 and 29 and December 20, from 8 to 9:30 o'clock, for "a moving picture show" at which a fee will be charged. The action makes a reversal of position on the part of the board, and undoubtedly will be followed by applications from the parents associations of other schools. The pictures will be educational and industrial.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

ST. LOUIS LOCAL NO. 3 ORGANIZED.

Meeting Held in Planters' Hotel, Thursday, September 19th. Wm. J. Flynn Elected President.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

ABOUT fifty owners of motion picture theaters in and about St. Louis met in the Planters' Hotel, Thursday afternoon, September 19th, to organize St. Louis Local No. 3, of the Missouri State Branch No. 9, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

George H. Wiley, of Kansas City, president of the Missouri branch, explained the nature and purposes of local and State organization. The purpose is for better co-operation among owners of moving picture shows, for protection from unwarranted interference on the part of the authorities and for the settlement of disputes by arbitration.

Meetings of all members will be held monthly. The executive committee will meet every week. By-laws were adopted under which the following officers were elected: President, William J. Flynn; vice-president, E. H. Pipe; secretary, James Tillman; treasurer, William Seevers; sergeant-at-arms, Otto Lauman.

Jacob Warner, George T. Meyer, Louis Landau, Louis Herman and Henry M. Brockstedt were named as members of the executive committee. William J. Flynn was appointed State vice-president. J. T. Fitzsimmons was made a member of the State executive committee.

Downtown offices will be opened next week, when the first general meeting will be announced. Membership in Local No. 3 is open to all owners of motion picture theaters in St. Louis and adjacent territory.

William J. Flynn, president, and J. T. Fitzsimmons, member of the State executive committee, control interests in motion picture theaters in St. Louis valued at over $350,000. William Seevers, treasurer of No. 3, is secretary-treasurer of the Grand Central Amusement Company of St. Louis, and is one of the most successful and best posted exhibitors in America.

CINCINNATI EXHIBITORS BUSY.

Great preparations have been made for a big outing at the Cincinnati Zoo by the members of the Cincinnati Exhibitors' League. A dozen committees are hard at work on the arrangements and the outing promises to be the biggest thing of the kind that has taken place in Cincinnati in some time. The Zoo has been rented for the day by the Cincinnati exhibitors and special street car service has been arranged for to carry the crowds. Members of the league and their official guests and friends will make the trip to the Zoo in motor cars. Members of the K. & C. League of Covington and Newport, Ky., will attend in large numbers.

Among the principal guests will be Congressman J. J. Cox, candidate for the governorship of Ohio, and Mayor Henry Hunt, of Cincinnati.

During the week following the outing a series of motion pictures will be taken of the city of Cincinnati and its principal interests. Many of the beautiful parks and drives of the Queen City, together with the fire and police departments, public schools and the University of Cincinnati. This will be a notable picture, for few cities can boast of more beautiful parks and scenes than Cincinnati.

Members of the various committees who are working for the success of this affair are F. L. Emmert, C. T. Beeching, W. C. Kitt, G. F. Horning, Fred Shottmiller, F. A. Botts, Charles Sternberger, A. C. Dingelstedt, J. S. Glassmeyer, Theo. Bley, H. N. Brice, M. A. Neff, J. J. Huss, Otto Ludeking and Mr. Griffith.

N. Y. LICENSE COMMISSIONER TAKES BRIDE.

Mr. James Garrett Wallace, Jr., Commissioner of the New York License Bureau, was married Tuesday, September 24, to Miss Anna Madeline Sullivan at the home of the bride, Far Rockaway, New York. The wedding was a very quiet affair, almost a secret, and was not generally known until announcements were sent out; hence New York exhibitors had no chance to throw any old shoes. The couple left at once upon a honeymoon trip to California.

CLEVELAND EXHIBITORS' PICNIC.

Cleveland Local No. 1, M. P. E. L. of America "pulled off" their second picnic of the season on September 5th at Luna Park. The weather was ideal, good and hot and some "hot stuff" was picturized by Pathe's camera man during the progress of events; in fact, the reel is about two-thirds comedy and should prove a hit no matter where it is shown. The reel starts with George Evans' "Honey Boy" minstrels leading the opening march through Luna's gateway and right here it may be said that this feature added greatly to the interest in the affair, and several good comedy stunts are interspersed throughout the reel.

The various athletic events were "took" and will serve a good purpose in demonstrating that the Stockholm Olympic committee missed a bunch of good entries when they passed up Cleveland No. 1. The reel also shows very forcibly that it is quite possible for men engaged in business where competition is "fierce" to meet in a social way and "forget it."

There are numerous reasons why the reel should be shown all over the country, and Secretary Anthony will attend to anyone promptly if they desire to show "How Moving Picture Managers Enjoy Themselves." It is a Pathe "special" from which Cleveland Local No. 1 derives a revenue, and that is why we give no further details of the day's doings in this letter. As we say in our daily advertising, "See the pictures."

BIG MEETING PROMISED IN TEXAS.

Letters are being received from many Texas exhibitors stating that they will be at the convention to be held at Dallas, Texas, on the 15th and 16th of October, the arrangement committee report that they will entertain the visiting exhibitors with that splendid Southern hospitality. Automobles have already been arranged for and also arrangements have been made to entertain the ladies and every exhibitor in Texas is requested to bring as many of his family as he can. This being State Fair week in Texas, it is confidently expected that there will be three or four hundred exhibitors present. The three film exchanges in Dallas write that no pains will be spared to make this one of the grandest State conventions ever held.

HUDSON COUNTY (N. J.) EXHIBITORS MEET.

A highly successful meeting of the Hudson County Local No. 1, M. P. E. L. of A., was held Thursday evening, September 19th, at G. A. Robinson's Colonial Theater, West Hoboken, N. J. C. F. Haring proposed five new members who were accepted. A committee of three consisting of L. F. Blumenthal, chairman, G. A. Robinson and Leo Fisk was appointed to consult with an attorney in regard to drawing up bills to be presented to the next session of the State legislature. C. F. Haring, A. Lichter and Wm. Daly were appointed to make arrangements for an entertainment and ball to be held the beginning of next year.

ALAMEDA COUNTY EXHIBITORS ORGANIZING.

President Rothchild, Secretary Cory and five other league members made up a committee who visited the exhibitors in Oakland, Berkeley, Alameda, Calif., and other Alameda County cities for the purpose of arousing the non-members and inducing them to join the league before the convention date. This visit was made on the 11th, and since then they have received the promise of eighteen of the managers to make application in time to form an Alameda County Local sometime during the convention. This will be known as Local No. 3, the others being San Francisco and Los Angeles, numbers one and two respectively.

MEETING OF KENTUCKY EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The executive committee of the Kentucky Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will meet at Louisville on October 12-15, according to an announcement by Vice-President Louis J. Dittmar. Mr. Dittmar has all arrangements in hand and will provide extensive entertainment for the executive body. The meetings will be held at the Seelbach Hotel. The Louisville Photoplay Association also will entertain the visitors.

MORE FEATURES FOR N. Y. EXHIBITORS' BALL.

Since the last announcement in these columns, Mr. A. Coleman, chairman of the Entertainment Committee of the M. P. Exhibitors' League of Greater New York, has been busy rounding up more features for the coming reception and ball of the league, to be held Thursday night, November 14, at Palm Garden, 58th Street and Lexington Avenue, New York. He is in a position to report great progress, and some of his new entries are as follows:

The Kalem Company will send Miss Alice Joyce as their honorary representative and in addition have reserved a box for officials of the company who expect to be present. The entire Licensed division will be represented at the coming reception in much stronger numbers than they were at the last ball of the New York exhibitors. They will all be represented this time.

Mr. Coleman announces as an engagement extraordinary, the New York Hippodrome Band, which will dispense the music for the dancing. He couldn't have done much more in this respect unless he had engaged Messrs. Sousa and band.

Sales of tickets by mail order from up the state and from over in Jersey have already run up close to 500. A delegation from Syracuse, under the leadership of Mr. F. B. Cornell, vice president of the New York State Exhibitors' League, will leave that city in a special car which will pick up State members along the route to New York. The ball is to be given by the New York city exhibitors, but they wish it to be understood that it is "their treat" to the State exhibitors, and that the function should be considered a State affair.

For the coming reception the entire Palm Garden will be used—that is, the upstairs dance hall as well as the one on the ground floor. It is now quite generally known that Maurice Costello and Florence Lawrence will lead the Grand March. Essanay will send their Chicago comedy company; S. Lubin with professional and business staffs will come over from Philadelphia; Senator Jos. B. Foraker, counsel for the M. P. E. L. of A., will be there, and Mr. M. A. Neff, president of the national organization will also be on hand.

There is no mistaking that this event will be the largest and most representative gathering of motion picture people ever held in New York. The object, of course, is to raise a large sum of money to defray the expenses of the national convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, which will be held in New York during July, 1913, at the Grand Central Palace, in conjunction with a great industrial exposition of the various branches of the motion picture business. Everyone should join in assisting the enterprise of the New York exhibitors and subscribe for tickets. They will be on sale at all local picture theaters from this time on, the price being $1.00, and 50 cents for additional lady.

A curious condition prevails in the film market in Germany. It appears that a number of American manufacturers have for some time past been engaged in an effort to create a monopoly there. A large number of manufacturers have now actually united in an organization, which attempts to control and monopolize the market in the entire country. The attorney of the corporation has given the rules adopted by the combine to the press. They provide for a system of licensing the exhibitors who are required to subscribe to such conditions as the combination sees fit to impose. A scale of prices is set forth in great detail.

Unique Vitagraph Picture Under Way—Rumor Regarding Selig Co.—More Big Bisons.

"THE HAT" will probably be the title under which the almost unique photoplay now being produced by Rollin S. Sturgeon, director of the Western Vitagraph Co., will be released in the near future. It is to be a strong drama full of human interest and occupying the full 1,000 feet. The unusual feature about it is that the cast consists of only one character, an anemic, half-starved little working girl who is obsessed with the desire to own an expensive hat which she has seen in the show window of a millinery establishment. The story will show what sacrifices she makes before she eventually obtains the coveted possession, only to die of starvation with it clasped in her arms.

Other characters hover in the background during the play and occasionally advance to positions of secondary importance, but Mr. Sturgeon is so managing it that the attention of the audience will be concentrated on the single pitifully pathetic figure. There has been no definite announcement about the woman who has been given the principal role, but inasmuch as Miss Anne Schaefer, the company's leading woman, is in the East on a vacation, I surmise that Miss Mary Charleson is the person, particularly since her personality is well adapted to the part. The writer of the photoplay is William E. Wing, of this city, who had been turning out a considerable proportion of the scripts which the Western Vitagraph Company has produced in the last year.

Miss Charleson, who is now doing leads for Mr. Sturgeon, created such a sensation when she appeared on Broadway in Los Angeles a few days ago wearing the first genuine pannier skirt which has been seen in this vicinity that the daily newspapers commented on the occurrence. Nor was it a press agent scheme. Miss Charleson was on her way to an afternoon social affair and was much put out at the commotion she caused.

Selig Players Going Abroad?

Undoubtedly there is some big project back of the discovery that James Magee, for the last two years manager of the Edendale plant of the Selig Polyscope Company, is preparing to go abroad with a company of Selig players. The announcement is a bit premature apparently, for, while the truth of the report is admitted at the Edendale studio, no further information is to be obtained at this time.

However, Thomas Nash arrived from Chicago September 18, in response to a telegram from Mr. Selig and at once assumed full charge of the entire plant relieving Mr. Magee and leaving him free to make preparations for his departure. Where the company is going, except that it is going outside the United States, is not announced.

Hobart Bosworth's company has returned from Bear Valley, where it spent most of the summer, but Director Bosworth for some reason remained behind and will not return for a couple of weeks. With the members of the company came six full reels of negatives containing strong stories and immense backgrounds. Scenically there are few places in the West that offer better or more varied opportunities for motion pictures than Bear Valley.

Frank Selig, "baby" brother of William N. Selig, owner of the company, nearly lost his life on the Bear Valley expedition. He was lost in the hills four days without food and with very little water and was exposed to frosty nights without blankets. He finally found his way to Redlands, where he was able to take a train for Los Angeles.

More Big "Bison-101" Pictures.

The making of big virile two-reel western subjects of the kind that made the company's reputation before the organization of the Universal combine and the controversies which followed has been resumed by the "Bison-101" Ranch Company (New York Motion Picture Co.). Director Ince, who built up the Bison releases to their present popularity, is again at work on two-reel subjects at Santa Monica canyon and has turned out five—ten reels in all—since the middle of August.

The old Bison plant at Edendale has now been turned over to the Keystone company, which comprises among others Fred Mace and Mabel Normand, with Mack Sennett as director, and split reel comedies are being turned out at a merry rate. The company is working much faster than its schedule of releases so as to pile up a surplus against possible accidents or other interruptions. Last week Sennett completed a 500-foot comedy in a single day and claims a record on the feat. The Keystone company is a distinct organization, having no official connection with any other motion picture company, although t is owned by men who also own the New York Motion Picture Company as well as other motion picture concerns.

Director Ford, formerly with the New York Motion Picture Co., is now making the dramatic pictures under the Broncho brand. His company is at Santa Monica canyon, close to the camp of Director Ince and the Bison players.

By the way, the Keystone company will have a weekly dramatic release on the market soon after October 1 according to present plans. Preparations are now well under way for this new undertaking.

It has been definitely decided to revive the famous comedy characters, the two sleuths, created by Sennett and Mace in the old days when they were with the Biograph company. Their further adventures will appear under the Keystone brand.

Horne Features "The Triangle."

There was one curious coincidence about the program which the General Film Co. furnished Horne's theater in the downtown section of Los Angeles this week, and W. T. Horne, the proprietor, pointed it out for the benefit of his patrons, thereb creating a great deal of amusement for the general public. The novel advertisements concerning his programs which appear twice each week on the big bulletin boards in front of the theater are attracting more and more attention each week. This week the boards contained the following announcement:

"Blind Love" (Biograph)—"Again we have the eternal triangle. Let's see how they dish it up."

"Betty and the Roses" (Lubin)—"Another phase of the triangle, showing how it may be used as a comedy."

"Love's Progress" (Pathe European)—"And lastly, we are still at work on that triangle. What's the use. It will enter into every blamed thing."

The infantile paralysis epidemic has disappeared from Los Angeles, the health authorities have lifted the quarantine, the motion picture theaters are again entertaining children, business has picked up about twenty-five per cent, the Los Angeles Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association, which was organized as one of the developments in the fight against the quarantine, is prospering, and everything is now peaceful again in Los Angeles—and quiet.

"TWO WOMEN" (Powers).

The Powers Company, in its forthcoming release "Two Women," October 4th, gives us one of the sharp contrasts of this age, taking two women, one from the plethoric rich, one from the over-burdened poor, and bringing them together in a conflict of will.

You really couldn't have expected one like Fritzi to do other than she did. Pampered by society and her wealthy husband, the idol of the idle set, she shirked all responsibilities of the workaday world and revelled in the torpor of the social whirl. When the society cad presumed upon her indolence and offered the attention which her husband denied her, she accepted with the nonchalance so typical of her life. Even when the domestics left her household she was but little concerned as to who succeeded in the routine of the work. When the laundry maid left she delegated her nurse to find another.

In contradistinction to the splendor of Fritzi's surroundings was the piteous and poverty stricken home of Mrs. O'Hara. Though she made her living by going out washing and her earnings were small indeed, she never lost faith in her set purpose to save enough to pay for an operation which would permit her baby to see the light of day. The child, born blind, was the only source of consolation and joy to the poor over-worked, over-tired woman. 'Twas purely a coincidence that the nurse should have found Mrs. O'Hara willing to do the wash for Fritzi's household, and probably a trick of fate that the washer should discover in Fritzi's shirtwaist a note telling of the clandestine meetings of Fritzi and her lover, but it all happened that way.

The desperation of her position was the sole cause for Mrs. O'Hara mastering her better instincts and when she insisted upon Fritzi making up the deficiency for the operation on her baby upon threat of exposure Fritzi readily yielded rather than suffer for her indiscretion.

By a subterfuge in which she played upon her husband's sympathies she secured the necessary sum. And so the baby was successfully operated upon and the intrigue was never mentioned.

SPOOR VISITS NILES STUDIO.

Mr. George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, is now in Niles, Cal., the home of Essanay's Western Company. Business is the object of Mr. Spoor's trip, and he will return within the week.

TIPS ON IMPROVISING.

IN addition to the relative keys, there are many others which permit direct modulation without any intervening (or connecting) chords to prepare the ear for the change. You may proceed directly to any key whose tonic chord contains a note which is also contained in the tonic chord of the key in which you are playing. Using the key of C for illustration, we notice that it is built as follows: C (the fundamental note), E (the 3rd) and G (the 5th—always ought upward in reckoning intervals). The first note (C) is also found in the two relative keys A minor and the sub-dominant chord. ("F.")

C	a
(A minor.)	(sub-dominant.)

To make it more prominent I shall write the note under discussion in capital letters.

This note may be also found in the chords of C minor, F minor and A flat major:

g	C	e flat
e flat	a flat	C
C	f	a flat
(C minor.)	(F minor.)	(Ab major.)

A direct change may be made to any of these keys.

The next note in the chord of C is E. This note is also found in the chords of A minor, A major, E minor and E major:

c	c sharp	g	g sharp
a	a	E	E

and you may proceed directly from the key of C to any of these.

The last note in the chord of C is "G." This note may also be found in the chords of E minor, Eb major, G minor and G major.

b	b flat	d	d
G	G	b flat	b
e	e flat	G	G
(E minor.)	(Eb major.)	(G minor.)	(G major.)

You may proceed from the key of C directly to any of the above keys without any connecting chords.

There are other chords containing one or more of these notes, C, E and G, and these will be spoken of at another time. So far we have found that we can modulate directly into thirteen different keys from the key of C by reason of each of the thirteen having a note which is also found in the chord of "C"; the key you are supposed to be playing in. There really does not seem to be much reason to play a whole pictu.e in the same key when one can change so easily into another, now does there? Of course, you don't necessarily have to begin in the key of C. The rules given above hold good in modulating from any key; you can change directly into any key whose tonic chord contains a note which is also found in the tonic chord of the key in which you are playing.

As it will be necessary to speak frequently of "intervals," let it be understood that they are always reckoned upwards from the note on which the chord is built. The scale of "C," for example, is lettered and numbered as follows:

C	D	E	F	G	A	B	C
1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8

and the tonic chord of C (being built on the note "C," which note is also called the fundamental or bass) is reckoned like this: "C is one; E, being the third note above, is the 3rd, and G, being the fifth note above C is the 5th. Always count both ends thus: one, two, three, four, five.

A chord may be built upon any note of the scale:

g	a	b	c	d	e	f	g
e	f	g	a	b	c	d	e

and the note on which the chord is built is called the fundamental (or bass) of the chord. The chords given above can appear in two other forms:

e	f	g	a	b	c	d	e
C	D	E	F	G	A	B	C

and:

C	D	E	F	G	A	B	C

these are called inversions and do not alter the name of the chord. The fundamental note (which is here given in capital letters) is always the same and the intervals of each chord are reckoned in the same way; each chord contains a fundamental (the first or bass note) a third and a fifth.

The dominant chord of any key is built on the fifth note above the tonic (or key note).Still taking the key of C as an illustration, we find that the fifth note above C is "G." It is upon this note the dominant chord is built and we proceed as follows: G (the fundamental) is "one"; B is a third above and D a fifth. This forms a perfect triad. Another note, however, can be added to the dominant chord—a seventh above "G."

G

This chord is called the dominant seventh and plays an important part in modulation.

TWO MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

At the National Convention of Exhibitors, held recently in Chicago, there were two exhibits which were worthy of special mention. One was the magnificent "Foto-Player," the other was J. C. Deagan's "Marvelous Vitaphone." Both are in a class by themselves. The first mentioned—"The Foto-Player," is a wonderful invention and consists of a piano and organ combined in one instrument. The performer can play either piano or organ separately, or both together. It can also be used as a mechanical instrument, no special skill as a performer being required of the manipulator, and here is where the genius of the inventor is displayed. Perforated rolls such as are used on an ordinary "Player Piano" are inserted, there being arrangements made for two rolls to be placed in the instrument at the same time. The performer can begin at any part of the roll he desires and stop at any place he wishes. He can change instantly from one roll to another. They had the overture from "William Tell" when I heard the instrument and switched to the famous storm scene in that number; then without a perceptible break the music was changed to "Hearts and Flowers." While this was playing the demonstrator inserted another roll—a galop, if I remember rightly, which was supposed to describe a "fire scene." This was accompanied by various sound effects (of which the "Foto-Player" contains a large assortment all within easy reach of the hand.) The galop was followed by an organ number, the roll for which had just been placed. Both hands are free to place and remove the rolls as well as to select them from a convenient rack placed above. The novelty of the "Foto-Player" lies in the double roll adjustment which permits you to change from one to another instantly, change one roll while playing another and, most important to my way of thinking, the ability to start from any part of the roll. Many selections on these perforated rolls contain one little bit which may be adapted to some particular scene. You don't have to play through the whole piece to get it; just mark the spot you want to use and wind the roll up to your mark while the other roll is playing—it takes but a few seconds. The demonstrator assures me that any one can play it. Anybody can certainly "get by" with it; in the hands of a skillful musician it should be able to do wonders—and I believe any purchaser would be wise to depend on a musician rather than "anybody" if he wants to get the results which the instrument is really capable of.

The "Marvelous Vitaphone" is another invention of the irrepressible J. C. Deagan, who has given us the musical bells and the cathedral chimes. I am sorry I did not get a description of this instrument from "J. C.," so I could present it in an easily understood manner. Not being an expert I can only describe it in general terms. It is played from a keyboard the same as the electric bells (by the same composer), the double hammers striking upon a nickel steel bar instead of the regulation shaped bell. It is fitted with a "master vibrator," which is placed on the keyboard instead of on the bells, thus being convenient of access at any time. The tone of this instrument is beautiful and must be heard to be appreciated. It can't be described. The Vitaphone is a brand new idea. The first one was placed on exhibition at the Western office of the Moving Picture World in Chicago and was intended to be shown at the Convention, but the Orpheum Theater of this city grabbed it right off the bat and Mr. Deagan was forced to throw another one together in double quick order to "exhibit to the exhibitors." This was run by dry batteries, though they can be connected to the house current—he told me how, but I won't attempt to repeat it. Anyway, he will be glad to tell you how it is done and anything else you want to know. He told me so himself. Both of these instruments—"The Photo-Player" and "The Vitaphone" are advertised in these pages and addresses can be found therein.

"THE CALL OF THE BLOOD" (Majestic).

The strong hold that the roving life of the gypsy fastens upon those of that race is used as the theme of this Majestic picture. The events as told in the story are not only probable, but are entirely believable. It is illustrative of the grip that force of habit has upon human inclination among the various peoples of the earth. As the Eskimo clings to his Arctic mode of life, or as the Indian or the Mongolian live according to the customs of their race and, no matter how civilized, mutter their native prayers when they die, so does the gypsy, according to all accounts, retain always in his blood the wanderlust that is characteristic of his race.

"The Call of the Blood" as a picture brings out a pathetic aspect of such ties of blood when, segregated from its own, it mingles with another strain. The heart of the gypsy girl was wooed and won away from her nomadic life by a handsome young civil engineer who was working on a railroad close to where the gypsies made their camp. They were married and the gypsy girl went with her civilized husband to live the life of a lady in a lovely home that he provided for her. The gypsy habits and mode of life she discarded, and she did her best to wear the fine clothes and take on the manner of society. A little boy was born to this oddly assorted pair and, for a couple of years, everything pointed to domestic happiness for them.

Scene from "The Call of the Blood" (Majestic).

But a change came one day when a band of gypsies made their camp where it could be seen through the windows of the gypsy girl's pretty home. The sight of these people, as she viewed them through the parlor windows, brought back to her the memories of her childhood. They had the same effect upon her as they would have upon almost anybody who might be strongly reminded of happy days gone by. In fondness she brought forth her long discarded gypsy garments and fondled them, for which she was gently rebuked by her husband, who had misgivings on account of the presence of the gypsy band. Yielding to impulse the unhappy young wife went to the gypsy camp, attired in the evening gown she had been wearing, just to spend a happy hour among the people of her tribe. She sat with them in the circle around the boiling kettle and partook with them of their coarse fare, which was eaten without knives or forks. The fascination for such a life very quickly overwhelmed her judgment and she went away with them, leaving her husband and little boy.

A few years later the gypsy band came back to the place. With a longing in her heart, the gypsy girl stole by night to her husband's home and summoned courage enough to beg at the doorway. A strange maid, not recognizing her, told her to go away and not to play her tambourine, because a little boy within was very sick. The gypsy divined at once that her own child was dying. She stole around the porch and got a glimpse through the window of the lad's room and there she saw him in his feverish sleep. She hastened back to the gypsy camp and there began to brew in the kettle a concoction of herbs into some gypsy remedy. With the medicine she hastened back to her former home and watched again through the window. As the night wore on her husband and doctor withdrew and the little lad and his nurse fell asleep. The gypsy mother then entered the room and poured out her mother's love upon the suffering child. She threw the doctor's medicine out of the window and gave the child a dose of her own. All night she watched by the window, and when morning came the little lad awoke, feeling much better. The doctor coming pronounced the little fellow out of danger and the gypsy mother went back to the camp with gladness in her heart.

The ending of the picture is especially artistic. With the coming of morning the gypsy camp moved away. Slowly the procession of gaudy wagons passed by. Straggling sadly in the rear came the gypsy mother, casting fond, irresolute glances backward, until the sight of the last wagon disappearing beckoned her back to her tribe. It was the call of the blood; stronger than love of home, husband or child.

The part of the gypsy girl is exceptionally well rendered by Miss Anna Lehr, while the part of the husband is played by Mr. Herbert Prior, well known for his fine impersonations in romantic leads.

FILM FAVORITE STOCK STAR, "BY PERMISSION."

Miss Carey L. Hastings, who plays character leads for Thanhouser Company, received a call from the Prospect Theater in New York City to play the star role in "Mother," which their stock company was to produce for a short run. The fact of her film work didn't seem to matter with the theater management, as picture engagements have "mattered" with players in the past, and the film company on the other hand courteously agreed to release Miss Hastings for the term of the theatrical engagement. Which is just some more proof that the theatrical interests and the picture interests have come to the realization that theirs is a common cause, in which foolish bans and prohibitions have been wiped off the slate.

Miss Carey L. Hastings.

Foreign Trade Notes

A TEMPORARY injunction was granted recently to the Natural Color Kinematograph Company, Ltd., against two parties, Speer & Rodgers. The injunction is to restrain the defendants from manufacturing, selling or offering for sale, or hire, or supplying, or using in England natural color Kinematograph film manufactured according to or in the manner described in the specifications of the plaintiff's letters patent, or in a manner only colorably differing therefrom and generally from infringing the plaintiff's letters patent. The injunction is to continue in force until the trial of an action now pending between the plaintiffs and the defendants. The injunction was granted in the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice only after a long and exhaustive argument between counsel of the parties. The defendants claimed that under the rule of law applicable in such cases no injunction could be obtained unless the patent was at least six years old or had been established in a prior action. Great stress was laid by counsel for the defendants on the fact that the original Friese-Greene patents upon which the plaintiffs had seemed to rely at least in part had lapsed. The revolving shutter, counsel for defendant said, was originally invented by Friese-Greene. This revolving shutter was one of the things which the plaintiffs claim to have invented. They put this forward as a master patent covering all animated photography in colors. Counsel for the defendant described the Kinemacolor method of photographing alternately through red and green screens, and said that in Friese-Greene's patent of 1898 he used the bisected disc. In his 1905 patent he had a prism behind his lens and split up the rays in two different pencils of color, projecting them through two screens, one red and one green. Thus he obtained two pictures side by side on the film, getting the same results apparently as the plaintiffs did. Mr. Underhay urged that there was such short use of the patent that the plaintiffs could not obtain an injunction. In regard to the question of infringement the plaintiffs merely said the defendants must have used their process to obtain the results they did. That was not satisfactory evidence to put before the Court.

The order for a temporary injunction was finally granted in the terms prayed for by the plaintiffs.

The committee of editors appointed by the German society for fighting prejudice against the motion pictures has held an important session in the city of Berlin. It was decided to engage a number of well known speakers and authors who will take part in this campaign of education. Arrangements have been made to hold meetings and demonstrations in sixteen large cities. The public will be invited to attend these meetings and listen to the arguments in favor of the motion picture. It will be remembered that a number of dramatic leagues and various organized groups of theatrical managers had started a crusade against the motion picture. The committee of editors was organized to repel these attacks and place their side of the question before the public. The committee had charged one of the editors, Mr. Perlmann, of Duesseldorf, to prepare a campaign text book. The text book is now finished and copies of it have been sent to all the daily papers in the empire as well as to representative men in all walks of life. The next step will be the distribution of folders and pamphlets among audiences of moving picture theaters. The committee will go into a lively controversy with the enemies of the moving picture and if necessary will hire space in the daily press to get their side of the question before the public.

From reports in the Viennese moving picture journals it would appear that Austria, which up to now has been lagging in the tail-end of the procession, will be heard from as a manufacturing country in 1913. An old established producing concern, which has in the past two years done but little, has recently increased its capital by seventy-five thousand dollars and has secured the services of an eminently capable man as director. In addition to this three other new manufacturers have come out with announcements of coming releases of merit. These manufacturers intend for the present to devote themselves entirely to their own domestic market.

Exhibitors in England seem to be even more uncertain about their rights to open on Sunday than we are on this side of the water. We quote the following from a recent issue of the "Bioscope:"

> We again return to the question of the Sunday opening of picture theaters, which, by the way, is rapidly developing into a demand for either the complete abolition of all forms of entertainment on the Sabbath, or that all shall be allowed to open. What with the arguments for and against—the dragging in of the religious and labor side of the question, and the fact that the daily press is now taking a hand in the game—one grows heartily tired of the whole matter, and inclined to cry, "A plague upon you all!"
> It is perfectly obvious that there exists, among the majority of people, a desire for some kind of entertainment on Sundays, and the picture theaters are in a position to meet that demand in a much more satisfactory manner than any other form of amusement. This is no mere idle statement; it is backed by solid fact. The amount of labor necessitated by the Sunday opening of picture theaters cannot be compared to the army of employees which would have to be engaged if variety and "legitimate" theaters were open. And this completely answers the argument that the latter places of amusement have the right to claim the same "privilege" regarding Sunday opening as picture theaters.
> As the present situation remains, it is interesting to note the divergence of opinion among those who have been regarded as the opponents of Sunday opening. The theatrical managers are by no means united; some are against, while one or two "see no harm in it." Turning to the music-hall side, Mr. Stoll has, of course, already stated his views, but other well-known directors have not been so explicit, evidently preferring to "wait and see." The Variety Artists' Federation is, we believe, strongly opposed to Sunday opening as applied to variety theaters; but opposition would not be directed against the picture theaters.
> The sequel has yet to come, and it would not be wise to attempt a forecast. The agitation has not, however, been sought by the Trade, and we trust that the broader view of the question will at length prevail.

In Italy a league has been formed for the avowed purpose of fighting the cinematographic industry. The league is composed of "dramatic artists" and a general meeting of the league is soon to be held to discuss the best methods of "combating the pernicious influence of the films." It is pleasing to note that these enemies of the motion pictures have been answered by a well known Italian artist, Signor M. Cantinelli, who takes up the cudgels for the cinematograph in the pages of an important magazine "L'Argante," published in Milano. He ridicules the idea that the cinematograph may dull the artistic instincts of the people. He tells his fellow artists that they will follow the trend of modern civilization and consult their own personal interests by being the friends rather than enemies of the motion picture.

NEW THEATER FOR PLANT CITY, FLA.

Mr. E. M. Tucker, manager Wonderland Theater, Plant City, Fla., advises us that not later than November 1st, he will open a new theater in that city to seat from 600 to 700, and to be used for moving pictures and as an opera house. He will spend $10,000 on the equipment of the house.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Improving Raffles.

THE Raffles stunt: the identification of a man more or less closely described, is a whiskered idea, but at this moment there is a man going around town offering hats to those who can place him and he has been responsible for a couple of mobs that have taxed the police. Mr. S. A. Arnold, of the Lyric Theater, Mena, Arkansas, who seems to be outgrowing the small town, has given a new twist to the old idea. It's the same old Raffles, but if you want to win the reward you must hold a coupon from the Lyric of the day before. Here is Mr. Arnold's letter:

> For the benefit of the Exhibitors' Advertising Department I present herewith an advertising stunt that I worked that certainly increased my receipts while it was running.
> The scheme is an old one worked in a new way no other than "Raffles." I first found a good local man that I thought no one would suspect then advertised that "Raffles is coming to the Lyric," after using that line in the dailies for three days, with a write-up in the paper I announced that "Raffles" would visit the Lyric that night and try to get away without being caught, and that the following day he would announce through the paper where he had been, who he had seen and talked to. To capture him it was necessary that he be addressed in these words: "I recognize you as the Lyric Raffles, give me ten dollars," and at the same time show by a coupon that you had attended the Lyric the night before. Unless he was addressed in those words and coupon shown, he would not make himself known but would deny his identity.
> Of course in the papers I gave a very meagre description of him and how he would be dressed but added that he would try to fool them, also challenged the police force to show their shrewdness, in fact, bragged a little bit about going to try and get Chief of Police Star.
> You will be surprised at the number that will go into this with a view of capturing him. It remained for a young lady to win the reward and it ran about ten days before he was caught.
> I am sorry that I haven't available some of the newspaper clippings. My next scheme will be "The Lyric Girls." I intend working it something on the order of "Raffles," only that I will select three young ladies from town and have them to visit the different homes. Same conditions will govern this as Raffles. They must have coupon from the night before. I expect to have them go into most of the homes in town and the next day will tell who they visited, what was said, etc. After I get my printing I will send you copies of it.

If You Want to Try.

In a small town it is essential that the man be some resident that he may not be recognized because he is a stranger, but in the cities a couple of years ago there was a Raffles who worked the game as a flat swindle. He never went out until he intended to be caught and it was planned to have someone in the scheme catch him. Meantime reporters went through the crowds where it was announced that he would appear and caught up bits of chat to be repeated in the morning paper as a part of what Raffles said he had overheard. This fake scheme is not a good one. It is better to keep the reward to a sum where you can afford to pay it and let it become known that someone actually received the prize. You'll more than get it back on the extra business you will do and if you pick out a clever dodger the scheme can be kept up for a week or two.

We hope that Mr. Arnold will not forget to send in the printing as a guide to others, for in the small town or community there is a chance even now to work up the town to fever heat.

Some Other Schemes.

Some years ago the English papers worked a slightly different scheme. They ran a serial story of buried treasure and described certain localities where the treasure-seekers dug. In these localities brass tokens were deposited, each for a prize, generally about five dollars. In the serials the story took the seekers all over England that each section of the country might have a chance.

Other papers simply sent men to deposit tokens in unlikely places that were more or less perfectly described. A token might be found, for example, under a certain beam in a pier; under a certain window of a particular house; under a park bench; in a street car, etc.

The planting schemes had to be stopped because wholly unlikely places were dug up, to the despair of the owners, and men on fast motorcycles hung around the offices for advance copies and raced for the localities mentioned.

These tokens might be located about town and their positions hinted at on the screen by means of a slide at the close of the performance. One token might be placed in a certain street car, but the first and last numbers of the car being given; another might be placed on the gate post of a certain house in a certain block, another on some window sill of a schoolhouse or public building. Be careful to place the markers where the search for them will not cause damage to be done to private or public property or you will be liable for damages.

Properly worked up you can make a sensation in the town. The prizes can be in money or admissions, but the money prize is to be preferred. Take as few persons as possible into your confidence that there may be no leakage. You cannot afford to get your name connected with a fake scheme.

Side Talk.

Leon Brick, who manages the Garden Theater, Toronto, and manages it very well indeed, sends some copy for slide material and writes:

> We enclose "copy" of a few slides, the ideas of which originated in this office. We see to it that the screen does a lot of talking for us and not a week goes by but what several new slides are shown. We never use the same material more than a week; many of the slides run in series of 2 or 3's and some even 4. It is possible that some future time, when your "stuff" may run short, you would think the enclosed worthy of publication.

One or two of the slides might be regarded as a bit strong, but most are decidedly clever and announcements can be made a feature of the house if enough care is used in their preparation. By series of two or more Mr. Brick means that the message is carried along from slide to slide. Take this set about hats, for example. The first runs:

> Mme. Nevernue, the famous clairvoyant, maintains that good luck comes to the lady who removes her hat in the theater.

This will start a laugh. It will also start some of the hats, but after a moment comes the second slide to explain:

> Quite recently we noticed a certain young lady enter this theater, who immediately removed her hat, even before taking her seat.

This rouses interest but does not have much effect upon the remaining hat pins, but immediately there comes a third to say:

Would You Believe It?

> Three days later that same young lady was married.

There is a laugh and the rest of the hats are in their owners' laps and mere man is happy.

Here are some others in series:

> (1) Prof. Fakur, The Great Beauty Specialist says:—
> (2) If ladies would only get the habit of removing their hats while indoors they would soon look ten years younger.

A little too strong is this lay of the peanut:—

> (1) That the peanut has always been regarded as an extremely dainty morsel of food no one will deny, but—
> (2) The cracking of the shells is very annoying to some persons and when thrown on the floor of this theater there comes a vigorous kick from the charwoman so—
> (3) As we do not carry a restaurant license, we suggest that the nightly gastronomic exhibition with the toothsome nut be discontinued.

We think that something along these lines would have been better:

> (1) We like peanuts but we don't eat them—
> (2) In the theater because the noise of cracking shells annoys others.

The first slide, admitting the common failing, gets manager and patron on one level and the suggestion in the second slide comes with better grace from a self-confessed slave to the edible.

Here's a Good Scheme.

Instead of the conventional good-night slide the Garden uses one that runs:

> Thus ends our 231st Exhibition.
> Happy Dreams.
> May you sleep in peace.

With a changed wording for the matinees this slide could be made a permanency and with the numbers well up in three figures it helps to create a suggestion of permanency that will impress the patron.

To catch the boor who sits sideways in his seat and drapes his feet all over the aisle, this set makes special appeal:

> (1) Gentlemen occupying end seats will please see to it that their feet do not extend out into the aisle—
> (2) Suppose that a lady were to trip and turn a somersault?
> (3) It would indeed be embarrasing, to say nothing of possible injury.

The Garden also makes free use of its screen for program purposes, announcing special musical numbers, the next subject and similar matters of interest. The use of slides is a matter too often neglected. Why not take it up if you do not already employ this most useful adjunct?

Uses Music.

The Garden also goes in strong for music and employs an orchestra to good purpose. Recently there was a change in leaders and the new man was introduced to the audience through a special program, twelve men being put into the orchestra for that performance. The music shares the program space with the reels. Music pays wherever it is properly handled, but it's well to bear in mind the fact that three good players are worth more to you than six poor ones.

Coming Edisons.

Among the early releases in October with the circle E is another contribution to the tuberculosis crusade in the shape of A Curable Disease, released October 7th. Parts of the picture were made in the Union Printers' Home, Denver. The Charge of the Light Brigade, in which the battle scenes are participated in by some 750 U. S. Regulars is dated for the eleventh and a loan shark story is found on the fifth in The Usurer's Grip. There are enough of these in the Licensed list to make a full program and it might be interesting to offer a crusade program as a novelty. It might not draw heavily, but the after talk would be worth while. The Nankeville Uncle Mun series has gotten into photoplay, the first being shown on the ninth and Cashmere is an unusually good scenic dated for the fourth.

A Poet's Excuse.

Hay and Nichols, of Fairmount, Minn., have compromised on Haynic as a title for their theater. They send us some poetry, which we print, and this apologetic explanation:

> We submit some samples of the style of advertising which we are using in our daily paper. It may not rank high from the standpoint of poetry, but it has one great virtue; it is read.
> We got the idea of rhyming our advertising when our competitor took the Rathbone lines relative to peaches and lemons from your issue of August 31st and ran them in the local paper. We thought if rhyming was a good stunt we would try it, and the first of the enclosed was our maiden effort. We get top of column, first column local page for this stuff, running it under the caption, "Haynic Jingles, with apologies to the real poets," and underneath we use from seven to ten inches of single column display.
> We have only been in the business a month, and have used this form of advertising a little over a week, and it certainly is letting people know that we are here.

Speaking of peaches that come and go,
As they relate to a picture show,
You know 'tis true; you have seen them here;
And of your verdict we have no fear.
We show them just six nights each week,
And "peachier" pictures you need not seek.
Of course they are "peaches," every one;
Some are serious, but all good fun.
So "peaches" come and "peaches" go
At the Haynic Daylight Weekday Show,
Where the best pictures money can buy,
Pictures that please and satisfy,
Are shown each night by the lighted way,
With special Saturday matinee.

If we should sit all day and write
Up jingles for our show to-night,
We couldn't start to tell the half
Of thrilling feature, hearty laugh,
That will be yours if you but go
To see this dandy all-star show.
The Kalem film, "The Drummer Girl
Of Vicksburg," surely is a pearl.
"Vultures and Doves," a Vitagraph.
Shows how you always get the gaff
When you deal with the "get-rich-quick";
A timely warning that will stick.
"Cupid's Quartette," an Essanay;
You know the kind, and you will say
For comedy like this a dime
You'd gladly pay at any time.
We give the best show possible,
We always have and always will,
But it affords us great delight
To offer shows like ours to-night.

Not Good but Good.

We'll agree with the poets that it is not very good poetry, but it is good advertising. Anything is good advertising that is out of the ordinary and will attract attention and this should attract attention. Making a regular feature of the poem in a fixed position in the paper gets the people turning to the page whether they are interested in the pictures or not. There is a human tendency to see if they can keep it up and with the interest in the poems there is gradually aroused an interest in the pictures. If you can give any little oddity or kink in the advertising and do it regularly it will get the people looking for your stuff.

In passing this serves to illustrate what this department is intended to be. A manager in Exeter, N. H., writes a jingling advertisement that is taken up by another manager in Minnesota and this, in turn, gives another the idea for some advertising that is infinitely to be preferred, as a business getter to the straight announcement.

Don't be one of those who take all and give nothing. Send in your ideas for the good of the craft and pay back your debt to your fellow managers. They've helped you. Help them.

A Model Advertisement.

We reproduce in cut an advertisement that comes from Wilmington, Delaware. It's pretty much just what a general advertisement of this sort should be in the matter of copy, make-up and display. There are four lines of heavy type, all in upper and lower case instead of all capitals, and a ten-point argument lightly boxed with one-point rule. It would not have the pull for a daily advertisement, but for a special it would not be easy to improve this. The manager, Nicholas Jones, writes:

> I am using considerable newspaper advertising these days and have been wondering whether my copy has been correctly written and if, according to your view of it, it is of any great account.
> I enclose a clipping of an advertisement I ran in the Labor Day edition of a local paper. This seemed to me to be good copy, good type work, etc., and presented a nice appearance. I, personally think it is a good general advertisement. What do you think of it? I would greatly appreciate your criticism. Don't feel that you should be hurting my feelings if you told me it was not up to the mark.
> In the Sunday morning paper here, I run a regular advertisement on the amusement page. I announce the show for Monday and Tuesday therein. The space I take runs from five inches, single column to 6 or 7 inches, double column. In some issues I have had a short synopsis of each picture underneath the name of the play—say fifteen or twenty words. I think this is the best way of working the advertising. What do you think of it and would you suggest a different way?
> I am having as my patrons, some of the class of the town. It is no common occurrence to see a number of autos in front of the Savoy. We try to give our patrons an A-1 show and think that is our best advertisement; but of course, it is necessary to let the public know we are on the face of the map. That's where the other advertising comes in.
> Would appreciate your criticism of enclosed clipping for I take great interest in your department.

Tell Them About It.

A special advertisement should make a general appeal, since it is supposed that the special issue is preserved and lasts longer than the daily edition, but for daily work we like the advertisement that gives a brief hint of the nature of the subject as well as the title and, when possible, the names of some of the leading players. On the Licensed side the Edison, Vitagraph and Kalem Companies issue booklets and the Selig Company gives the program on the bulletin sheets, a scheme we think the Lubin Company might profitably follow on their bulletins. Essanay and Pathe do not issue this data, nor does Melies but the Essanay Company is very courteous about giving out names, as is Lubin, and we think that the others would give the desired information if asked. Personality counts more than the play in many releases.

We would like to see some of Mr. Jones' regular advertising since this special is so good. This is the cut:

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Bison Wants the Best.

THE Bison-101- and that means the Broncho and the Keystone — wants the best work of the big writers, and announces a willingness to pay a proper price for this product. This is not one of the periodical announcements of a press agent, but a statement of fact backed up by letters. They have been getting a fair grade of photoplay script, but now they want the best and announce a willingness to make it worth the while of the star writers to send their scripts to 1707 Allesandro Street, Los Angeles. Just before he left New York Richard V. Spencer received word of the welcome change and asked that announcement be made.

It will be useless for the novice to expect to qualify for the work. All scripts will be carefully considered, but unless the story has something more than the commonplace plot, it will be useless to submit it to Bison. They want really big one, two and three-reel Western features, and short, snappy comedies told in comedy action.

Mr. Spencer, who has been enjoying a semi-vacation in the East for the past few weeks, left the seventeenth for home by way of Philadelphia, Washington and elsewhere, and expects to arrive in Los Angeles about the fifteenth of October. During his stay here he met the play writers at the big dinner, made notes on the screen club and learned to eat spaghetti in true Italian style. He made many friends during his short stay and we hope he happens to be around here for the December dinner.

Prepay in Full to Eclair.

The Eclair Company has joined the list of those grown tired of spending a couple of dollars a week for underpaid postage on scripts. If you want your script to stay at Eclair pay the postage in full. Most of the companies now refuse to accept underpaid scripts and all of them will do so in the course of time.

For Editors.

We append a letter received from Hal Reid of the Universal Photoplay department. He writes:

> This will notify you that Miss I. I. Runez, Feltz Mills, Jefferson Co., New York, sent to the Universal Film Co., a scenario entitled "The Way She Took," which was taken bodily from the Red Book for July.
> This is to notify all other manufacturers.

We believe that there are other instances of scripts offered by other persons based on copyrighted material. It would check the practice if the names of these persons were published.

The Next Dinner.

We have had brief chats with two of the three members of the committee on the next photoplay dinner and hope to see the third shortly. The two are agreed that the first week in December will be about right. If you have any suggestions to offer send them in now before the committee gets to work in earnest. There were forty actual photoplaywriters at the last dinner. We should be able to muster a hundred at the next, for the function will be held in town and it will not be a stag affair. Let's hear from you.

Selling Tricks.

A correspondent writes that there must be some knack in selling to a certain company as he has sent them eighteen scripts without having made a sale.

The company he mentions largely prepares its own scripts or takes the work of a few writers known to the editors, but they do accept outside work and the "knack" consists wholly in finding out just what they want. It is not enough that you have a story to sell. You must have the sort of story that the company wants to buy and this knowledge is not to be gained from a casual survey of a few photoplays made by the company but from a study of the entire product. It is almost impossible, even in the cities, to locate all the work of any company, but The Stories of the Films in the back part of this paper will supplement the study of the pictures that are caught upon the screen.

Repeatedly we are assured that this and that company is not buying because they do not purchase the stories of the correspondent and perhaps in the same mail another writer will announce the sale of several. He has caught, consciously or otherwise, the idea of the editor and delivers the goods that are wanted.

A study of exact wants will save dollars in stamps that are wasted in sending to companies stories not at all in their line. Study your market and study it closely. It will save you money and permit you to make some.

The Word of Hope.

Here's some sound sense from a photoplaywright who has been trying to land scripts for about a year and a half and who, up to date, has landed about half his product. He writes:

> "Every good script will find a harbor." If a script is good, it will sell, and if it isn't good, it stands to reason no one will buy. I do not hold myself as a successful writer by any means, but I do know that I have been far more successful than a great many older and more experienced writers, and have received personal letters from six different editors, stating their particular wants in the scenario line and asking me to bend my efforts toward filling same. If I can do it, why can't the rest? I have not found the field too crowded, but instead have learned that there is a willing hand extended towards the young writer whose work shows the least sign of promise.

That's just the way it is. There is a place for every good script if only you can find the place, and if you keep at it intelligently and with a stout heart you will find the place. If you can write good scripts you can sell them, but it must be an idea sufficiently away from the ordinary to attract attention. Don't think that it is a good script just because you wrote it. If it's that sort of a good script the chances are that it is not a good script at all. Think it is a good script because it is so much better, so much stronger than the script you usually write. If it is that sort of a good script the chances are that someone wants it, so keep it going until all likely to take it have had their chance at it. But bear this in mind: you are never going to do your best work so long as you stay content with your worst.

The Selig Studio.

The photoplay department of the Selig Polyscope Company in Chicago, is said to be the most extensive attached to a single company. Many of Selig productions are visualizations of stories and plays and in addition most of the big animal stories are prepared by the permanent staff, but little of the work of outside authors being taken. The accompanying cut shows the big photoplay room in the Chicago offices, with Editor Kenneth Langley at his desk nearest the camera, and some of his assistants. The large reference library is a part of the equipment of the office, though few dramatizations of standard literature are made, most of the arrangements being done from the copyrighted works of modern writers, whose product has been contracted for by the Selig company.

Cuts are something new in The Photoplaywright, but we hope to present all of the Editors in the course of the next few months that the photoplay writers may see the men they are dealing with. Will the editors please regard this as a personal invitation to send in their photographs?

Be Direct.

If you are trying to get an effective handling of plot get straight to the point you are aiming at. Do not run around in circles in the supposition that you are making your story more interesting. We saw a story the other day in which valuable time was lost in establishing the fact that the heroine was a Southern girl. This, of course, was an interesting fact, but it had no more to do with the story than did the fact that she came to New York, and yet some two hundred feet of film were wasted in her sunny Southern home and on the way up to where she could start in on the real story. So far as the plot went she might have been a New Yorker or a recent arrival from Japan. It was not essential that she be a Southern girl and so all this preliminary but served to complicate the plot and retard the narrative. And after the story was once started there was about one part plot to two parts of the same unnecessary action.

This sort of thing can be done in story writing where a line of type will make her a Southerner and another bring her to New York, but a director has to hustle out to get that Southern home and a railroad station if the film is to be made and since it is not needed he cuts it out—which is what the author should have done in the first place. Stick to the straight line and you'll get there quicker in a double sense.

Don't Mix.

About the time we advised a writer not to have his comedy character suddenly turn tragedian we ran into Vitagraph's "The Cross Roads." Many will recall that in the last scene of this country drama a half-witted boy moved by hatred for the villain throws him over the railing of a bridge, being dragged over himself. In the earlier scenes the boy had supplied a slight comedy relief, but in this scene his manner was tense and tragic and the scene properly effective, but in a house patronized by women and children a laugh went up as the men fell into the water to their deaths. The man had been playing comedy and a fall into the water is often part of a comedy scene. The careful work of the producer went for naught in at least one house and probably others.

The run of a reel is so short that it is best to hold to the simple classifications. If you want a hero keep him heroic. If you have a comedian let him be funny from title to tail piece, or you are apt to lose the effect you have planned for in a majority of the houses.

Want to Get Together.

When we were getting up the photoplay dinner we received a suggestion that we place next each other the authors who lived in the same territory, and while the idea was not followed because the writers got together irrespective of street addresses, we noted that some of those who lived within a mile of each other (and that's being neighbors in New York), did not know of the proximity of a congenial spirit.

If you live in a town that is likely to boast more than one photoplaywright and want to get in touch with other writers, send in your name and address. These will not be published, but the fact that there has been a request from that town will be stated and if there are replies the writers will be put in touch with each other. Two heads are better than one when it comes to talking over photoplay and half a dozen getting together with more or less regularity can each help the other in his work.

Getting the Theme.

Most editors comment on the fact that most Western stories come from Eastern contributors while the Westerners vainly offer tales of the Atlantic States. To the trained writer the answer is obvious, the writing of new scenes is in itself an inspiration, but this is only for the trained writer and the novice would do much better to stick to the themes with which he is most familiar. The writer who makes a business of it can write of the West or the Far East because he has read up on his subject, but the novice writes of strange matters because it does not seem to him that stories lie close to hand.

It is a good plan to pick themes with which you are familiar. If you live in the country try to put the country on paper. If you are a dweller in the cities seek the streets and city life for inspiration. An editor from the West commented the other day on the splendid field lying fallow in New York's East Side and yet it is seldom that a story of the East Side is written that gets over, not because there are no photoplaywrights on the East Side, but because these are all busy writing society plays and stories of business life, passing unheeded the wonderful pathos of the section of the town in which they live. With half the imagination they use in mapping out a story of high society they could weave about the life they see the tender veil of poetry and make the sordid almost sacred with tenderness of touch. In the same way the girl who lives uptown wants to write about settlement workers and Salvation Army lassies and the absence of convincing color sends the stories back.

Don't try to write about what you know nothing of, but get variety for your stories by knowing a lot. The properly qualified writer should know something of law, of medicine, of commercial usage, of society. He should have some idea of railroading, of handling a boat, of the stage and a hundred other topics. Then he can write with variety and yet write of what he knows. The other day an author wrote in that he was in Bermuda, but that he expected to go to South Africa the following week. He probably hasn't been a hundred miles from his home town in all his life and yet he knows more of strange lands than some of those who have traveled far, for the library places at his disposal the results of the observations of hundreds of brainy men and women and he assimilates the information and puts it to good use. Possibly if he traveled he would know less, but as it is, local color as much as idea sold him a Philippine story the other day for a fancy price and brought a request for more.

Start modestly, writing about the things you know about but be an eager seeker after knowledge and add to your store of information day by day that the time may not come when you find yourself written out. Even if you think you know it all you don't and you'll find that the more you learn the less you think you'll know. After a while you'll be able to get a story idea almost anywhere and you'll be able to write it out because you have a general store of really useful information. Start with the simple theme of the life about you, but do not be content until you have learned so much from your reading that you can locate your story in China or Chile and make it reasonably strong in color. But if you do not know about China do not write about it until you have read up.

In Handling Carbons.

Last month we saw in Popular Mechanics a wrinkle that we have been using for so long that we thought everyone must know about it. It's simple, but efficient and it doesn't cost much, so we pass it along for the benefit of those who make carbon copies and find it not easy to handle the carbon and the first and second sheet through the carriage of the machine.

Take a piece of typewriter paper and fold it top to bottom. Cut it into halves and fold one of the pieces over. Slip this over the top of your "pack" of carbon and sheets and slip the whole into the machine. Run it through until you can pull the folded sheet off and you have your carbon in proper position with regard to the other sheets since this simple guide keeps the sheets from striking the pressure rollers and holding back. Try it.

Selecting the Best.

One of the real secrets of establishing a selling connection is not to run an editor off his feet at the first sale. We have seen writers utterly spoil their chances of a market with a flood of second-class material following the acceptance of a better script.

It is the habit with some to rush their entire product into every studio to which they have made the sale of a good script and some editors do not offer much encouragement to a new author for this very reason.

Nearly every writer has a few scripts that for one reason and another have hung fire and these gradually accumulate. A script finds a sale and the editor says he would like to see more of the author's work. The request is responded to with a flood of indifferent material, the hopeful editor regards the batch with dismay, concludes that the good script was an accident and loses interest in the discovery.

If you have been trying to land one particular studio and at last succeed, do not send in any script that is not at least as good as the script that sold and if you can make a better script out of a fair one keep at it until you do before you send it off. Because the editor has bought one story it does not follow that he wants to buy your entire output. Keep the dead ones in the morgue until you can work them over and let the acceptance of a script be an incentive to do something even better, something that will justify the editor's faith in you.

And along the same lines do not send out everything you write. Send only the best. Hold the others until you can make them good.

Possible and Probable.

Here's a little rule for testing your idea that may be of value. Take it as a requirement that a story must be possible and should be probable. Even on the screen we find stories that are neither probable nor possible, but we never said that the filming of a story was a certain proof of its merit. To the contrary we now and then get hold of a film that makes us want to kick the man who made it.

A story is probable if it is likely that such things happen. It is possible if such a thing could happen. It is probable that day after to-morrow the sun will rise. It is barely possible that in the interval of time the sun may become extinct; possible, but not probable. Therefore a story based on the failure of the sun to shine might be accepted, but a story based on the rising of the sun would stand a better chance of being accepted.

When you get your plot and before you develop it, ask yourself if the story is possible. Don't take it for granted that anything might happen. In a limited sense you may be right, but it is better to accept the general ruling that certain things are impossible, the turning of night into day; the drying up of the ocean beds overnight. Granting that such things are impossible, accept a minor argument along the same lines. We saw a script the other day in which two untrained girls became solo dancers overnight, though choreographic expertness comes only with years of practice. It is no more possible to create an expert dancer overnight than it is to vanish the waters from the face of the earth in the same space of time. Stick to the possibilities and having decided that the story is possible, try and make it probable.

You'll be surprised at the way you can twist and turn a plot about without materially changing it. The story that is hopelessly impossible may be made not only possible but probable; though the main facts, the essential plot, remains the same. Before you put the story on paper make it possible. If you can't swing it immediately, let the idea kick around in your brain until it becomes more tractable. Don't put it right down on paper and send it off to some poor editor just because you've just thought of it. Wait until you think it out properly and have it right. Then you'll find that it will fairly spill itself on the paper and be a vastly better script than it would have been had you ground it through your typewriter the moment you thought of it. Don't send your hero West and in the next scene show him an expert shot, though the earlier scenes make it clear that he has been a city man all his life and probably never handled a revolver before. You may need to have your hero shoot the head off a rattlesnake and save the beautiful heroine from death or an overdose of medicinal whiskey, but if you want some snakes shot up make your hero a Westerner used to packing a gun from the time he was old enough to know which was the business end. Make it probable and if you get on the screen you'll find a warmer welcome than if you managed to hypnotize an editor with an impossible idea.

Song Publishing.

It appears that some of the readers of this department write songs, too. Two of them have had theirs published by companies which advertise to set your words to music and give you half the profits—if there are any.

Some of these companies seem able to keep out of the grip of the Post Office Inspectors, but it requires adroit dodging and a good lawyer, but since there are some that do, we want to add a word of warning to the pages of caution already published.

No company that advertises to set your words to music will do more than that. These companies have stock melodies stereotyped and with lines cut for the type words. If yours is a waltz song you get the same melody that every other author of a waltz song gets, and it is the same way with marches and other musical forms. One of these ingenious swindlers once boasted to us that with eight sets of plates he could fix over anything from Mary Had a Little Lamb to the Ten Commandments. The stock cover is likewise mortised for a title and a couple of hundred copies are run off for the author, a few being retained that they may be supplied friends of the writer who send in for copies to test the promise of the publisher. The whole thing does not cost $5, is not worth that and yet it costs the author from $20 to $35 according to the company approached. For $35 you can get 500 copies printed from your own plates if you can supply both words and music, but these publishers do not advertise for business. They are the reputable music printers who do the work for the big song publishers. You'll probably lose most of the $35, but you will have had a run for your money. Keep away from the fakes.

Hal Reid Has Wented.

Hal Reid is no longer connected with the photoplay reading room of the Universal Film Company, and up to the present his successor as head of the staff has not been appointed, though with B. P. Schulberg, Joe Roach and C. B. Hoadley holding down desks within the four walls the difficulty of a choice should resolve itself into a question as to which one. In his brief career Mr. Reid originated the ten dollar script and the comedy rejection slip, neither of which made many friends for the Universal. How the department will be run in future, will depend upon the successor appointed. At the time of this writing, early in the week, there was not even a definite rumor as to the appointment.

Mr. Reid is directing for the Champion.

Comments on the Films

"THE GOVERNOR" (Edison), Sept. 17.—Bannister Merwin has done much stronger work in other pictures than in this, which is weak dramatically and very unconvincing, despite the fact that it is naturally acted. We can't be persuaded that the governor of any state, intrusted with the high office by the people, could possibly be weak in just this way. He is shown as a ninny and we can't help feeling that he was only made so to give a situation. Again, the withholding of the evidence of wrongdoing until the climax was ready is in this picture so unconvincing that it fails of becoming a true part of any story. Mary Fuller plays a hard part very well indeed, as do Charles Ogle and Willis Secord, who take the roles of two scamps. Walter Edwin had a most ungrateful part as the weak-kneed governor who has, by way of foil, a melodramatically strong son (Augustus Phillips). George Lessey plays the retiring governor.

"LAZY BILL HUDSON" (Edison), Sept. 18.—A farce that affords some fun and a good chance to two or three players to give amusing characterizations. It isn't very fresh and as entertainment, doesn't come up to Edison standard. Miss Alice Washburn, as Mrs. Hudson, isn't strongly differentiated from other characters she has played nor can we say that Edward O'Connor's Irish cop differs much from others we have seen. William Wadsworth, as lazy Bill, plays the situation rather than a character. It is only fair.

"NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME, VIRGINIA" (Edison), Sept. 18.—A series of views of a comfortable-looking home for old volunteer veterans. It deals with a subject that will widely interest Americans and is clearly photographed.

"HEARTS AND DIAMONDS" (Edison), Sept. 20.—This picture recalled to the reviewer the distinct pleasure that the European and American pictures, with steamship scenes between, used to give him—that was before he took up reviewing. Like this, they were Edison pictures. Three or four years have improved the stories and greatly improved the technique and he still likes pictures that carry across the water and much prefers them to come from Europe to America. This excellent offering is of Americans and its opening scenes are on the other side; it ends as the ship reaches New York. Augustus Phillips plays the lead, as a U. S. customs agent in London who has just been promoted and is coming back home. Edna Flugrath plays the American girl visiting Europe with whom he is in love and who with her aunt (Mrs. Wm. Bechtel) is also on her way home. George Lessey plays a smuggler who is planning to bring in an invoice of diamonds. Robert Brower plays a U. S. consul. The young customs agent has been warned of the smuggler's intention. These two with the girl and her aunt are on the same ship. The agent has to keep his eye on the smuggler and make love to the girl at the same time. He gets both the smuggler and the girl. Herbert E. Morgan has written a good story; but the scenes add greatly to its interest. Those on the ship and in New York harbor are fine. It makes a desirable offering

"CAPTAIN BARNACLE'S WAIF" (Vitagraph), Sept. 16.—A touching little heart story. As a well-made pump will always work under the right conditions, so, it seems, the old, old formulas for producing pathos will, when skillfully put together, be effective time and again. There is nothing new in this picture and it is plainly put together in a mechanical way; but it is a good offering, it has the elements of the kind of popularity that pays both maker and exhibitor and will be liked and liked very much. It is a story of an uninstructed waif (Paul Kelly) who was kindly treated by Capt. Barnacle (Van D. Brooke) and who later is caught stealing. The captain had ordered him out of the house; but the little daughter (Norma Talmadge) pleads for him and he is given another chance. He makes good and becomes a hero. It was skillfully put together by W. A. Tremayne and produced by Van Dyke Brooke, who has made a good commercial offering of it.

"ALKALI IKE'S PANTS" (Essanay), Sept. 21.—The funniest comedy in a month and more. Alkali's pants are only the ordinary kind; it's his lack of them that's a scream. He and a friend had played a mean trick on "Coyote" and Coyote had lost his girl because of it. Ike was ironing his pants to take Coyote's girl to a party. When his back is turned, Coyote and the third man steals 'em. Ike is compelled to go in his chaps and underdrawers. The rest is Ike; it wouldn't have been half so funny with any other player. But we give the exhibitor our word, it's a scream.

"WHEN FATHER HAD HIS WAY" (Lubin), Sept. 18.—A romance played farcically to amuse. Dad had the gout and the sweetheart of his daughter had knocked against his sore foot. When later, Dad is shaking hands with the young man, he recognizes his tormentor and insists on breaking the engagement. A scheme is thought up to make Dad insist on the marriage. He is made to believe that the man wants to back out. The Lubin Company has done this thing very much better. The situation, at best, is a bit stale by this time. As an offering it is merely fair.

"IN PERIL OF THEIR LIVES" (Kalem), Sept. 18.—A very slight plot is behind this picture, but it gives a chance for one or two thrills, one of which is also a shudder. The background is a very rocky shore. One thrill is the rescue of three fishermen, whose boat has been cast on a rocky spot and capsized. The tide is rising and the waves are breaking over them when two daughters of the oldest man pull them up the cliff. They are helped by a man who had just been "bitten by a snake and who had placed powder on the wound and set it off." As entertainment it is so so.

"LIFE AND CUSTOMS OF THE WINNEBAGO INDIANS" (Selig), Sept. 20.—An educational offering showing something of the industries, dances, games, sports and other customs of a tribe of intelligent-looking red men who live in the Black River Falls District of Wisconsin. It makes a very interesting and highly commendable release; it is a distinct contribution. The camera work is excellent.

"THE BRAND BLOTTER" (Selig), Sept. 17.—A ranch love story. Pictures like this deal with nothing new either in situation or incident, but manage to keep spectators interested merely because of the faculty in moving pictures of making things seem real. In this offering we are shown a cattle baron's pretty daughter "blotting the brand" on her father's cattle, and substituting that of the man she loves. Myrtle Stedman, who plays this Western sweetheart, shows remarkable ability in branding; she makes a good scene of it. Wm. Duncan, in the part opposite to her, makes, as usual, a very acceptable hero. Also in the cast are Rex de Rosselli, Lester Cunio, Shorty de Long, C. E. Reeves, C. S. Tipton, and B. Jacobs. The story was written by Elizabeth Fraser and produced by Marshall Stedman.

"THE MIXED SAMPLE TRUNKS" (Essanay), Sept. 19.—A farce comedy that audiences will find amusing. In it Mr. Missimer and Mr. Steppling play two traveling salesmen; the former carrying ladies' suits; the latter a line of store lay figures. Missimer is of nervous disposition and reads in the papers of a brutal murder with the corpse taken from the hotel in a trunk. The sample trunks get mixed. It is not wholly new, but it gets over very well and is a good offering.

"THE DESPERADO" (Pathe), Sept. 19.—Perhaps a new comedy twist is the surest way of making an old story serve once more as a fresh and acceptable offering. It is such that relieves this picture, although the characters are only our old acquaintances, the desperado, the storekeeper, the girl, and the cowboys, etc. The girl suspected that the bad man was going to do a trick there that night, and substituted lemons for money in the strong box. It is very well acted by one of the Pathe companies in the East and makes a good offering.

"THE LOVE TEST" (Essanay), Sept. 20.—When this picture was put on the screen, we overheard some very enthusiastic comments from five elderly women near us. Charwomen they seemed to be, and one said it was the best picture she had ever seen, while another remarked that it alone was worth 25 cents. It is a good picture, although we didn't find anything new or spontaneous in it. Surely the idea of a will requiring ten young people to marry is not new, nor is the transposition of mistress and maid to fool the man in the case a new twist. The players do a good deal to relieve it and make it acceptable

"THE TURPENTINE INDUSTRY" (Lubin), Sept. 20.—A good many things conspire to make this picture more interesting than the usual industrial film and they are always acceptable. In the first place, convict labor is used and it has been reported that it has been inhumanly abused in this business. The picture shows the prisoners at work, but it fails to show any reason why they shouldn't prefer this kind of labor to breaking stone, for instance. In the second place, the product is of great importance to the world, and it is said to be diminishing. We don't wonder at this, seeing the way the trees are treated. On its own count, we find it instructive and very much worth while.

"NO TRESPASSING" (Lubin), Sept. 20.—On the same reel is this farce on a farm. It is plainly "put together" and is not a convincing story, but it has a pretty heroine, some lovely scenes, a daisy meadow, and rural views, and it has one or two amusing situations. It is not very substantial.

"INTO THE GENUINE" (Selig), Sept. 19.—As shown here, we see how a rich man's hard luck in speculation turned out as the best of good fortune. It showed him how hollow the love of his fiancee's was and drove him out West, where he not only found "genuine" love, but a gold mine. The backgrounds of the early scenes are a luxurious home in Chicago and the Wheat Pit; then we have the gold fields and finally we come back to the city. The story is conducted melodramatically with the villainess' punishment in the last act, but the character of this fiancee who passes for the villainess isn't interesting enough to make us care much whether she is punished or not. This is the picture's chief weakness; it is part romance, part melodrama. Carl Winterhoff plays the young broker and miner; Adrienne Kroel is his first fiancee, and Winnifred Greenwood the genuine sweetheart. Beside these we find in the cast Mrs. Mellville as the broker's mother; Rose Evans, as the society girl's mother; John Lancaster as the trapper; Joe Hazelton, the society girl's father, and others.

"THE BANDIT'S SPUR" (Pathe), Sept. 18.—A story of the Southwest. As far as outline goes there is little in it that is new; but the filling-in is fresh and well played, and makes it an effective, interesting picture, and a good offering. Especially good is the drawing of the Mexican girl, who is the pivotal character in the story and who attempts, because of jealousy, to fasten her father's crime on an American she loves. A well-made plot shows the attempt as not only frustrated, but as the means of revealing the real criminal. It is speedy in its action and will be liked.

"FAT BILL'S WOOING" (Kalem), Sept. 23.—John E. Bennan, who is both fat and frisky, plays with Ruth Roland, a slight situation that hasn't been seen before in pictures, and it made sympathetic laughter. Virginia Chester, who has been Ruth's friend in Kalems lately, and O. M. Gore, also have roles. It is acceptable.

"ROOST THE KIDDER" (Kalem), Sept. 23.—On the same reel. We have had several Roost pictures, and, as far as we have been able to find, they have proved very acceptable. We have come on them for the second time in the same house on Broadway, and in other parts of town. This offering has a very interesting background, real darkey life in the South. An old darkey's buggy, for instance, is a real asset, as are the glimpses of cabin life. Stuart Holmes is still Roost; but the girl is Etta Miner, a sure 'nuff darkey belle. A. D. Byrd plays Roost's darkey friend and Ralph Mitchell plays the deacon. The two on this reel make a very good offering.

"THE GRANDFATHER" (Edison), Sept. 21.—A very pleasing story of sentiment, set in a country village and dealing with the fortunes of a very kindly old man, the grandfather, played by Wm. West. At first he seems a nuisance to his daughter-in-law, a weary farmer's wife. In the end, the action has worked through an effective emotional climax and we find him a loved and acceptable member of the family. The story is heightened by making the old man a Civil War veteran. The work of William West, as the grandfather, and of Bliss Milford, as the tired and overworked woman, also add much to this fine picture. Augustus Phillips, Chas. Ogle, and Edna Mammel also have good parts. It is a very safe picture to depend upon, a desirable offering.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY" (Sept. 23).—Nothing that appears in these weekly topical pictures is quite so important or so interesting as faces. The people are likely to grow tired in time of railroad wrecks, except very tragic ones, of fires, except when important buildings have been destroyed, but of faces they never can grow tired. Important ceremonies are also important. This week we find some excellent portraits and it is a commendable number.

"HIS PAIR OF PANTS" (Lubin), Sept. 21.—A rather slow moving farce that has an old situation and nothing that is truly fresh. Excentric camera work made a number of good laughs near the end of it.

"HIS TRADE" (Lubin), Sept. 21.—On the same reel, a shorter farce quite fresh in its situation, but rather lacking in farcical atmosphere.

"FRIENDS" (Biograph), Sept. 23.—A dramatic little love story in the costume of the 70's and which happens to be set in the West. The atmosphere is truly Western, but this is merely because the producer, having chosen to set his situation in a gold diggings country, used backgrounds of all kinds in perfect keeping. There are but three characters in the foreground—the daughter of the innkeeper and belle of the mining village (Little Mary); a young blade, perhaps a gambler or a speculator, who is dressed in a frock coat and topper (William Walthall), and a miner of a rather rough but honest appearance. These two men are the "friends," and the picture's chief object is to set forth the character of the young blade. He holds women in more or less contempt; but for his friend he holds a just respect. It is a realistic picture that appeals to the mind rather than to the emotions. A commendable picture; it will interest all kinds of people. The gallery will like the atmosphere; the critical will enjoy its matter.

"THE GRIT OF THE GIRL TELEGRAPHER" (Kalem), Sept. 21.—A picture made good and interesting by the materials it uses rather than by the way they are handled. It is a railroad, melodramatic picture, but the plot, the form it takes, is haphazard. It features the grit of a girl telegrapher, which, as shown, is equal to that of the usual Western sheriff, and it also features a chase in locomotives of a bad man by the girl. The bad man had not done anything to hurt the girl; she landed on him chiefly because her lover, a detective, had been ordered to keep an eye out for him. We are interested in the heroine solely because of her unusual grit, which isn't likely to make many spectators fall in love with her. After all, the best kind of heroine for wide popularity is Larrie Doone, a womanly, lovable girl. Another remark we may safely make, apropos of this picture, is that the well-made melodrama, even when it uses much that is trite with freshness in its characters and sets, is more likely to please than a picture like this in which we find much freshness and good acting, but do not find the old formulas that have been proved effective.

"MAX'S TRAGEDY" (C. G. P. C.), Sept. 20.—A very amusing picture which, if any audience can see without laughing, that audience must be very peculiar. Its object is to shock the audience and then to get the laugh on it. The means it uses are legitimate, but it does shock and the "come back" is extremely laughable. The picture most surely gets across; it is a live wire, and it is fresh. We commend it.

"THE EDMUND'S KLAMM RAVINE" (C. G. P. C.), Sept. 20.—The views of this beautiful ravine are stereoscopic, but they lack atmosphere. It is an interesting offering, but is not so good as some by this company that we have seen.

"THE INDIAN MUTINY" (Vitagraph), Sept. 20.—In nothing have the pictures shown more progress during the last year than in the way crowds are handled, especially at the moment of confusion and turmoil as in the sack of a city, and in the making of such scenes the Vitagraph people are in the very first rank. This picture tells a story of the beginning of the Sepoy rebellion, but it is not meant to be historical. A native prince (Harry Northrup), falls in love with an English girl (Lillian Walker), sister of an officer (James Morrison), and, because he is refused, incites the Sepoys to rise against the British. The town is sacked and the girl is carried away under the eyes of her frantic brother. An unexpected explosion throws all into confusion and the brother and sister manage to escape on one horse. The prince, with his men, give chase, but fall into the arms, so to speak, of a regiment of Highlanders. The prince is captured. Messrs. George Ober and George Lambert play officers of the regiment. The picture is full of good action throughout, and is a very good offering. Miss Marguerite Bertsch wrote the scenario, which was produced by Mr. Fred Thomson.

"THE BURNING OF THE MATCH FACTORY" (Vitagraph), Sept. 20.—On the same reel is a fine view of flame and smoke. It is worth seeing.

"ADVENTURE OF THE ITALIAN MODEL (Vitagraph), Sept. 21.—Lambert Chase, the great detective (Maurice Costello), appears again to unravel a very perplexing case of poisoning. Such a picture appeals exclusively to the intelligent. The situation is first presented blankly. The spectator can see no possible solution. We then see the detective make small discoveries. They are convincing as clews, but they don't lead us anywhere. The producer's skill is shown by the way he keeps every step that the detective makes from suggesting to the spectator what the next steps will be up to the dramatic climax when we are permitted to see the trap set for the murderer and breathlessly watch him fall into it. This offering fulfills all these requirements very well and is deeply interesting. The artist who was suspected of poisoning the model is Mr. James Morrison; the model is Miss Leah Baird; the artist's mother is Miss Rose Tapley, and Mr. George Cooper play the murderer. The author is Mr. B. R. Brookes, the producer is Mr. Van Dyke Brooke.

"TWO DAUGHTERS OF EVE" (Biograph), Sept. 19.—There are persons in the picture industry and out of it who bewail the fact that the personnel of the Biograph Company has undergone changes. So it has. Good people have gone to other companies. Likewise, good people have returned, and also good people have made their debut. In this picture it may truly be said that Biograph has put over another Biograph. It is a story with a wallop, to borrow a term from the bowlers. There is a triangle, to be sure, but the third member was drawn into it through motives of revenge, and perhaps measurably justifiable.

A little child, left alone for a moment by its parents, gets out of a machine and wanders into the wings of a theater. The mother in her search for the little one, discovers her in the arms of an actress—extremely decollete, by the way—and denounces the stage girl for contaminating her child. The father remonstrates with the mother and apologizes to the actress. The next night the father has a front seat at the show. There are effective scenes showing the theater and the audience, and flashes of the stage and the dance; the father and the actress exchange glances. The friendship is formed, the mother takes the child and goes out for herself; the father meets with financial reverses, the girl throws him over. The mother, as a last resort, seeks employment in the chorus. There she comes face to face with the third corner. The manner of the actress, scornful and sneering at first, changes to pity. She puts out her hands to a sister in distress. The stage girl takes from her neck and arms the jewels the husband had given her and forces them on the wife; she goes to the wretched home of the mother with her. "Now may I kiss the baby?" inquires the actress. Yes, she may. The stage woman does more. She meets the husband, and sends him to his wife. There is a strong scene, ending in reconciliation. The stage girl is new to the company. She is an acquisition. The work of the mother is powerful; she has never been seen to better advantage. Mr. Walthall took the role of the husband; he also was at his best.

"CHIPS OF THE OLD BLOCK" (Kalem), Sept. 20.—Comedy that merges into the burlesque and hardly refined. It will please some.

"TILLEY'S BIRD FARM" (Kalem), Sept. 20.—On the same reel as the foregoing. There are many fine pictures of rare fowl, from Madagascar, Egypt, Australia, India, Germany, Japan, Africa, etc.

"THE CATTLE RUSTLERS" (Selig), Sept. 24.—Use is made of a half hundred cattle in a so-called round-up. The story is ordinary. There are good people in it, and they do their best to make it go. William Duncan and Myrtle Stedman have the leads.

"A CHILD'S DEVOTION" (Lubin), Sept. 19.—Another Arthur Johnson. It is high-class drama—sympathetically portrayed; it will make strong appeal to thinking people. Miss Briscoe is doing fine work with Mr. Johnson. Young Raymond Hackett has much to do in this picture, and he acquits himself in creditable style. Florence Hackett, as the mother of the baby "borrowed" by the youngster as a substitute for the half-brother who died, aids materially in the making of a most naturally told story. The picture is worth featuring.

"A DETECTIVE'S STRATEGY" (Selig), Sept. 23.—Charles Clary and Winnifred Greenwood have the leads in a well-acted story—a story, however, which does not thrill; it lacks somewhere the essential "punch" deeply to move an audience.

"A GAY TIME IN QUEBEC" (Lubin), Sept. 23.—A scenic with a comedy diversion. The scenic was interesting. The comedy strongly appealed to the theater's charwoman seated near the writer. The police and fire departments showed considerable courtesy to the company, and they are featured in the picture.

"HIS LORDSHIP THE VALET" (Vitagraph), Sept. 24.—Fine comedy. The scenes are mostly laid on board of a steamship. The steamship may not be under way, but it does not have to be. Harry Northrup, as Lord Arthur Courcy, and E. K. Lincoln, as Jaspar Durbin, his valet, make a lot of fun. It is the old story of the master and man, to borrow an un-American expression from our English cousins, changing places in order to protect the lord from designing mammas. It worked so thoroughly to the advantage of the valet, who was filling his position in order to win a wager of a thousand dollars that he could cross the ocean without paying his fare, that the lord cried quits and uncovered the bogus lord to Harriet Knowlton (Edith Storey), between whom and Durbin there had sprung up a strong friendship. It is all well done.

"THE RENEGADES" (Lubin), Sept. 24.—Strong Western by the Western company. It is well photographed and has an unusual conclusion.

"SWIMMING AND LIFE-SAVING" (Lubin), Sept. 26.—There are in this film many tricks of the expert swimmer, interesting, but not necessarily valuable. There are, however, some excellent hints as to the handling of a drowning person, and the treatment to which he should be subjected when taken from the water.

"BUSTER AND THE GYPSIES" (Lubin), Sept. 26.—On the same reel as the foregoing is a storyette by the children's company. Some of the juveniles have received insufficient training for the camera. Buster, however, takes care of his end of the job.

"ACROSS THE BROAD PACIFIC" (Essanay), Sept. 24.—An interesting scenic, containing views of Yokohama, Kobe, Manila, the Pasig River, and China. One particularly unique picture is that of coaling ship at Nagasaki, in which hundreds of coolies are employed.

"THE PITY OF IT" (Selig), Sept. 26.—Colin Campbell has written and produced a strong drama, with a climax that will get to you. Thomas Santschi, in the character of Tom Morton, a husband deserted by his wife, does fine work. Sharing with him in the interest-making is Bessie Eyton, who carries the role of Sunshine, an Indian maid; the maid brings about the regeneration of Tom, through inducing him to quit the use of liquor. Likewise she falls in love with him. When the erring and repentant wife learns Tom's whereabouts she goes to him, only to be spurned. The wife drives away, the horse bolts, and the wife is killed. The Indian girl lays on the body the ring Tom had given to her. Then Sunshine takes Young Deer, her former lover, by the hand, and goes away. Eugenie Besserer and Lillian Hayward play the parts of the wife and sister of Tom. They contribute to a good film.

"CYNTHIA'S AGREEMENT" (Edison), Sept. 25.—William H. Woodward and Gertrude McCoy have the leads in a most amusing comedy-drama, written by Mabel McSween. Mr. Woodward as Walter Edwin, a lawyer, loses patience with stenographers who resign to get married. He employs one finally on the understanding that she is not to get married and is not to resign her position. When the lawyer falls in love with her himself she quotes the agreement as a bar. The agreement is "lost." There are incidents aplenty to keep the fun going.

"THE LITTLE GIRL NEXT DOOR" (Edison), Sept. 24.—Splendid drama. Nina Rhoades is the author; she has builded well; and she has been especially fortunate in the assignments to the various characters. Of heart interest in this story there is much—at times too much for outward physical comfort. One could hardly wish for a stronger dramatic situation than that where Marc McDermott, as Mr. Hinsdale, takes into his home Edna Hammel, portraying Joy, the blind girl, and there discovers that it is his own granddaughter. In the awakening of the great public's heart to the afflictions of humanity's less fortunate ones the Edison Company is doing an incalculable service. The others in the cast of this drama, all of whom are deserving of mention, are Gertrude McCoy, Leonie Flugrath, Elizabeth Miller and Augustus Phillips.

"PALS" (Pathe), Sept. 25.—This is a Western by the Eastern forces. It is convincing enough except the absence of Mexican surroundings. The scenes labeled Mexican are too plainly a couple of thousand miles from there. Crane Wilbur and Pearl White have the leads.

"BILL WILSON'S GAL" (Vitagraph), Sept. 25.—Mr. Sturgeon, the Western director of the Vitagraph, has written and produced a drama which holds all the way. Miss Mary Charleson is doing fine work in all the parts for which she is cast, and this play is no exception. Robert Burns has the role of the lawyer who shuts up the only saloon in town at the behest of his client, Nellie Wilson, because the owner would insist on selling liquor to her father. George C. Stanley is convincing as the saloonkeeper. As a practical temperance lesson the picture takes high rank, and in this respect it may be said there are many attempts to do this very same thing, but which fall far short of accomplishing it. Churches looking for a virile story will find it right here.

Independent

"A SLY SERVANT" (Great Northern), Sept. 28.—Because it is acted in the right spirit and carefully conducted, this amusing little sketch gives fine entertainment. It will make good laughter.

"HER AMBITION" (Powers), Sept. 27.—A very well acted character study is the backbone of this picture. It deals with a charming but rather light-headed young woman whose ambition is to marry a man whom her sister, a soberer girl, has already fallen in love with. She succeeds and then, by her heedless extravagance, ruins him. It is not strongly dramatic, chiefly because the contrasts were not brought out with the vivid sharpness that was possible; but the smoothness with which it is told and the excellent acting of the whole cast make its progress deeply interesting. Beautifully set and perfectly photographed, it makes a good offering.

"THE ADVENT OF JANE" (Victor), Sept. 27.—The new doctor (of course the people knew a medicus was coming) is Jane Bixby (Florence Lawrence). The town is very rural and the doctor's adventures are now laughable and again rather trying. There's a thread of fresh and acceptable sentiment as the story develops into a melodrama, turning on a moonshine whiskey still. Miss Lawrence is a master in subtilly portraying a situation. Her work lifts the value of the offering above what the scenario would have by itself without her. It is a very fair offering.

"CURING HUBBY" (Imp), Sept. 28.—A speedy and very amusing farce in which two people have the center of the stage—Mr. Cumpson and a player who charmingly take the part of his wife. He will stay out late at the club and she prepares a comical scare for him. It is a mirth-maker and will be serviceable on the bill.

"LIE NOT TO YOUR WIFE" (Imp), Sept. 28.—On the same reel, this picture, which is also a farce, has a quite different atmosphere. It is played in bathing costume mostly and set at some Pacific seaside pleasure resort and its beach. Mr. Fred Mace has the chief role as a beach masher. His wife with the help of two other women, her friends, show him that they "are on." Together, the two make a very acceptable release.

"THE PLAN THAT FAILED" (Powers), Sept. 25.—The Power's producer has, in this picture, again made good use of the two kiddies who have grown widely popular through their work in other pictures. It's a farm life story with the usual delightful scenes, full of convincing truth and, as usual, the kids are shown as little mischiefs. They get a three-ply spanking. They straightway get into some more amusing mischief and their "scheme" is to defend themselves from another spanking. It fails. The boards are in the wrong place, for their hands receive the whip. The picture will amuse and will be liked by most people in nearly every audience.

"SWAT THE FLY" (Powers), Sept. 25.—A picture of one swat the fly brigade and its catch of dead pests. It is a good eye-opener, not entertainment; but highly commendable as necessary education.

"THE MYSTERIOUS AUTO" (Milano), Sept. 28.—A farce picture whose feature is a man-chase by a very farcical police force in an auto. Trick photography makes the auto dodge around trees, etc. It is merely light amusement, but it is a fair offering.

"HONESTY PUNISHED" (Milano), Sept. 22.—A whimsical, but fresh and amusing situation gives rise to a rough and tumble farce. The two on this reel are commendable as a number to lighten a bill, but we think the title of this last picture might have been made more descriptive.

"THE FIGHTING PARSON AND THE MOONSHINERS" (Imp), Sept. 26.—King Baggot who, with Jane Fernley, plays this picture of the mountains, lacks the opportunity of giving a sustained impression that he had in his recent picture, "In Old Tennessee." The idea that this story tries to present is good; but the scenario lacks strength. It hasn't been worked out with the objectivity that is necessary in a very effective work of art. Objectivity can be run to the ground; for, of course, every wholly mechanical melodrama is wholly objective. But the story work of art needs a formula, even though it always hides it, if it is to stretch us on the rack of suspense. It is an offering that will get past; but will not be likely to create much enthusiasm.

"OLD FORT DEARBORN" (Bison-Universal), Sept. 28.—The subtitle is, "Or Chicago in 1812." This two reel picture tells an exciting story of an Indian uprising at the time of the second war with England. It has many beautifully pictured scenes, a clearly told story with a fair measure of suspense; but the action falls rather flat in its most important scene, the attack upon the retreating troops in the second reel, and what follows is not very convincing. Audiences are apt to forgive such shortcomings as this picture has when, as in this, there is much of the quality that is popular. It is a very fair offering.

"THE OLD ORGANIST" (Rex), Sept. 26.—A village story dramatically presented. The chief characters are the old organist, his daughter and a city man who has come to the country for "his health"; the police would like to get him for burglary. This criminal, of good appearance, and the girl fall in love. Her father distrusts him; but nevertheless, the man compels the girl to leave home with him by threatening to blow out his brains if she doesn't (a rather weak scene) and then her misery begins. The old organist's part is finely conceived and the girl's sad homecoming to find him dead is certainly effective. The acting is highly commendable, being simple and natural. It is a good, substantial offering.

"GETTING MARY MARRIED" (Imp), Sept. 23.—This is a first rate farce comedy, well acted and full of amusing situations. Mary's father, wishing to avoid paying his daughter's marriage expenses, provokes her to elope with her fiancee, and the various situations bringing about this happy end are full of life and fun. A number of novel and unexpected incidents are introduced with splendid effect. Violet Horner plays effectively the part of Mary.

"THE CONFLICT'S END" (Rex), Sept. 22.—A girl reporter runs down a gang of Italian counterfeiters in this spirited melodrama and with unusual ingenuity rescues herself from their toils. The various steps by which she brings on the climax falter sometimes, but the story is interesting and moves quickly.

"THE OLD CLOCK ON THE STAIRS" (Eclair), Sept. 26.—In this is visualized Henry Wadsworth Longfellow's famous poem and its spirit is well preserved in the pictures. There is a strong suggestion conveyed in one scene of children dancing the turkey trot. It is to be feared that Longfellow did not picture them in just that occupation.

"THE CRIMINOLOGIST" (Nestor), Sept. 25.—An accident at the outset of this drama of self-sacrifice is as dramatically executed as its importance demands. By it, one of the rivals for the heroine's hand changes his character for the worse. The other rival, the criminologist, restores it, after some exciting episodes in the West, by a surgical operation. The scenes show a careful selection and the resulting terse action is pleasing.

"PERCY, THE BANDIT" (Nestor), Sept. 27.—This exceptionally good and wholesome burlesque of the wild and wooly West draws its fun from the transference of a ribbon counter clerk from his usual haunts to a bad man's town on the frontier. That Percy acquits himself like a man is a good part of the joke and not the least of it. The touch of extravagance necessary to this type of comedy is admirably added throughout and not overdone.

"THE SHERIFF'S REWARD" (Bison-Universal), Sept. 24.—A pistol fight at a long cabin, the horse play of cowboys as a comic relief and a running fight with a desperado are the chief items of interest in this melodrama of the Far West. An anti-climax adds nothing to the strength of the production. Hard riding and much fighting characterize the action.

"THE LEGEND OF MONTMARTE" (Gem), Sept. 24.—Lovers of the romantic will enjoy these scenes of gaudy Indians, swashbuckling cavaliers and rough pioneers. The legend swings around a sacred tree of which the capricious daughter of the governor general demands a branch as the price of her favor. The spectacular features of the film are stronger than the story.

"THE WORD OF HONOR" (Eclair), Sept. 24.—A number of very dramatic and well acted situations make this film intensely interesting. The character of the villain is not clearly defined at the beginning, but, with this exception, the logic is well carried forward.

"CARL VAN GORDON'S FAMILY" (Nestor), Sept. 23.—A comedy which is somewhat marred by its length.

"A FRIVOLOUS HEART" (Eclair), Sept. 22.—This delicious comedy, in which a girl serves as a guide in man's clothing, is well done and deserves special mention for its picturesque setting, a lake country in Italy. These backgrounds are often lovely.

"THROUGH CHINA" (Eclair), Sept. 22.—On the same film as the above are these views of Pekin and its environs. A picture that will make a wide appeal.

"THE BUTTERFLY" (Majestic), Sept. 24.—Mabel Trunnelle as Nina, the butterfly, and Herbert Prior as Nina's husband carry the burden of this drama across. The excellent acting throughout the entire caste is largely responsible for its success. Nina, whose butterfly disposition is rudely shaken when she is called from a dance to be told that her child has the smallpox, is admirably depicted in the clash between her vanity and the mother instinct, which alternately impel her to avoid her child's bedside and to take up the watch there. That the smallpox turns out to be only a case of measels, serves to round out the story with a pleasant surprise. The production is highly commendable.

"THE GERANIUM" (Reliance), Sept. 25.—Hector Dion plays well the leading male part in this drama of sentimentality. Barring a slight confusion in the latter part, the story is interesting and commands attention from the very beginning.

"BEDELIA AND HER NEIGHBOR" (Reliance), Sept. 25.—On the same film as the above appears this energetically presented farce in which a headlong quarrel of two neighborly but uncompromising and very large women furnishes excitement and fun.

"THE HEART OF THE RED MAN" (Gaumont), Sept. 29.—This drama of the aboriginal American loses much in its European setting, for while its story is convincing, the locale of its action detracts and the costumes are not always correct. Ardent Heart, a brave, who steals cattle to win the daughter of Sitting Bear, is well portrayed.

"PLEASE HELP THE PORE" (Thanhouser), Sept. 29.—Riley Chamberlain as Henry Snaith, a rapacious business man whose heart is softened by the child of one of his creditors, gives his role a splendid character in this very human little play. The film has an added interest in that it presents a colorful May day celebration in Central Park, adroitly woven into the plot. The story has a strong appeal. It will be liked.

"BUT THE GREATEST OF THESE IS CHARITY" (Thanhouser), Sept. 27.—Because her father is brutally uncharitable, his daughter who has been educated in a convent returns there unknown to him and he is led afterward to believe her dead. Thenceforth, devoting his life to charity, he finally discovers her again at a school dedication. The scenes for this were taken from an actual dedication in which appear some splendid views of Cardinal Farley. Mr. Cruze and Marguerite Snow play the leading parts.

"HIS BETTER SELF" (Broncho), Sept. 25.—This film is exceptional for its splendid photography and its unusually clear presentation of character in the leading role, that of an Indian who, thoroughly civilized, reverts to the worst vices of his kind in a groundless fit of jealousy over a white sweetheart. Always a dangerous theme, the story is nevertheless so well presented here that it nowhere offends and it unfolds through spirited, logical action from start to nish. Some novel entrances and unusual composition of pictures are highly commendable. As a whole the production ranks high.

"REAPING THE HARVEST" (Comet), Sept. 23.—This drama points the folly of a girl's hasty marriage with her father's chauffeur. She is happily rescued from her fate at the end by the suicide of her husband whose character looms darkly after the marriage.

"THE FIRING LINE" (101-Bison, N. Y. M. P. Co.), Sept. 27.—A drama of the Civil War in which a first rate battle is presented. It compensates much for a plot which is none too strong and sometimes haltingly developed.

"COHEN COLLECTS A DEBT" (Keystone), Sept. 23.—Two rival clothing dealers manage to give Cohen an opportunity for some unusual and interesting ingenuity when they borrow a thousand dollars of him in this rollicking comedy. The characterizations are good and in the lively antics of the characters is much that is laughable.

"THE WATER NYMPH" (Keystone), Sept. 23.—This comedy of an old and a young lover and a pretty girl divides the film with the foregoing. Some excellent bathing scenes are shown.

"THE HIDDEN TRAIL" (101-Bison, N. Y. M. P. Co.), Sept. 24.—A melodrama of the Wild West which leaves nothing to be desired for those who enjoy bandits, bandit lore and bandit hunting. They kidnap a girl in this case, a doctor leads a sheriff's posse to her rescue and some interesting and novel adventures follow. The production has an admirable setting in a rough mountain country and the photography is praiseworthy.

"A CHILD OF GENIUS" (Great Northern), Sept. 28.—A very good situation is wasted in this film. It might have been produced to make a good sentimental picture; but as a comedy, it is only so so. There are amusing things in it. It doesn't amuse as a whole. It is on the same reel with "A Sly Servant."

INQUIRIES.

NOTE—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of studio addresses, kept up-to-date, will be sent if a stamped and addressed return envelope accompanies the request.

C. G. V.—We do not place the actress in Biograph's "Two Daughters of Eve," but the husband and wife were Henry Walthall and Miss Clair McDowell. The leading woman in "Who Got the Reward," was Miss Vivian Prescott, now with Imp.

R. R. P.—Next time please invest in a sheet of paper, and do not send your questions in on scraps. G. M. Anderson was the Deputy in Essanay's "The Deputy's Love Affair." Henry Stanley was the Sheriff in Melies' "Dodging the Sheriff." Frankie Wade was the child in Selig's "The Child of the Wilderness." Other answers are not available.

DOROTHY D.—You are correct. The reviewer's foot slipped.

MARBLEHEAD—"Zigomar" is a foreign production for which no cast is available. We did not see the red and blue effects, but presume they are due to toning the film. Blue is supposed to be moonlight and red sunset or fire. It is done by soaking the films in one or more baths. Biograph's "The Battle," ran 1048 feet—a one-reel subject slightly over length. The Famous Players Company is an independent concern. "Queen Elizabeth" was released some time ago. Tell your friend to read this paper and keep posted.

C. D. B.—Miss Mabel Normand was the girl in Biograph's "A Dash Through the Clouds." She went up in an aeroplane, but we cannot say how far, as the barograph was not submitted for our inspection.

FRED F.—Your letter has been passed along.

GEO. A.—We have your letter under advisement. We do not think the person mentioned is in the same class with the others. We are looking up the matter. Meantime, don't fall for the traps.

B. F. S.—Many of the licensed and some of the independent companies are reserving story rights to photoplays. If you do not wish to sell the story rights, simply write across the face of your script, "Fiction rights reserved." If the release slip comes to you unmarked by the reservation, mark that the same way and send a letter to the company calling attention to the alteration. It depends on the story whether this reservation will hurt your chances or not. The reservation is made on account of the use of the script in Motion Picture Story Magazine and kindred publications. At the same time we would point out that the use of the same plot in story and photoplay is bad. Bannister Merwin stopped doubling up because he found it better to sell a plot only once.

W. O.—Wilfred Lucas, not Edwin August, was the King in Biograph's "When Kings were the Law," and we have no information on "D." Otherwise the lettered questions are properly stated. The artist's wife in "The Sands O Dee" was Miss Clair McDowell. In "An 'Indian Summer," Bert Hendler was the lover, Miss Mae Marsh the slavey, and William Christie Miller and Miss Kate Bruce the elderly couple.

V. S.—Harry C. Myers had the lead in Lubin's "The Back Window. Miss May Buckley was leading woman.

K. C. Y.—Wilfred Lucas was Bruteforce in Biograph's "Man's Genesis." See above for others. We get no Pathe western casts. Glad you read regularly, to profit by other answers.

E. W.—Miss Myrtle Stedman was the woman lead in Selig's "An Equine Hero." She seems to be "the lady who rode so well," in the same company's "The Whiskey Runners," as she was the only woman cast. The Widow in "As the Fates Decreed," was Miss Kathlyn Williams.

COPE—George C. Stanley was Ignacio and Miss Mary Charleson Juanito in Vitagraph's "The Road to Yesterday."

M. V. L.—If you read this department regularly you should know that you are supposed to obtain the rights to a copyrighted poem from the holder of the copyright. We do not know whether the two poems you mention are still copyrighted or not, but if they are, you may depend upon it that the Kalem and Edison Companies hold written permission. Edison, by the way, pays more for copyrighted stuff than any other producer, with Selig a close second.

F. B. R.—Mrs. William Todd is the only woman cast in "Alkali Ike Plays the Devil." The other player was not identified by the Company.

E. M. B.—Miss Blanche Sweet was the blonde girl in Biograph's "Blind Love."

B. J. W.—The stories of the films published in this paper are from descriptions supplied by the companies in advance of the release. Sometimes they are the synopses of the original author, but more generally are written by press staffs of the various concerns. The dues of the Screen Club will be $12 per year, with an initiation fee of $15. Minors are not eligible. You must not only be 21, but have been in the business six months as player, producer, editor, motion picture journalist, cameraman or similar connection with the producing end.

THAN FAN—Miss Marguerite Snow is not with Kinemacolor, nor has she gone west to join a California stock company. She is not dead nor injured, nor anything else. She is playing for Thanhouser, has been playing for Thanhouser and will continue to play for Thanhouser. The fact that she has been in few of the recent Thanhouser releases has raised a fine crop of rumors, none of which have any real foundation. She has been doing some special work and has not been seen much of late, but may be seen in many soon.

C. R. S.—The name of the mother in Lubin's "The Senorita's Remorse" is not given. Trovio was M. Livingston.

RICHARD ROE—Ask sensible questions. Your first is very much out of order. The motion picture Jay Hunt, is the theatrical Jay Hunt. Bison-101 is not advertised by Universal. There are Bisons and Bisons these days.

E. R.—If that is not merely a bright and beautiful dream we are glad that this department enabled you to identify and talk to William Mason.

P. L. N.—As we understand your proposition, you want to start a vision in a corner of the screen and have it spread until it supplants the other picture. It can be done, but at a greater cost than the results would probably warrant. To displace one scene with another (it is called "fading"), is an elementary trick easily accomplished. It is the enlarging the quarter size vision to the full screen that makes the trouble. Can't you write the scene in the simpler way, letting the second scene displace the first? It seems that this could be done by simply replacing the scene of the present with the scene from the past without any preliminary vision.

R. A. M.—You should be on the ground here in New York if you want to break into the business. The field is overcrowded, but if you are persistent and can show experience you may be able to get work jobbing, playing when you are needed and being paid when you play. If you know the front of the house you might get a chance as local manager somewhere and eventually start a place of your own. It seems to be the better chance for a man who knows both.

"I'M THE GUY."

With Apologies to G. M. Anderson.

By Clyde Martin.

When the "Movies" are packed with youngsters
From the front row to the dome,
And they're watchin' some husky villain
Steal the ranch girl from her home;
And he hides her in an old hut
Where the poor thing's left to die
And some spartan hero saves her:
Just believe me, "I'm the Guy."

Then a way out in the mountains
Where some miners had hard luck
And would have lost all courage
Were it not for his daughter's pluck.
And some handsome cowboy comes along
As if he dropped down from the sky
And kills fifty or sixty claim jumpers:
Stop your kidding, "I'm the Guy."

When a notice has been posted
That the bandit is at large,
And the sheriff asks for deputies
To come over from Red Lodge;
Who is it steals out all alone,
Where beasts of the forest cry,
And brings Dick Dead Eye back to town:
Just ask me, "I'm the Guy."

When the show shop is full of ladies
Admiring a hero brave,
Who several times the week before
Went nobly to his grave.
When they murmer isn't he handsome
And watch and wait and sigh,
And wonder if the original is real:
Excuse me, "I'm the Guy."

The Voltage Question.

IN an excellent English publication, the Bioscope, one signing himself "F. G. W." asks the following questions: "One obtains a shock from touching the positive terminal of an arc lamp by virtue of there being present a pressure of 45 volts. Why, then should one receive a shock by touching the negative terminal, if at that terminal the pressure is not there? My reasoning is that, if there is pressure at both terminals, how can the current flow? Does a voltmeter show the pressure between earth and the negative terminal when the switch is open?" The Bioscope replies to this very interesting question as follows, and inasmuch as it brings up the old question upon which I have previously taken a stand in this department, I quote it here in full:

> Now, "F. G. W.," do you always get a shock from a negative terminal? Certainly not if the negative of your supply is on the neutral of a three-wire d. c. system of supply, or if it is the negative of an ordinary two-wire d. c. supply, as in both of these instances the wire is earthed. Now dealing directly with the first part of your query, that of the arc lamp terminal, it is evident that if you get a shock from the negative terminal of the arc lamp that point is not the negative of the supply. Positive and negative are strange terms. They are in fact relative and should be used only in conjunction with one piece of apparatus. Any one piece of apparatus on an electrical circuit has a positive and a negative terminal. However, where items are connected in series, the negative terminal of one becomes the positive of the other.
> It follows then in such a case that when touching a negative terminal one is also touching a positive. The positive simply indicates the direction of flow, and therefore the higher of two pressures. In a staircase the bottom of one step is the top of another; so the expression top or bottom must be used relative to one particular step. So with electrical apparatus connected in series. Now you will say, how does the current flow? You must remember, "F. G. W.," that pressure alone does not cause a flow; the condition of things must be such that a fall of pressure is rendered possible. Only then does pressure have a direct signification.
> Now electricians get into the habit of referring to pressure when they mean "difference of pressure." In the arc lamp circuit there is a difference of pressure across the arc terminals of about 45 volts, and it is this difference of pressure that causes a current to flow. If the negative terminal is directly connected to the negative of the supply, you will get no shock, but if, on the other hand, it is connected through a resistance to the negative of supply, then the negative of the arc lamp becomes the positive of the resistance, and you will receive a shock to earth dependent upon the voltage drop across the resistance. You see there is pressure at both the positive and negative terminals of the arc lamp, but as that of the former is about 45 volts above that of the latter, a difference of pressure exists, and current flows across the gap between the two carbons. Many operators wonder if it is essential to have the resistance on the positive side of the arc lamp. It is not so, but it is better practice so to have it.
> On, say, a 200 volt arc supply the following is the condition of things: voltage drop across arc lamp 45; across resistance 155. In the event of the arc being connected direct to the positive main, the positive terminal of lamp would have a pressure of 200 volts between it and earth, and the negative terminal 155 volts between it and earth. This is bad practice, as the operator is subject to a shock of either of the above pressures when handling the arc. The better practice is to connect the resistance to the positive main, and the negative terminal of the arc lamp direct to the negative main, and link up the free terminals of resistance arc. Now when the arc is burning there is a pressure of only 45 volts between it and both the negative terminal and earth. Risk of shock is therefore reduced to a minimum. Reference to mechanical conditions frequently impresses upon one's mind the difference between pressure and difference of pressure. At the sea level there is a pressure of the atmosphere equal to nearly 15 lbs. per square inch. This is being exerted on our bodies continuously. Now we know that whenever we have a pressure in a closed vessel it can be put to useful purpose, and if connected by means of a pipe to an engine, the pressure in the vessel, whether of air or steam, will cause the engine to work. It is possible, however, to have a steam boiler with a pressure of 15 lbs. per square inch, yet have no effect on the engine. The reason, of course, is, that the boiler is working against a back pressure of a similar amount in the atmosphere. Actually, of course, at the moment of boiling in an open vessel, steam is always generated at atmospheric pressure.
> Engineers knowing that there is always that intial pressure of 15 lbs., ignore it on their pressure gauges. They, in fact, deal with differences of pressure, and when one sees a boiler gauge reading, say, 100 lbs. per inch, it signifies that the steam is that particular pressure above atmosphere, although it actually has a pressure of practically 115 lbs. This is taken advantage of, and most modern engines exhaust into an artificially formed vacuum caused by condensation of steam, and the engine works as if the boiler pressure were 15 lbs. higher (with the engine exhausting into atmosphere). Now electricians are fortunate; they have no back pressure in the earth to consider (if we may be pardoned for putting it that way); the earth being our standard, and a pressure of 5 volts above is equally as efficacious as a difference of pressure between 1,005 and 1,000. Do not let the magnitude of pressure frighten you. A 100 volt lamp will burn just as nicely, if desired, between two pressures, one of 10,000 volts and the other of 9,900, as between 100 volts and earth potential. Certainly, as we are in such close proximity to the earth, considerably more risk is involved in handling apparatus connected to the first difference-of-pressure than to the second difference-of-pressure, simply because, however, of the risk of a high voltage shock to earth.
> In conclusion, "F. G. W.," volt-meters are generally connected, not to earth, but between the positive and negative terminal. If, however, one lead were connected with earth the volt-meter would indicate the pressure between the positive terminal and earth. Remember that volt-meters record differences of pressure; the difference, in fact, between the two terminals. On a series system a volt-meter may be used to measure the voltage drop across any item connected, simply by attaching the terminals of the volt-meter to those of the piece of apparatus whose voltage drop it is desired to determine.

> A lengthy reply, "F. G. W.," but we know that many men are in difficulty on the subject of the terms "positive" and "negative," and their relation to "pressure."

I started to comment on this proposition and then concluded not to, preferring to leave the matter for discussion by our readers. I have already, on several occasions, expressed my views in this matter, and would be glad to have our electrician-correspondents express their opinion. The subject is one of much interest, though of perhaps not very large practical value. At any rate, I imagine the comments will prove to be very interesting reading.

From Berlin.

Mr. Edward B. Kinsila, Nollendorf Theater, Berlin, Germany, writes:

> I am building here what I hope will be the finest cimenatograph theater in the world, and naturally I want to give the very best picture. The auditorium will be lighted during the showing of the picture, and the screen placed back on a thoroughly darkened stage about 18 feet from the proscenium opening. The throw will be made through the auditorium onto the screen, a distance of about 70 feet. It is my understanding that the best light effect is produced where the amperage is high and the voltage low, or the reverse. Will you be good enough to tell me just what voltage and amperage of direct current will be the very best? I can use up to 220 volts, and any amperage I like. I have no desire to economize on the light. I want the best effect, that is all. I peruse the Projection Department of your journal diligently each week and have therein sought for this information, but, as yet, have failed to find it. If you will be good enough to mail me a copy of your book of instructions to operators, I shall be pleased to remit a money-order for the same upon receipt of bill. I would enclose the order now, but I have no idea of the price, nor can I find it in your magazine.

It, is, I believe, a feather in the cap of this Department that its advice is sought from far off Germany, and by the manager of one of the finest theaters of its capital city. In the first place, like many another manager, our friend Kinsila has a rather hazy idea of the action of electric current and of the electric arc. The direct current projection arc operates at approximately 48 volts—not sometimes, but all the time, that is to say, its voltage is and must be somewhere between 45 and 55, according to the number of amperes used, and other conditions. Regardless of what the line voltage may be, this will be the arc voltage, and the line voltage must, in some way, be reduced to the voltage of the arc. If this is done by rheostatic resistance, then there will be enormous waste, particularly if the voltage be 220 or more. The waste is large enough when the line voltage is 110, but when it is 220 it increases as follows: energy used at the arc will be (taking 48 volts as the average) 48 multiplied by the number of amperes used; whereas the energy wasted in the rheostat will be the line voltage minus 48, multiplied by the number of amperes used, the result, in each case, being watts, thus: if the line voltage is 220 and the amperage 40, then there would be actually used in the production of light at the arc $48 \times 40 = 1{,}920$ watts; whereas the amount of energy wasted in the rheostat would be $220 - 48 = 172$, which multiplied by 40 (the number of amperes) will equal 6,880 watts. You would therefore be wasting 6,880 watts and actually using 1,920 watts. If you are on metered service, you must pay for the waste as well as the energy actually used, hence you will see that rheostatic resistance is enormously wasteful on high voltage. If you can get 110 volt pressure, or less, (but not less than 70 volts) the waste will be comparatively small, but if you must use 220 or more, then I would advise you to install some type of motor generator to reduce the voltage. As to the amperage, I would advise that you use not less than two-tenths of an ampere per square foot of screen, provided, however, you use an ordinary screen. If you use a mirror screen or some effective type of reflecting screen, then you will need less amperage. To sum this whole matter up: your arc voltage is fixed and cannot be altered. The brilliancy of your illumination will depend upon: (a) the number of amperes used; (b) the size of your picture; (c) the kind of screen used; (d) the type of shutter used on your projector; (e) the kind and amount of auditorium lighting; (f) the kind of carbons and the way they are set. I would suggest, friend Kinsila, that you box in the entire stage in black by running black cloth from top and sides of the proscenium opening to the top and sides of the screen, and that the floor be painted dead black. I would also suggest that the picture itself be outlined with black, the same extending into the picture by two or three inches—that is to say, the picture overlapping the black by that distance. As to the Handbook, the price of the new book is $2.50, but it will not be ready for several weeks yet. The entire edition of the old one is exhausted. The Projection Department wishes the new theater every possible success.

Condenser Breakage.

Columbus, Ohio, sends in the following:

> Notice what Lawton, Okla., says about breaking lenses. I went through a similar siege, only it amounted to more than one pair a week. My ventilation is in the rear, over the machine, driving the hot air out, and of course, the cold air comes right up through the lamphouse. In order to prevent the breaking of condensers, I open the door in the rear and the draught comes from the basement. I shut off my fan before shutting off the arc. I have broken but one condenser since, and that was when I failed to shut off the fan first. Enclosed please find my $2.50 for that new Handbook. I bought the old one from a friend and only paid $1.00 for it. Did I sting him or not? I think I did.

Letters of this kind are published as setting forth one possible cause of condenser breakage. This particular phase of the matter has been dealt with in the department many times, but its reiteration occasionally is good, since there are constantly new men coming into the business, and moreover the older ones are prone to forget. Yes, I guess you got your money's worth in the Handbook all right, but you will, by comparison, get three times the value in the new one.

Apprenticeship.

La Crosse, Wis., says he is deeply interested in the moving picture business. He asks what the average salary of a moving picture operator is, and how the profession may be successfully mastered. He says: "I wish to get started, so as to be able to take an active part in the future development of this important educator."

La Crosse is advised that, so far as entering the field of operating is concerned, his best method would be to enter some operating room and serve an apprenticeship of from six months to two years, at the same time studying both the Handbook and the Projection Department of The Moving Picture World, and missing no opportunity to acquire knowledge concerning the art of projection. This is the only way I know of in which operating can be really mastered. As to the matter of La Crosse taking an active interest in what he rightly terms a "great educator," it is to be hoped his interest will prove of benefit to the business, though any important accomplishment in that direction on his part must necessarily be quite a distance away in the future.

Road-Man.

From Monroe, Ga., comes the following:

> Have had about two years' experience, one year of which was spent on the road, making three and six night stands. Of course, you know in road work, a man is handicapped all around. I now have two or three troubles with which I am coming to you and the department, viz.: Am using an Edison Improved Exhibition Model machine with a 45-foot throw. (1) About ⅓ of my picture on the right hand side is out of focus. Have been trying all the ways I know to get it right, but somehow cannot accomplish that much to be desired result. My machine is straight with the screen. Can this trouble be due to the fact that the aperture is not level, or my lens not exactly straight? (2) Sometime since, I had trouble with my arc flaming and sputtering. Don't think it is due to poor ventilation because my vent holes are all open. Am using 33 amperes of 110 volt a. c. Have tried cutting down the space between my condensers and find it kills Mr. Ghost. Now a word about condenser breakage: I had a lot of trouble for a while, but find that by grinding down the edge of my lenses so that they will be perfectly loose in the mount there is much less breakage. I tried cheap lenses and high priced ones and find very little difference.

(1) Be sure that your objective lens has not received a faint finger mark somewhere. It may be invisible as you look through the lens, and still be there. Try scheme suggested in the department recently by loosening the screws which hold the mechanism to the wooden case and placing some washers under one side or the other. You might also try loosening the aperture plate and placing something under one of its edges to raise it slightly. These remedies are only effective when the aperture does not set square with the lens. I think that in one of these things you will find your remedy. However, if you are projecting anything like a large picture, it is possible the fault is inherent in the objective lens. Lenses of very short focal length are notoriously bad. (2) Possibly due to poor carbons or carbons having defective cores. Your arc should not act that way when pulling 33 amperes and the above is the most likely cause. Glad, of course, to know that you appreciate the work that we are trying to do in and through the department.

Theater Opening.

Our old friend, William Herbst, President Circle Amusement Co., Inc., Washington, D. C., writes:

> Inclosed find program of the Circle Theater. You will see by it that we have enlarged our house to nearly double its former capacity. We now seat 500, and can stand 150 more. Good pictures, good operator and seeing that everything is up to the standard is what compelled the enlargement of our theater in order to take care of our patrons. Mr. Eagan, our operator, is still with us and is making good. He sends his kind regards. The next time you visit Washington, don't neglect to give us a call.

We are more than pleased to know that good projection and business-like management has not only enabled, but has forced you to double your capacity but to take care of increased business. There would be a great deal of capacity-doubling if all managers would follow friend Herbst's prescription. The program speaks of the excellent ventilation, heating and indirect lighting system, and then says:

> We wish to call your attention to the superior projection of our picture, due to an expert operator, a Motiograph machine, and the unsurpassed mirror screen—the only one in the city. You may see the same picture elsewhere, but to enjoy the ultra of perfection you must see them in the home of the mirror screen—the Circle Theater.

I am indeed glad to see friend Herbst lay stress upon the importance of an expert operator; also I am glad to know that friend Eagan is making good. I have no doubt but that he will continue to do so. I will surely call at the "Circle" when in Washington, but the date of my next visit to the Capital City is uncertain.

Feature Films Abused.

Sumpter, Ore., writes:

> Enclosed please find P. O. Order for $3.00, my subscription to The Moving Picture World for the year beginning October 1, 1912. I assure you that I consider it the best investment I have ever made. I have many times been overtaken by trouble, as have most operators, but through the aid of the Handbook and the Projection Department, I have invariably overcome and remedied the same. I am anxiously waiting the new issue of the Handbook. Some months ago you promised us some assistance in gaining the requisite electrical knowledge for successful operating, and I, for one, am anxiously awaiting the same. I am glad to note the movement for organizing, and hope my State will soon get in line. It is indeed badly needed, if only to check the exploitation of the feature film. The manufacturers may be abusing it, but they are not a marker to some of the exchanges. However, thanks to The Moving Picture World, the poor devil who still has to buck "commercial" with "alternating" in a store building, is at least being kept well informed.

It is gratifying to know that the Projection Department and Handbook have helped you, Sumpter, and I trust you will continue to find value in the department, and added worth in the new Handbook. As to the abuse of feature films: I would like to have more definite expression of your views on that proposition, at your earliest convenience. If the feature film business is being unduly exploited, to the detriment of the business as a whole, then we should be informed of that fact. As to the assistance you say I promised, I am obliged to admit that I don't know exactly what you refer to. What, with the new Handbook and other things I have been very, very busy, and may have made a promise and have forgotten it. Please tell me Sumpter, just what it was I agreed to do, and, if possible, I will do it.

Nothing Doing.

Grove City, Pa., writes:

> Some time ago I read an article, or comment of yours in the Projection Department, relative to aluminum screens. I have forgotten the exact date upon which the article referred to appeared. However, your statement was to the effect that an aluminum screen, in order to be practical, had to have a matte or pebbled surface, which would lead one to believe that good results could not be had from any other sort of a metallic screen. I do not have the article at hand and cannot quote your exact words, but if my memory serves me right the forgoing is correct. There is only one screen on the market that I know of that is made with this pebbled effect and your comments, while possibly not intended that way, really put the stamp of approval on this particular screen; and I also notice that the maker of the screen is using the article, or a part of it, in his advertising. I have had considerable experience with metallic screens and, after experimenting for more than a year, have finally produced a screen that is practically perfect, having a smooth surface. I have placed samples of the screen referred to above one of mine and cannot see that there is any improvement in having the pebbled or matt surface; further than that I cannot find anything in any of the technical works on light and reflection that would go to show that a matt or pebbled surface would be an improvement. The manufacturer of this screen also claims that his screen does not contain aluminum, but that it is a certain composition. A chemical analysis of a sample of this screen, by a competent chemist, showed absolutely no trace of any other metallic substance at all, except aluminum pure and simple. Neither were there any silicates present in the piece analyzed here. I haven't any particular pick at the fellow who is making the screen in question and I am not writing for publication, unless it is your wish to publish the letter. I do have a lot of respect for you as an authority on such matters, however, and think that you made the statement you did without making a careful investigation. I notice that you are very careful about recommending any article through the columns of the department, and while I believe the screen referred to is very satisfactory, so far as a projecting surface is concerned, I don't like to see any one cause exhibitors to believe that plain, common every-day aluminum is something else, and be able to get away with it to the extent of having you give it your endorsement. Grove City cannot be located on all maps, but if you ever happen to be passing through Pittsburg or Erie and have a half-day to spare, come out and I will show you a good aluminum screen, and see that you get a good dinner as well.

I certainly did make the comment attributed to me in the foregoing letter, but let me say right here, now and most emphatically that it was not designed nor intended as a recommendation of any particular screen. If anybody has used my words in the manner set forth, then they have taken an absolutely unwarranted liberty, except that they would be justified in saying that I recommend and do recommend a rough or matt surface for metallic screens. I made that recommendation, and, until I am convinced that it was wrong, I shall stand by it. The trouble with the smooth surface screens, or at least with those I have seen, is that they have a tendency to "glare," and in some instances to form a sort of haze and create an out-of-focus effect; also if the surface be very smooth there is a tendency for one side of the picture to be darker than the other when one sits a little to one side or the other of the screen. Now I don't profess to be infallible. I have no patience with those who "know it all," and I want it clearly understood that I make no pretence to infallibility in anything. If I am in error in this matter, I will cheerfully acknowledge that fact if it is proven to me, but frankly, Grove City, you will have to show me on this particular proposition.

The advertising of things which are not true, however, is quite another proposition. Still I would not care to accuse anyone of dishonesty without being able to back up the accusation by personal knowledge of the facts. If, however, any manufacturer is doing the thing you charge, then he deserves to be exposed, since his methods are decidedly questionable, regardless of whether the projection service produced is satisfactory or not. In closing let me add that it is possible to so apply aluminum to a smooth surface as to secure a slightly matte effect; and such a screen would meet my requirement in that respect.

Houses Unionized.

Indianapolis, Ind., writes, thanking me for having secured the placing of union operators in two of the Indianapolis theaters, which had formerly been opposed to the union. The letter says: "I assure you your work in this matter has been highly appreciated, and will not be forgotten by Local Union, No. 194."

I am glad to have been of service to Local Union 194, though the matter was a simple one. I merely took the matter up by mail with the owner of the theater, instead of with the manager. I explained things to him and promptly secured his promise to straighten things up with the local. I trust there will be no further trouble and that the Indianapolis local will continue to prosper. Let me advise, however, that it is often much easier to start trouble than it is to stop it, and that trouble is very seldom necessary if things are gone about in the right way. When questions affecting wages, working conditions, etc., arise, select the very best, conservative, cool-headed men you have for your committee, and let this committee carefully remember the fact that many a manager who is abusive when the committee first goes in, is milk and honey before it leaves, provided the committee itself doesn't "fly off the handle." I have myself been on committees dealing with such matters, and have visited managers—on some occasions general managers of railroads—who met us with abuse, loud talk and even profane language. We paid no attention to this, but sat tight until the storm was over. The personal inclination was to knock the man down and argue with him afterwards. We were not there in an individual capacity, however, but representing a body of men, whose bread and butter depended on what we did. We would let the man "blow off"—for that is what it amounted to—and nine times in ten when the surplus "steam" had escaped, we were able to talk business with him and to gain our points, whereas, had we entered into an altercation, no good would have been accomplished, but much damage might have been done. I am writing this not altogether for the benefit of Indianapolis, but rather for the good of all locals. I think you will be able to understand what I am driving at, and let me assure you that if you do, and if you follow the advice offered you may find that many a fight can be avoided and everything be gained that a costly scrap might or might not have secured.

Equipment.

Kalamazoo, Mich., writes:

> We have just opened our new house, the Elite, owned by the Elite Company. The description of our equipment may be interesting. Operating room is built somewhat after the style you advocate, being constructed entirely of metal, with an 18-inch vent through to the roof. The frame is of heavy timber and is lined on the inside with ⅞-inch sheeting, with ¾-inch plaster board, ¾-inch asbestos board and two layers of cabots deadening felt, then covered with No. 20 gauge iron. The outside has a layer of ¾-inch plaster board and a coating of cement plaster one inch thick. The equipment consists of a Power's 6A and Mercury Arc Rectifier, a Chicago Stage Lighting Co. spot light, with B. and H. transformer. Our picture is about 22 feet. At first we used the transformer on the machine, but even on the 60 ampere contact did not get good results, as we use a three wing shutter, and were troubled with a flashing of the light. The managers, Messrs. Waterman and Pohner, wanted the very best to be had and were induced to try a rectifier, which has proven to be quite satisfactory. After installing the rectifier I made some tests with voltmeter and ammeter, and find that with 25 amperes our picture is 50 per cent. brighter, with no flicker or flashing at any speed. On starting the machine the ammeter would show 40 amperes and then settle down to about 25. I connected on what was supposed to be 220 volts, but which proved, by voltmeter test, to be 240, so you can see we are saving in current, and at the same time getting fine pictures. Our screen is made of the preparation furnished by the National Exhibitors, spread on a plastered wall, and I have never seen a better one. Our house seats 1,000 people and we have them every night standing outside waiting to get in. • I am well paid for my work and I get everything I want in the way of supplies. The result is a picture which gets the business, and will compare with any of them. Am now using ⅝ soft carbons above and below. Have been advised to use ¾ above. What do you think of it? We have ordered some; also some ½-inch hard for below. The best results can be obtained with ⅜ above and ½-inch below, but we have to trim so often, and you know every time you start a rectifier it makes the meter hum. I have every word that has ever been written in the old Operators' Column, its successor the Trouble Department and in the Projection Department, and I don't have very many troubles that I cannot find a remedy for by looking through them.

While I don't like a metal-lined operating room, your walls are certainly thoroughly fireproof, but it seems to me like a four-inch hollow tile wall would have been just as good and less expensive. I think you must be mistaken about the ¾-inch asbestos board. Probably it is ⅜. A ¾-inch board would not only be unnecessary but very expensive indeed. An 18-inch vent flue is very good, and is large enough if it is square. If, however, it is round, it might better have been a little larger, though ample enough for ventilation purposes and possibly sufficient to carry off smoke in case of fire. For a 22-foot picture you should have at least 80 amperes a. c. and 90 would be better. Your illumination cannot be very strong on that size picture with 25 amperes d. c. My judgment is that you should have at least 45 amperes, though I am not familiar with the screen finish you have named. Possibly that accounts for the good results at the low amperage. You are indeed fortunate in having such liberal managers, or rather in having managers with common sense and judgment enough to know that it does not pay to skimp on supplies, or on operating room equipment. No, you don't want ¾ carbons above when using 25 amperes of current. ¾ should only be used where the d. c. amperage is more than 45. For 25 amperes, ½-inch cored above and ½-inch cored below is a good combination, though ⅜ solid would be even better below. I don't like cored carbons both above and below when working with d. c. The solid (not "hard," but "solid") lower carbon is in my judgment much better.

Electrical Books.

Santa Ana, Calif., writes:

> In the Projection Department, issue of September 14th, I notice you say every man who is trying to become a good operator ought to study electricity. I have been watching for some one to ask for the names of books which would be of value to an operator—or would you advise a course through some correspondence school. If you would advise a course through a correspondence school, what school would you recommend an operator to take it with? I read the Projection Department and think that every good, live operator should read it, for it is a great help to every one who wants to learn.

As to works on electricity, I wish I did know of some books I could recommend. The trouble is that the knowledge of particular value to the operator is of a peculiar kind and is scattered around through many different books. I have searched in vain for an electrical book which I would recommend to operators, but up-to-date, have not been able to find one. Some books contain one thing and some another, but usually the operator would have to buy a whole book to get about three pages of the information he needs. As to correspondence schools, I could not offer any advice. The American School of Correspondence in Chicago gives an operator's course which you might investigate, but I cannot recommend it, for I don't know what it consists of, nor how much the charge is. The Scranton school gives courses on electricity, but as a general proposition, I have my doubts about correspondence courses. I don't believe that more than one out of every five who take correspondence courses ever complete them. I may be wrong in this, but I don't think I am.

Use a Hammer.

In the issue of September 14th, Council Grove, Kans., tells of condenser breakage—now what do you think of this from Chicago?

> I am operating for an "economical" manager and owner. I have a 50-foot throw, use 30 to 35 amperes d. c., through an adjustable rheostat, with a Power's lamp and Selig lamphouse. With this combination I have an old 6½ condenser, which has been used so long that there are holes in the flat side of the lens. The other lens is a 9½, which is improper I know, but a 6½ would put my arc lamp feed wheel inside the lamphouse. I have a light-colored ghost sometimes. My fan is at my left and back of me and blows between me and the lamp. To try to break this feeble tottering old excuse for a lens, I open the lamphouse door at intermissions; but the fan will not break it, so I may have to use a hammer. I prize your Handbook and the Projection Department very highly. I am awaiting for the arrival of the new book at the western branch office.

That certainly is one swell combination, Chicago, and it ought to be followed up by using an Edison table and a Vitoscope head with a Motiograph seat, hitched on for good measure. The plant could still further be improved if you use an Ingento slide carrier, a Simplex crank and a Lubin shutter. Your manager certainly must be some showman all right. I don't think I would bother with that fan business, but give the hammer a little needed exercise right away. Better send in your $2.50 to the New York office as orders for the new Handbook are coming in, even at this early date, quite rapidly, and they will be filled in the order of their receipt as soon as the book is ready.

Motor-Drive.

Mr. R. M. Farris, proprietor Lyric Theater, Genoa, Neb., writes:

> Am sending picture of the motor drive I have attached to my standard machine and, as far as I have been able to find out, it is something new. I have used it nearly three months and so far it has given excellent results. I use a 10-inch fan motor and regulate the speed by field resistance. I have taken two small knuckles and fastened one to the inside of the flywheel and the other one to the stand and have fastened the two together with a telescope shaft, so I have no up or down and no side strain on the flywheel, and there is no end strain on the flywheel, in fact, there is no strain on the flywheel whatever. I have the stand set in so with the center of the up and down movement of the framing carriage and when the framing lever is clear up or clear down it is only about ¼ inch out of line and the knuckles take care of it fine.

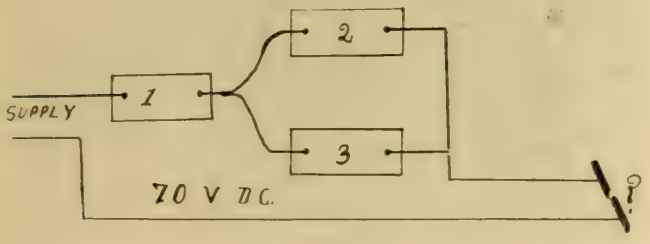
If you have space in the department you can show the brother operators what I have and let them offer their objections.

The drive certainly is unique, neighbor Farris, and it is also effective, though I would suppose those knuckle joints would make considerable noise as soon as they become worn. I should also think the shaft would be in the way of the stereopticon lens. There would, of course, be some lengthening and shortening of the shaft in framing but I see you have taken care of that proposition. The arrangement, of course, gives all the advantage of the flywheel drive, without having the objectionable feature of which I have complained, and this is good, provided excessive noise doesn't develop in the knuckles.

Resistance Problem.

Here is a little resistance problem which was presented to me recently by an operator. It might be interesting for the brothers to figure on: Rheostat No. 1, contains one ohm resistance, rheostat No. 2, contains two ohms resistance, and rheostat No. 3 has three ohms. The connection, you can see for yourself. The current is d. c. and the voltage is 70. What would be the result at the arc?



Engine Size.

San Antonio, Tex., propounds the following:

> I have a 7 k. w., d. c. generator, with which I propose to operate the following: Sixty 16 c. p. incandescents on the front of my theater; fifty 16 c. p. incandescents inside; six 40 watt tungstens and six 18-inch fan motors and the projection arc; voltage 110. What size engine would you advise?

San Antonio's problem is easy of solution, always remembering that 746 watts equal 1 h. p. He has a total of (60 + 50) one hundred and ten 16 c. p. lamps, which would consume 51 watts to the lamp, or a total of 5,610 watts. He also must supply 6 × 40 = 240 watts for his tungstens. He hasn't given the number of amperes he proposes to use at the arc, but assuming this to be 30, it would consume 110 × 30 = 3,300 watts. The fan motors may be neglected, or at a guess we may put them down to 500 watts, which would give a total of 5,610 + 3,300 + 500 + 240 = 9,650 watts, or let us say, in round numbers, 9,700 watts. Now 9,700 watts divided by 746 equals almost 13 h.p.; therefore an engine of 13 brake h.p. would do the work, running right up to capacity. But it is best to figure on only 66⅔ per cent. efficiency, on rated h. p., therefore you should have an engine of almost 18 rated h. p. to pull that load and give a proper reserve. Your dynamo is not large enough by considerable, since it is only 7 k. w. capacity. You will therefore have to cut down on your lights very materially, or get a larger generator. If you are going to use 9½ k. w., you should have a generator of not less than 12 k. w. capacity, and that represents practically 16 h. p. A 12 k. w. generator and an 18 h. p. engine would be a well balanced plant.

VARIETY IN KLEINE'S PROGRAM.

Historical-drama, comedy-drama, farce-comedy, and three travelogues describing the quaint island of Malta in the Mediterranean, a trip to the most important cities of the busy kingdom of Belgium, and the life, dress and customs of the inhabitants of the picturesque old city of Laino in southern Italy, all go to form one of the most interesting programs of releases this house has put out in some time.

In all that critical period of French history, during the memorable wars of the great Napoleon in his vain attempt to satisfy his ambition and conquer the whole of Europe, to rule it as one vast Empire, few figures stand out in bolder relief from among his division commanders and valuable aids than that of Joachim Murat.

In the Cines photodrama of the last fight of the gallant Murat, one-time leader of Napoleon's cavalry forces, and later rewarded by him with the Kingdom of Naples and Sicily, Anthony Novelli gives another of his splendid military characterizations, a thrilling depiction under the title "How a Brave Man Died" (released October 1st), of how this bold and valiant Napoleonic warrior vainly strove to recover his lost throne with the aid of his handful of brave and faithful followers—all that remained of his splendid body of undaunted horsemen.

How he heroically fought against overwhelming odds, and, finally, with hopeless defeat confronting him, refused to desert the pitiful remnant of his undaunted band and take advantage of the opportunity which presented to escape; how he was captured, imprisoned, tried, sentenced and ultimately met his inglorious death are scenes which the film presents with enthralling vividness.

Completing the real beautiful views of the historic and little-known Island of Malta are shown with many interesting studies of the natives and the way they dress and live.

An Eclipse farce-comedy "A Foe to Race Suicide" is scheduled for October 2d, and to describe further than the title does this bright laugh-producer, full of lively action and fun, would be to detract from the pleasure of those who may anticipate viewing it. "A Trip Through Belgium" is the interesting travel subject which completes the reel and after visiting the famous and highly picturesque cities of Brussels, Bruges, Liege and Ostend we are shown the remarkable and unusual manner in which the native fishermen, on horseback, drag from the ocean the toothsome delicacy, shrimp.

"Trifle Not With Love," the Cines comedy-drama to be released October 5th, is intended to be a good-natured warning to the young folks not to meddle frivolously or treat lightly the mandates of the Love God. In this light little drama the popular Cines players, Dorothy Ferreri and Alfred Bracci take the leading parts, ably supported by a selected company. The scenes are laid mostly out of doors amid the beautiful foliage and flowers of a picturesque old garden. Here it is that Belle learns to rue the idle moment in which she so rashly wagered with the girls at her house party that she would have the popular and much-admired but notoriously fickle George worshipping at her feet before the party was over. A short scenic is added to this reel and in Laino we are shown views of one of the oldest, and at the same time, most quaintly beautiful and interesting towns in all ancient southern Italy.

THANHOUSER ADVOCATES NATURAL-LENGTH FILMS.

What will perhaps be the last trade statement of Edwin Thanhouser, who goes into retirement next month, has been made in favor of the natural-length subject. A Thanhouser story entitled "Miss Robinson Crusoe" is released Tuesday, October 8, in 1500 feet instead of the regulation full thousand or two thousand feet, and on it being volunteered that no Independent maker of film stories had ever stopped a story mid-way in a reel, Mr. Thanhouser said:

"It was a matter of being artistic. The market is supposed to want feature stories that occupy full reels. But the producer turned in a little over sixteen hundred feet, all 'live' stuff. With titles and 'padding' the picture could have been stretched to cover two full reels, but I decided to use the 'live' stuff as it stood. With 'cut-outs' there were fifteen hundred feet of it. So we stopped the story there. Then we chopped a thousand foot negative showing specimens from the N. Y. Zoological Park, down to five hundred feet, added it to the number two reel, and so supplied the missing length of film."

"It seems too bad that a producer must sell a story in a given length. It seems too short films or too long films: it means the padding evil. It would be splendid if the manufacturers would make up their minds to let a story just run along naturally, to not only start right, but stop right. The story-action would be helped a lot, and if good stories are the salvation of the business we may all yet get around to natural-length subjects."

Among the Picture Theatres

News and Views of Houses Here and There.

AMERICAN THEATER, BUTTE, MONT.

THE public of Butte, Montana, was promised that within ninety days from the day upon which the construction work on the American Theater began, the Montana Amusement Company of that city would have the theater ready for occupancy. Work was rushed on the house, and in exactly eighty-five days from the start, the American was thrown open to the public.

The building is thoroughly fireproof. It is constructed of steel and brick. The frame work is reinforced concrete with concrete pillars and supporters at intervals of a few feet. This framework is paneled with brick, which bears its own weight and supports only the plaster. The balcony, which affords one-half of the seating capacity of the house and which is equipped in the same lavish manner as the lower floor, is supported on huge steel beams, which rest on the concrete pillars of the framework. More than eighty tons of steel were used in the building. The height of the structure is three stories and affords a "fly" loft over the stage fifty feet in height.

The entire front of the building is studded with lights, and the artistic plaster work gives it the appearance of marble.

American Theater.

As will be seen from the photograph published herewith, there is a mirrored canopy extending for some distance over the sidewalk, which reflects the glow of a large number of electric lights. The base of the box-office is of solid onyx. One section of the onyx is illuminated to give an idea of the variety and beauty of the coloring. The sidewalk in front of the theater is tiled and the name "American" has been worked into the tiling. Big illuminated programs on either side of the lobby indicate to patrons the films which form the current offering.

Upon entering the foyer one is immediately impressed with the magnificence of the interior decorations. On either side great wide stairways of concrete lead to the balcony. The floor of the foyer is of concrete, but it is carpeted with the same rich velvet which covers every aisle in the house. To the right of the foyer is the ladies' retiring room, while to the left is a carriage room where mothers may have their babies and baby carriages checked. The color scheme of the interior of the theater is green and gold, the walls being tinted in green, which blend with the light ceiling. The main floor is saucer shaped, giving a good view of the picture from any part of the house, and there are no pillars in the theater to obstruct the view. The house will seat one thousand people, and the seats are so arranged that when a person comes in after the show is started, he can go to his seat without disturbing those sitting. The lighting throughout the house is perfect and, with the exception of the large suspended dome in the foyer, there is no hanging electrical fixture in the place.

The stage is so large that it will permit of the production of dramas, vaudeville, etc. The proscenium arch, which is draped in heavy green French tapestries, acts as a frame for the picture screen. The singer's booth is also finely draped in expensive tapestries. Sound effects and music for the picture are produced by a pipe organ which cost $8,000.

The operating booth is made of concrete and is the only one in Butte, Montana, that is made of this material. The ventilating system consists of a large eight-foot suction fan, which is said to be able to pump a supply of fresh air for every part of the house in thirty seconds, and a three-foot ventilating fan, acting as a supplementary supply to the large suction fan. The boxes are set just below and in front of the balcony. Each one is carpeted and equipped in a different color scheme.

The officers of the Montana Amusement Company, owners of the American Theater, are: President, Frank T. Bailey; Secretary-Treasurer, George Grombacher, and General Manager, William Cutts. This company also owns and operates a number of other large theaters throughout the state of Montana.

ODD ARCHITECTURAL DESIGN.

As will be seen from the accompanying photograph of the Isis Theater, Sioux City, Iowa, the place is decorated in the Egyptian style. The Isis is the only Western theater that we recall designed in such a style, and it is surely a novelty. Mr. Morris Fox, manager of the house, opened it to the public of Sioux City on February 17th, 1912, and has been doing a good business since that date by showing moving pictures. The Isis has six exits, four wide aisles and ladies' and gents' retiring rooms. The building is fifty feet by one hundred feet and has a seating capacity of 400.

NEW PICTURE THEATER OPENED.

Mr. Roy Morgan is the proprietor of a handsome moving picture and vaudeville theater situated on La Bree Avenue, Thief River Falls, Minn. The building, including the site, cost $12,000. It is constructed of brick, steel and concrete.

The interior of the theater is built with the floor sloping toward the stage. It is 140 feet long, 25 feet wide and 24 feet high, with a seating capacity of 480 persons. The indirect lighting system is used. The interior is entirely devoid of pillars or posts, thereby giving a clear view of the stage or screen from any part of the house.

The ventilating system, which consists of two large exhaust fans directly over the ends of the stage and six smaller fans placed throughout the house, is capable of renewing the air every seven minutes. At the rear of the balcony, which can seat fifty persons, is the operator's booth. Power's No. 6 machine is used to project the pictures.

STARLAND THEATER, WINNIPEG, CANADA.

We print herewith an excellent reproduction of the Starland Theater, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada. This house is one of Canada's finest motion picture theaters and has been in operation since May 3rd, 1911. It has always played to capacity houses even during the summer months. It has a seating capacity of 750 persons, and the general admission prices are ten and twenty-five cents. The projection room is fitted with Motiograph machines. The size of the screen is sixteen feet by twenty-one and a half feet.

Starland Theater.

The house is beautifully decorated in deep rose and bronze with many hanging flower baskets, serving to give it a very attractive appearance. A four-piece orchestra renders the music. Mr. Chris. Graham is the manager of this house. The officers of the Starland, Limited, are Mr. Paul LeMarquand, president; Adrian Le Marquand, secretary and treasurer. E. L. Ledoux is vice-president and W. Ledoux, general manager. The officers are also the directors of the company.

LYRIC THEATER, MOLINE, ILL.

Mr. Lee Woodyatt, manager of the Lyric Theater, 1510 Sixth Avenue, Moline, Ill., states that he has been enjoying good business ever since he opened the Lyric on October 1st, 1910. The house was built expressly for motion pictures and can accommodate 550 people. The building is fitted with all modern improvements and a spacious lobby, as will be seen by the halftone which we print herewith. A piano, a $1,400 Weltz organ and a $5,000 pipe organ furnish the instrumental music. The operating room is made of galvanized iron and the projection battery consists of a Motiograph and Power's No. 6, with Mr. Derr as chief operator and Mr. Magel as Mr. Derr's assistant. Mr. Woodyatt runs a continuous show from 1 a.m. to 11 p.m.

THE TRIANON.

A Handsome Motion Picture Theater at New Orleans Built by Josiah Pearce & Sons.

As the accompanying illustrations will show, the Trianon Theater at New Orleans, La., of which Messrs. Josiah Pearce & Sons are the managers and proprietors, is a very fine motion picture theater. The decorative plaster work on the walls and ceiling can easily be seen to be work done by a master hand, and the mural decorations in the lunates near the top of the side walls were painted by Drysdale, a local artist, and are symbolic of various scenes in Louisiana. The mural decorations over the screen were painted by Thomas of New York, the subject of which is "Music."

The lobby of the Trianon is very pretty indeed as the photograph will attest. It is well illuminated by the many lights and the indirect lighting system is used throughout. This house has a seating capacity of 494 persons. A five-piece orchestra furnishes the musical accompaniment to the three reels of first-run pictures which constitute a show, and for which a price of ten cents is charged. The Trianon opened on January 15th, 1912.

TO BUILD $22,000 PICTURE HOUSE.

F. E. Nemec, president of the Princess Theatre Circuit Company, Inc., St. Cloud Minn., has just completed plans for a moving picture theatre costing $22,000. The house will accommodate seven hundred and work has been started on the building. This is the ninth theatre owned by the Princess Theatre Circuit Company.

MORTON PURCHASES COLONIAL THEATER.

Charles Morton, of Bloomington, Ill., has purchased the Colonial Theater in North Main Street, this city. Guy Strickle, who has been managing the house, will go to Chicago to take a similar position.

GORDON'S OLYMPIA THEATER, BOSTON.

Representing an Investment of One Million Dollars.

The Moving Picture World is pleased to present to its readers a review of the Olympia Theater, together with the cut herewith, because this house is an excellent example of the highest type of theater, especially built for the exploitation of motography and vaudeville. The house is the result of the success that the promoters have attained in Lynn and Gloucester, Mass., where they operate theaters.

The Gordon's Olympia Company has as president Frank J. Howard, known to the trade throughout the country as the original moving picture man, who owned the Licensed exchange in Boston, purchased by the General Film Co. Nathan Gordon, of the Gordon Brothers Amusement Company, operating a chain of houses, is treasurer. The remaining members of the corporation are Arthur E. Lord and Ernest Horstman, of the firm of Lord & Horstman, who own houses in Massachusetts. The Olympia opened on the afternoon of May 6, and is located on Washington Street opposite Boylston, in the very heart of the hotel, business and theatrical centre. In many respects the new playhouse will be found one of the most novel in the country. It has already been called the "House with the Moving Stairs," because fast moving escalators carry patrons to all parts of the house. Mr. C. H. Blackall, the architect of the great majority of Boston's finest public buildings and theaters, feels that the Olympia is one of his best efforts. Beauty, comfort and safety are the dominating notes so far as the construction of the Olympia is concerned. It is of concrete throughout, and in addition to the ordinary exits, has two wide passageways on both sides of the auditorium, one known as Hersey Place, leading into Essex Street, and the other into Harrison Avenue. The Olympia seats 2,500, part of this in fourteen loges on either side of the auditorium, in tiers of three and four.

The color scheme throughout is red, gray and gold. The tapestries and hangings are crimson velvet with gold embroidery. The stage is about the last word in perfection of its detail. The proscenium opening is 32 by 34 feet, and the height of the gridiron is 70 feet. In addition to the escalators the management has provided all possible conveniences for its patrons. The ladies' rooms, the smoking rooms, the "greeting" rooms are found to be admirably equipped, artistically decorated and finely furnished.

The magnificent entrance lobby gives one an excellent idea of the beauty within. As is most appropriate for a building named Olympia, the dominating note is Grecian. Vesper L. George, head of the department of design of the State Normal Art School, is responsible for the splendid and unusually artistic frescoes to be seen in the entrance. On one side, Orpheus is shown playing to the muses, and on the other, the Sun God, driving the chariot of the morning, with Mercury, the winged messenger, between earth and heavens. There are many panels, and symbolic and allegorical designs. The pagoda for the sale of tickets is of Greek design, and in keeping with the general scheme of ornamentation.

It must not be thought that Boston's latest amusement place is a vaudeville theater. It is not. Gordon's Olympia is presenting the strongest and very latest pictures from the Licensed camp, and seven acts of the better class of vaudeville. With its ample resources and unusual facilities, Gordon's Olympia Company can afford to give good vaudeville, and the writer was informed by the President, Mr. Howard, that the public demand for the best will always be very promptly met at the Olympia. It must be remembered that the Olympia seats 2,500, and can afford to give excellent shows on this account. Prices are: every seat in the house, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., ten cents; from 5 p.m. to 10:30 p.m., ten, fifteen and twenty-five cents.

A most excellent executive has been obtained to actively manage this house, in the person of J. E. Comerford, well known in theatrical circles of the East. Motiograph machines have been projecting a high-class picture, and the light has always been sharp and clear when the writer visited the house.

Everyone who knows Mr. Frank Howard, or any other of the owners of the house, in fact, also knows that the Olympia is bound to be a winner. These men are all successful and appreciate the utmost importance of giving the public the "goods." Since its opening, the Olympia has been doing a business that needs the word "tremendous" to adequately describe it. The writer believes the Olympia to be the finest in the New England States, and exhibitors who have journeyed to see this house have all agreed to this. It almost sets up a new standard for a moving picture house. It caused a revolution among playgoers, and is a revelation to nearby exhibitors!

PASTIME THEATER, EUREKA, CAL.

We publish herewith a picture of the Pastime Theater, Eureka, California, showing how the managers, Pettingill & Pettingill, advertised the Selig picture, "The Two Orphans," when they ran it a couple of months ago. The managers say that they showed this picture to four thousand people inside of three days, and the Pastime Theater only seats three hundred at every performance. From seven until nine in the evening it was impossible to pass on the street outside of the Pastime, so thick was the crowd to get into the house. Messrs. Pettingill & Pettingill claim to be the pioneer picture people of Humboldt County, Eureka, Cal., and have been enjoying the fruits of a profitable business ever since their entry into the exhibition business. The Pastime Theater uses a four-piece orchestra and several days are given to the preparation of special music for feature pictures. The Pastime managers are great believers in advertising and run a reader advertisement in both the morning and evening papers of Eureka, using no display at all.

Obrock Has Adventure.

Free-Lance Cameraman Films a Mexican "Fort" and Narrowly Escapes Being Shot at Sunrise.

Herman Obrock, Jr.

Mr. Herman Obrock, Jr., well known as a cameraman, has been doing some "free-lance" work in the Southwest. Writing from Los Angeles, Cal., under date of September 14th, he tells the Moving Picture World of a bit of adventure he had while attempting to get some pictures in Mexico. Here is the story in Mr. Obrock's own words:

"I intended to write to the World before, but traveling around as I do, I always keep putting everything off for a more convenient time. I have just returned from Mexico, where I certainly had an experience. I went by automobile, and penetrated about one hundred miles into the interior, taking pictures along the way of anything that looked interesting. The roads were very bad, almost impassable, but we kept on as I hadn't taken a thing to warrant the journey and felt that I must get a few feet of something important.

"Finally we came to a small clearing which boasted of about twenty huts, so I got out and placed my camera where I could get a panorama of the place. I noticed two old barns standing to one side, which had earth works thrown up around them. The chauffeur guessed that it was meant for a protecting stockade for the inhabitants in case of an attack from the insurgents. We laughed, as it was pretty poor protection for any one.

"In the course of my panorama I took in the barns and had just finished when I saw several men coming out of the largest barn. They stood talking a moment and, as I was through I went back to the machine, put my camera away, when down the road came a 'greaser' running for dear life toward us. He couldn't talk a word of English, but motioned to me to go up to the barn.

"I refused and there was some sort of a scramble, but the chauffeur thought we must be in some sort of trouble, and so I concluded to go and see just what was the matter. I found I was under arrest as a spy, as I had photographed their 'fort.' This being told me by an old villainous looking fellow, who could talk a little English and who swaggered and leered into my face in the most insulting manner, constantly asserting his opinion, first in English and then in Spansh (or whatever they talk), that I was guilty. He further assured me that they shot all spies at sunrise.

"The chauffeur suggested that I offer them my camera, but even in such a position I was loth to give it up, but he brought it from the car and for the next half hour I stood there in the hot sun and tried to explain the mechanism of a moving picture camera to a small crowd of 'savages.' That is exactly what they are, for they are certainly far from civilized.

"At this juncture a 'greaser' drove up in a dilapidated wagon, and asked the 'General' (the worst looking savage of the bunch) what had happened. He proved to be an angel in disguise, for he had seen a moving picture camera before, when he lived in the southern part of California, and as he was a great friend of the 'General' he persuaded him to confiscate the film and let me go. So I lost all the film I had with me, about 800 feet, but I got away with my life and the advice to get out of Mexico quickly, which you may be sure I followed to the letter.

"It surely was a pretty close shave, and I feel mighty glad that I am here to tell the tale. Well, as there is no more to tell this time, I will close for now, hoping this finds you in the best of health."

Universal Wins a Point.

Justice Delany Declines to Grant Application of New York Motion Picture Company for Injunction During Pendency of Action.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company won a point in the New York Supreme Court in a lengthy decision given by Justice Delany on a motion made by the New York Motion Picture Company. The suit between the parties is for the purpose of compelling the Universal Company to deliver up certain contracts and other papers given in May last when negotiations were on for a merger of the New York Motion Picture Company into the Universal Company. The motion before Justice Delany was made by the New York Motion Picture Company and is described in the text of the opinion as "made with the intention of inducing the Court to restrain and prohibit certain acts on the part of the defendant (Universal Company) during the pendency of the action which would interfere with or impede the freedom of action of the plaintiff (New York Motion Picture Company) in its business and rights as they were before the execution of the several contracts referred to, the annulment of which is asked for in its complaint."

The court then recites the probable effect of the granting of the motion on either party to the suit and adds: "If the plaintiff's ultimate success appears to be doubtful the court is constrained to deny such a motion." Justice Delany then reviews the history of the two contending parties prior to the agreement to consolidate their business in order to improve the trade, prevent waste and generally solidify their interests, which it is claimed were needed for profit and standing.

After an exhaustive statement of the negotiations and agreements entered into by the two parties, Justice Delany concludes:

"The most striking feature of the moving papers and exhibits is that not a question, as it seems to me, can be raised as to the sufficiency or the regularity of these transactions so far as set forth in the documentary exhibits, and they of themselves are ample to tell the entire story of the course pursued by the parties. The only transactions which might be considered as vitiating the contract depend on statements of Bauman without the support of any writing incidental to the matter. It must be observed, although it is not necessary to enter into a discussion of it now, that there are several defendants who, it is claimed, were similarly with the plaintiff interested in the undertaking, and who had invested their entire businesses in it, and I do not see that any action on the part of the plaintiff has been taken to do the equities which might be necessary to minimize their damage if the plaintiff is entitled to change his position in this transaction."

The opinion treats at length of the contention of the New York Motion Picture Company that the merger was in restraint of trade. "It is contended that the contracts are void because their tendency is to monopolize and restrain trade," says Justice Delany. "The papers of the moving party referring to the defendant and these transactions frequently use the terms 'combination,' 'scheme,' 'conspiracy,' 'fraudulent arrangement,' and the like, but I have searched for specific allegations which would justify the sinister meaning evidently intended to be given to them without avail."

The Justice concludes: "There appears to be no further need to discuss this motion. It is plain to me that apart from other considerations plaintiff has not shown in its moving papers such a clear right to the relief sought pendente lite as would warrant this court to intervene in behalf with injunctions, which would in all likelihood do irreparable injury to the defendant. Motion denied, with $10 costs."

On the strength of Justice Delany's decision the Universal Film Manufacturing Company announces that it will make application for an injunction restraining the New York Moton Picture Company from using the name "Bison" and "Bison-101" and also from the use of property and plant at Los Angeles, Cal.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE PARSON AND THE MOONSHINER" (Imp).

King Baggot in the role of a parson is just as good as he is as a blacksmith, which goes to show his fine versatility. The picture tells the story of the Tennessee mountains, which have always been a stronghold for moonshiners. Whoever goes there must earn the good will of those illicit whiskey distillers or life will become a burden to him. They are very suspicious of strangers and can make it very unpleasant for anyone who gives the remotest indication of being connected with the "eternal" revenue department of the United States government.

The parson comes to a small Tennessee mountain village. He is a sort of circuit preacher, traveling from one town to another, and he makes his presence known by posting notices and circulating among the villagers. He comes to a cabin where a brother and sister live with their old father. The two men are engaged in the time-honored occupation of moonshining and the girl, like most of their womankind, is throughly in sympathy with them. The brother is a forbidding sort of personage and immediately takes a dislike to the parson, but by the sister he is received with courtesy and faith. Her brother suspects the parson of being a revenue man and determines to drive him out of town. The stalwart young moonshiner attends the parson's first meeting and there proceeds to break it up. The parson and the moonshiner come to blows and the latter is skillfully knocked down and subdued by the parson. His hate for the parson becomes greater while his sister's admiration increases.

One day the parson in roaming about comes across the moonshiners working at their hidden still. But for the young woman's interference the parson would have been shot dead by her brother. Nothing can change the moonshiner's conviction that the parson is a revenue officer. Some days later the parson again goes to the still with the idea of persuading the men to give up their illegal practices, but the men have fled, owing to the presence of revenue men in the vicinity. The officers, finding the parson there, and the fire still burning, seize him and place him under arrest as a moonshiner. Rather than tell on the moonshiners, he submits to arrest and suffers himself to be sentenced to a year's imprisonment. He serves his time in jail and when it expires he returns to the mountain village; this time entirely free of the suspicion of being a government agent, and for the very pleasant purpose of marrying the pretty sister of the moonshiner.

This is the first picture to be produced for the Imp Company by Mr. James Kirkwood. The acting is strong and rugged, in conformity to the local conditions of a Tennessee village. The characterization is very apt and the work of Miss Jane Fearnley as the moonshiner's sister is particularly well done.

"LOVE ON TOUGH LUCK RANCH" (Essanay).

Here is a humorous Western comedy production, produced by G. M. Anderson, and relating the trials and tribulations of a young couple who elope, and the annoyances that beset them before the knot is finally tied. Augustus Carney, world-famous for his great comic role of Alkali Ike, is featured in another big laugh portrayal.

Old Jim Parsons, a ranchman, desires that his pretty daughter, Ethel, shall marry old man Carney, a little dried up, weazened character, old enough to be her grandfather. Ethel refuses point blank to marry Carney, even at her father's pleading. One morning a young stranger, Horace Vinton, while riding along the trail, is thrown from his horse and sustains a broken arm. Ethel and her father find him and Ethel cares for him at the ranchhouse until he recovers. Of course the young people fall in love at sight, and old Carney finds them with heads together one day, summons Parsons and young Vinton is ordered away from the ranch. Ethel manages to smuggle a note to him begging him to rescue her from Carney. Vinton replies by saying he will elope with her that night. The elopement takes place as per schedule that evening and the young people get a fine start of old Parsons and Carney, who attempt to overtake them in Carney's "ottermobile." Quite naturally the machine takes a notion to run over a few yards of rail fence, lands in the ditch and sticks there. So while the marriage knot is being tied, the old men perspire and rave and cuss each other deep and long as they tug and strain at getting the machine back into the road. Of course the young Newly-Weds run across them on the way back, the simplest thing in the world is to hitch the disabled machine to the back of the rig and, after receiving parental blessing, the youngsters start back slowly to the ranch in the moonlight dragging the auto behind them in which the two old hornets buzz and threaten to sting each other at every step.

There is hardly a foot of film throughout this production that does not absolutely reek with hearty laughter. The antics of the two old men in the chase after the elopers are ludicrous in the extreme, and the exciting dash of the young couple down the road while the parson gallops between them reading the marriage ceremony is fun personified.

Augustus Carney plays "old man Carney" in his accustomed laughable way, and comes very near equaling his Alkali Ike character for real humor. Arthur Mackley is old Parsons, Mrs. Todd is his wife and the young people who portray the elopers are splendid in their respective characters. The film is booked for release October 5th.

"GHOSTS" (Essanay).

This is one of the most beautiful and novel dramatic subjects booked by the Essanay Company for the month of October. It is magnificently portrayed and has been staged with infinite care and attention to the slightest detail. The plot is unique.

Colonel de Valpeau, an aged French gentleman, lives alone with his faithful negro servant, Zeno, in the wonderful old mansion that has passed through generation after generation. Being pressed for ready funds the Colonel is refused a loan on the hereditary estate, and is threatened with eviction. Zeno now hits upon a plan whereby his master may remain in the great house without his presence being discovered, and shows the Colonel a sliding panel in the dining room wall that leads to a small garret inside. The Dixons, wealthy social climbers, now purchase the place, but firmly believe it is haunted when they find the table has been used by a mysterious company during the night, and catch sight of the sliding panel shutting behind Zeno as he goes to his master. Therefore, they leave in a fright and refuse to purchase the mansion, which is immediately taken by Dr. Trueman, a wealthy physician.

One evening as the Doctor and his friends are chatting they catch Zeno coming through the panel and force him to disclose the secret. Upon learning of the Colonel's identity the Doctor writes him a note saying the old estate is his as long as he lives and that his presence is desired that evening. Finding the old fashioned costume of one of his French ancestors in a trunk, the Colonel dons it and is presented to the gentlemen in the great dining room. However, the strain of proposing a toast to his King is too much for the aged man, and he dies, while the faithful Zeno sobs out his grief across the wasted body.

The production is replete with splendid scenic settings that are extraordinary in quaint beauty. The exterior of the old mansion is a masterpiece of architecture, the massive porch-columns rising in their white majesty as the wonderful moonlight floods the scene revealing the old Colonel in consultation with his faithful Zeno. A number of very fine light effects are introduced throughout the film, and a rich toning makes it charming in high lights and shadows.

Norman Macdonald portrays the character of Colonel de Valpeau with a splendid depth of sincerity and the many little touches that characterize the eccentricities of the aged. Joseph Allen renders a fine study of Zeno, the old negro servant. Frank Dayton plays Dr. Trueman. Charles Huntington and Eleanor Blanchard are the social climbers. E. H. Calvert is the real estate broker and Howard Missimer and William Bailey are Trueman's friends. The production is booked for release October 1st.

REALISTIC STAGE FIGHT SCENE.

The writer has seen many a stage fight of a sensational nature, but he has never witnessed a more perfectly registered or more thrilling struggle scene than is shown in Eclair's "A Choice by Accident."

It is enacted by Geo. Larkin and Richard Sterling, both of whom have belonged to the acrobatic stage before their entry into the photoplay.

Scene from "A Choice by Accident" (Eclair).

Chairs are swung at one another, a magnificently set room is completely demolished. The utter absence of any signs of acting or saving one another gives one the impression that the two boys are making a sort of grudge fight out of it.

The story is most entertaining and the film should be a hot favorite with those who crave sensational excitement.

ANOTHER BIG UNIVERSAL BISON.

Producer Frank E. Montgomery has turned out another big two-reel subject, which will be released by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company on October 5. "When Uncle Sam Was Young" is the title, and the story of the play takes in such pre-Revolutionary incidents as the Boston Tea Party and the agitation over the imposition of the tea tax. The battle of Bunker Hill is another feature of the story. The picture will make a hit with those who love rapidity of action and large scenes. One of the finest bits put out in a month by anyone is the portrayal of the Tea Party. Nearly the entire broadside of a great ship is presented to the spectator, and the casks are coming over the side in rapid succession, flashes showing the work of destruction on shipboard. There is a story of love and politics running through the two reels.

Another big two-reel subject will soon follow the "Uncle Sam" picture. It is "Early Days in the West." Both of these features are notable for the fine photography.

FIRST AUSTRALIAN PICTURE STUDIO.

The first motion picture studio to be erected in Australia was opened with imposing formalities at Rushcutter's Bay, Sydney, N. S. W., on Friday, August 16, 1912. Spencer's Pictures, Ltd., is the company which owns and will operate the new studio and factory.

"THE GIRL IN THE NEXT ROOM" (Crystal).

Pearl White, a photoplay favorite of long standing, appears to very good advantage in this bright little comedy by the Crystal Company. Miss White has recently been acquired by the Crystal Company and is perhaps better known as a Pathe player of ingenue roles, during a successful engagement of two years with that company. In this picture she appears as a pajama girl and is altogether fascinating and clever. The comedy hinges upon a mix-up in the interchange of letters from a sister to her brother and from the brother to a male friend. Pearl writes her brother, telling him that she expects to be in town over night and for him to leave the key of his apartment with the janitor in order that she may get in to sleep in his spare room. About the same time her brother writes to a friend to come and spend the night at his apartment in order that they may both get up early the next morning to go on a fishing trip that they have planned. The boy who took Pearl's letter to mail had a hole in his pocket and the missive was lost. The brother's letter, however, was delivered to his friend with the information that the key would be left with the janitor. Pearl arrives there first and proceeds to make herself at home. In a short space of time she is clad in her pajamas, ready to retire. She goes to bed in the next room and presently a young man enters the sitting room, somewhat the worse for wine. He prepares to retire, but in looking for his pajamas he opens the wrong grip and there finds a quantity of dainty feminine wearing apparel.

Meanwhile Pearl, peeping through the doorway, sees the strange man and supposes him to be a burglar. For a weapon of defense she resorts to that formidable feminine implement known as a hatpin. She leads the intruder a merry dance, jabbing him frequently with the hatpin until he beats a hasty retreat from the flat and Pearl retires again in triumph.

The brother, returning home, finds his friend marooned in the hallway clad only in his pajamas and hears a strange tale of a female who ran him out. Of course the brother does not expect his sister, not having received her letter, and he enters the apartment with his friend determined to find out what is what. He knocks upon Pearl's door with an air of considerable authority and the next moment receives a large pitcher full of water, mostly in his countenance, the balance being distributed elsewhere about his person. The two friends are in a deep quandary until the young lady comes forth with further preparation for offense and defense. Then the brother is obliged to explain to his bewildered friend that the young lady is his sister. It is a jolly little picture built for laughing purposes only and is quite certain to succeed immensely along those lines.

On the same reel is another Crystal comedy entitled, "The Man from the North Pole." It tells of an Arctic explorer and his friend. The friend decides to return to America from the polar regions and his companion thinks it a good idea to give him a letter of introduction to some of his friends in America, letting them know that all is well with him. He explains in the letter that they will find his friend a good fellow if they choose to overlook his eccentricities.

About the time the returned explorer is preparing to visit his companion's friends, a lunatic makes his escape from an asylum and is pursued by the guards. In his flight the madman comes across a stalled automobile with a man underneath it, trying to fix the mechanism. The man under the car happens to be the returned Arctic voyager. In the car is a suit of polar bearskin with a hood formed from the head of the animal. The lunatic seizes this strange costume, runs to the bushes and hastily gets inside of it. When the guards come upon him he emerges from the bushes as a polar bear and they take to their heels. Being hungry, and close to the house where the explorer is expected for dinner, the madman goes there in search of food. The host and his wife, expecting an eccentric explorer treat the lunatic warmly when he appears in the polar bear garb, supposing, of course, that such a dress is only a part of his eccentric personality.

Scene from "The Man from the North Pole" (Crystal).

In a short time the lunatic is dining with the host and hostess. While the visitor's table manners are awfully bad, the elderly couple ascribe them also to his eccentricity. However, his eccentricity takes a dangerous turn when he develops a sudden dislike for the butler and pursues him around the house and yard with a large carving knife. The butler takes refuge in a tree. The lunatic returns to the house and immediately forms a dislike for the elderly host. Hence the elderly host is trotted a lively heat by a polar bear with a long carving knife in his paw. Having treed the old man, the insane guest takes a violent fancy to the old lady and corners her in another part of the house. But he is not violent with her; he only insists upon the old lady doing the "Turkey Trot" with him. They do the "Turkey Trot" until the old lady is almost exhausted, when the butler and the host rush in to her assistance. The crazy man then compels the butler and the elderly gentleman to do the Turkey Trot together, which they do with more or less grace until the real Arctic explorer bursts into the room with the two guards, who hustle the lunatic back to the asylum.

There is no doubt that this comedy will be a roaring success. The situations are extremely ludicrous, and, taken as a whole, this first release of the Crystal Company, as a contributor to the Universal program, will establish it as one of the best. The pictures were produced under the direction of Mr. J. A. Golden, who is long experienced in the picture making business. The mechanical part of the work is well up to the mark and perhaps a little better.

"A DAY IN JERUSALEM" (Kalem).

This film depicting life in the most interesting ancient city of the world is very helpful. To the average reader Jerusalem is somewhat familiar, books and illustrated lectures have made many of its scenes additionally familiar; but the Kalem pictures have given life to all that was inanimate before.

"The Jews' Wailing Place" is an old picture in its cold stillness, but as a living picture it becomes more than new. The attitudes and movements of the devotees imparts a thorough knowledge of how the orthodox worshippers still continue in the manner of the devotions of their forefathers for many generations The "Jews Studying the Talmud" also continues to show how great a hold ancestral teachings has on succeeding generations. The student of these pictures cannot fail to be impressed with the non-progressiveness of tradition (which may be truth bound up) as in contrast with the advancing and progressive nature of truth free, unbound and unchecked. The interesting picture of the aged man and woman who give every evidence to the truth of the statement, "We have always lived in Jerusalem," emphasizes the fact that whatever of modernism may be changing, old Jerusalem the inhabitants continue bound to the habits and appearances of many generations.

"The Candle Maker" by the wayside is another link with the past, both in appearance and commercially, and helps to center an interest in the present-day Jerusalem.

The procession of Mohammedans celebrating "The Feast of Moses" is a strange blending of the traditional and fanatical in weird religious rites. While the sword dancers are seen, the only lack to making the picture real is that we fail to hear the "howling" or monotonous sounds we know are pouring forth in guttered tones. "A Day in Jerusalem" brings former things to life, and as if a real visit to the "city of the great king" had been made in person one could scarcely be more repaid.

"HIS COUNTRY BEFORE ALL" (C. G. P. C.).

Have you ever invented anything? No? Well, if you invented a powerful explosive, the possession of which would make a nation invincible in war, and your own government offered you $5,000 for it, would you sell it to Germany for $50,000? This situation arises and the question is decided in "His Country Before All," a C. G. P. C. film which will be released October 12th.

Arthur Herbert, a young inventor, is dreaming of the time when the government accepts his formula for making a deadly explosive and the fortune paid him for it will place him in a position to ask the hand of Alice Nevin, the daughter of a wealthy banker. One day a letter comes to him containing an offer of $5,000, which is much less than he had hoped to receive. The young fellow is deeply disappointed and his spirit at low ebb when an emissary from a foreign government calls upon him with an offer of $50,000. The possessor of the invention will, of course, have a telling advantage in war and Herbert is transfixed between his love for Alice and his love for his country. Patriotism triumphs, and he tells the foreigner that his (Herbert's) country must have the secret of the invention no matter what they offer. When this ultimatum is delivered, the stranger removes his disguise and reveals himself—Alice's father. He congratulates Arthur upon his patriotic decision and declares himself anxious to secure a man with such a loyal heart as his son-in-law.

Scene from "His Country Before All" (C. G. P. C.)

GENERAL FILM COMPANY RELEASES FORTY-TWO PER WEEK.

Claiming a great demand for Licensed pictures, the General Film Company announces an increase of six pictures weekly to meet that demand, which brings its total release up to forty-two pictures weekly. In addition to the regular releases the General Film Company is releasing interesting educational and other features of unusual interest. Some of the big multiple reel features are of extraordinary character. Probably the theaters using the General Film Company's service were never so popular as they are at the present time because of the great variety of pictures the exhibitors are enabled to flash on the screen.

It is said that two expert camera men will accompany a party of scientists who will visit Crater Lake, Ore., in October. It is said that sixty of the leading scientists of the world will make the trip.

D'ORSAY TO THE FORE!

Your bally Lawrence D'Orsay, English comedian, has been seen in film plays invariably dancing to the time of the bad man's .44 for the edification of the cowboys gathered about Dynamite Dan's bar. But not until now has he been given a sufficiently serious part to enable him to prove that he possesses brains without going to the bother of exhibiting same, b'jove! In the flying "A" release for Wednesday, October 16th, however, the monocled individual with the weeping willow on his upper lip turns the tables in an exciting sleuthing story entitled "The Border Detective." He happens to know that in this day of wheels within wheels the trail of the law breaker is likely to lead to the door of the law maker, so when the border customs officers call upon his detective talent to solve the opium smuggling mysteries he comes upon the trial of one of the very customs officials, employed by the government to help prevent smuggling.

Scene from "The Border Detective" (American).

Of course, the customs men have tried to track the culprit, and one of them, whose sweetheart is his aid, bids fair to capture the smuggler. But just when success seems in his grasp the crafty villain turns the tables and the customs man lands in his toils. The cockney individual gets his grand opportunity for a display of genuine nerve, when he utilizes the opportunity to rescue the honest official from a burning cabin. This also leads to the capture of the smuggler, after which it is definitely proven that the blooming deuced cut-up with the broad accent is not at all a Londoner, but a border detective, in disguise! Which might also explain how it comes that so queer appearing a personage can have brains.

MOROCCO'S SULTAN IN PICTURES.

A most interesting account of how Moulay-Hafid, the Sultan of Morocco, was initiated into the mysteries of the cinematograph in the Vincennes studio of the Pathe Company is rendered in the "Le Cinema" of recent date. The Sultan was received by Mr. Charles Pathe and a corps of artists and employees. In the directorial offices decorated in white and gold the Sultan was introduced to all the notables of the studio. In the course of his visit he was taken to a moving picture machine and given a first lesson by an expert operator. The Arabian monarch in his picturesque costume setting off his swarthy but manly form made a striking spectacle, as he turned the crank of the machine. The Sultan inspected every part of the vast plant. He left an autographic appreciation of his visit on the Pathe stationery.

PICTURES POPULAR IN TURKEY.

In no country has the motion picture gained more prestige and popularity than in Italy. This is largely due to the war between Italy and Turkey. The cinematograph has left the newspaper far behind in giving the people at home quick and authentic records of doings at the front, and reproducing the principal points of interest made interesting in the course of the war. It is announced that very fine views have been taken of the passage of the Italian fleet through the Dardanelles. But little has been known of this romantic and historic spot, as the Turkish government has jealously guarded all approaches to the famous passage for centuries. The popularity of the motion picture in Italy is well attested by the growth of trade journalism. There are now almost a dozen journals devoted either wholly or in part to cinematography, while only two years ago there were but two or three.

ROBERT FRAZER IN ECLAIR SUBJECT.

The accompanying illustration shows Robt. Frazer in the chief role of the Eclair release for October 8th, "All on Account of a Ring." It is understood that Mr. Frazer is leaving the photoplay to take the name part in "The Millionaire" which will soon take to the road. Mr. Frazer has won a host of admirers during his connection with Eclair and there are many who will be loath to see him leave the screen. But it is a case of a previous contract for he had signed with Mr. Savage before going with Eclair.

"AMONGST MANY LOVES" (C. G. P. C.).

Comedy is the element of entertainment most in demand and, with Wiffles, the noted fun-maker, playing the lead, C. G. P. C. presents another farce of merit, which will be released October 8th. Wiffles has secured a position as bookkeeper in a millinery establishment owned by two ladies, the Fright Sisters, who certainly look their name. They are both possessed of a strong affection for Mr. Wiffles. The shop is as busy as a bee hive with a swarm of pretty girls busily engaged in constructing elaborate bonnets. Wiffles finds it difficult to work in this atmosphere, preferring to sit all day and gaze at one little maid with whom he has fallen in love. He is continually interrupted in this dreaming by the two proprietresses, both madly in love with him, who constitute a continuous parade to the bookkeeper's desk. He is frightfully bored by their efforts to please him, continually looking past them at the maid of his choice. Finally, the two sisters quarrel over the peculiar prize and in the melee which follows Wiffles takes his girl away from her work and off to the church. The story affords numerous opportunities for a clever comedian to display his art and none of these situations are allowed to pass without yielding their limit of mirth. The film can be had on October 8th.

On the same reel is shown "The Trianon—Versailles," being some beautifully colored views of the little palace in which the famous Marie Antoinette made her home.

"BILLY" GARWOOD, MOTOR MANIAC.

The latest of picture favorites to buy an automobile is "Billy" Garwood, who served all last year with Thanhouser Company, then quit them for a season in theatrical "stock" and came back to New Rochelle a few months ago. Garwood tells the World that he misses the applause at the footlights, but that they don't buy automobiles "in stock." He says that players the country over are awaking to the fact that picture performing can be made an artistic as well as a financial success. Garwood has seen as many weeks of consecutive service with Thanhouser Company as any of the many veterans in the production department of that organization.

ALKALI IKE STUNG (Oct. 8).—This time Alkali Ike is dissatisfied with his boarding house and, when the buxom Sollie, a two hundred-pound widow arrives in town, buys out Tony's place and nails up cards announcing that it will be opened on the following Tuesday as a first-class boarding house. Alkali is the first to see it, rushes back and begins to lay plans for switching at once. The following Tuesday morning Alkali is found hard at work stuffing everything he possesses into a big barrel. Clothes, chaps, old boots, the flour bin, bottles of good booze and other things too numerous to mention are piled into the barrel while the dust flies in clouds. Meanwhile, all the other boys in town, with their belongings on their backs, meet before the door of the new boarding house and clamor for admission. One by one Sollie admits them, and when Alkali finally takes leave of his irate landlady and arrives at the new place, he finds the rooms all gone and is refused shelter for the night. Mad as a hornet he hangs around and, after supper, sees Sollie and the boys in the parlor singing and having a hilarious time. Determined to win her with music, Alkali secures his trusty banjo and serenades outside her window, but gets a pail of water deluged over him for his pains. Wet and mad he tramps back to his old place, but is met by his former landlady, who throws him out bodily and deposits his belongings in the water barrel. Realizing that the world is "agin" him, Alkali retreats to the sanctity of the stable and, with his saddle for a pillow and a prayer in his heart that the horse won't tramp on him, finds rest at last.

THE REBELLION OF MANDY (Oct. 9).—Old Joshua Hardman, a grouchy farmer, refuses to fit up his place with any of the conveniences of life despite his wealth. Consequently his wife and daughter slave in the old-fashioned kitchen with old-fashioned utensils and the food is none too good. Joshua kicks and complains and, at last, a rebellion is started by Mandy, his daughter. She proposes to her mother that they move out and leave Joshua to himself. Mrs. Hardman, in desperation, agrees, and they leave the old farm while Joshua is off to church. Returning he is informed by the hands that dinner is not ready, stamps into the house to rage and fume and discovers the note telling him how matters stand. With bull-headed cussedness Joshua tries to prepare the dinner himself, makes an awful mess of things and causes a mutiny on the part of the hired men, who refuse absolutely to work until he gets his wife and daughter back. Realizing his predicament Joshua hitches up and locates them at the Widow Bradley's farm. He finds them happy and contented in a modern kitchen with modern utensils, and they refuse to return with him until he promises them a duplicate of the kitchen and anything else they may desire. The following Sunday morning it is a happy family indeed that grace the festive board on the old farm, for the kitchen is bright and shining with everything new and peace reigns supreme once more.

THE END OF THE FEUD (Oct. 10).—Two feudal clans, the Parkers and Simpsons, have been at war for years in the Kentucky hills, but it is not until Jim Parker, the eldest son, returns from college with different ideas that matters are brought to a swift culmination. Jim meets Rose Simpson and it is a case of love at first sight between the two. The days go by and this love is ripened into true affection. Dave Simpson discovers the lovers one day and it is only the jamming of his gun that prevents the instant murder of Jim. Dave informs his father and the furious mountaineer hides Rose in a lonely cave in the hills with Dave standing guard over her, just to prevent her marrying Jim. Jim learns of her whereabouts, narrowly escapes a bullet from Dave's gun, gains access to the cave through a secret passage, overpowers Dave and rides away with Rose to be married. Years later Jim and Rose live in the hills with their pretty baby girl, Millie. One morning Millie wanders away from her mother and accidentally strays into the very clearing in which the Simpsons and Parkers are battling each other from behind trees. Seeing the baby a truce is called and the discovery is made that Millie is their own flesh and blood. Fondling the little one in their arms the two old feudists glare at each other, but finally Parker declares his willingness to call the feud off and offers his hand. Simpson agrees and hostilities are ended forever in the sweet smile of Millie.

NOT ON THE CIRCUS PROGRAM (Oct. 11).—The big circus arrives in town and Frank Mason takes his little five-year-old boy, Billy, to see the street parade. The passing of a little bareback rider attracts Mason's attention and, that evening, he makes it a point to have the owner introduce him. Charmed with her gay spirit Mason lavishes costly presents upon her and showers her with attention. Marcel, a clown, has loved the little rider, and begs her to give Mason up, but she refuses. Next afternoon little Billy is taken shopping by the maid and wanders away from in front of the store. Terror-stricken at finding Billy missing, the maid rushes home and a frantic search at once begins. That night, after the performance, Marcel and the girl are talking in the dressing room when little Billy wanders in. Realizing he is lost they set out to find his home. After a long search they are directed to the house and are brought face to face with Mason, who has kept the fact that he is married a secret. Without exposing the unprincipled scoundrel they return little Billy to Mrs. Mason and, when she has turned away, Mason's gifts are thrown at his feet by the heart-broken little bare-back rider as Marcel leads her from the room. Once outside she realizes the depth of the clown's love and goes to his arms as he gives thanks for her salvation.

THE SHOTGUN RANCHMAN (Oct. 12).—Jake Nixon, a fiery old ranchman, is cheated out of his dinner one day when the cook burns her hand severely and instantly drives his cowboys from their meal, declaring that if he can't eat, no one else can. The Widow Morgan now applies at the ranch and endeavors to rent a deserted shack, but Nixon declares the place is not for women and brats and drives her away. Finding that his cowboys take an interest in the widow and child, Nixon discharges them all and endeavors to run things himself. His attempts to get his own meals are ludicrous and he is drawing water from the well one morning when the widow's little baby girl toddles on and the ranchman's reformation begins. She makes him take her in his arms and stiffens him with amazement when she kisses him tenderly on the cheek as she runs away. From that moment Nixon's nature changes, and two weeks later finds him waiting anxiously for the appearance of the baby he has grown to love. She doesn't come and he goes to the widow's shack, only to learn that the child is dangerously ill. Dashing into town he returns with the doctor and the little one is pulled through only after a hard battle. Night after night finds Nixon watching through the long hours at her bedside and, on her complete recovery, he immediately moves the widow into his ranchhouse, declaring the shack will be good enough for an old bear like himself. That evening he is musing to himself when the door opens and the little one enters. "My mamma says supper is ready," she lisps and Nixon, with a prayer of joy in his heart, takes her in his strong arms as he starts for the ranchhouse. The reformation is complete.

THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER (Oct. 7).—Wild roses are the joy of Ethel Borsdon's life. She had two suitors, Harry Myers and Charley Gunner. She is a capricious miss, teases them and laughs at both. One day, Ethel, in her daily search, discovers a bush bearing two roses on the top of a steep precipice that rises from the sea. On the same day Harry and Charley sit beside her. Ethel points out the cliff and declares that she will favor the one who secures for her one of the white roses at the top. The men take her seriously. Gunner reaches the top ahead of Harry. Just as his arm is stretched forth to grasp the rose, Harry's hand extends over the edge of the cliff, and a moment later he is facing his rival on the brink. They quarrel and a desperate struggle is precipitated. Myers loses his foot-hold and plunges over the cliff, his hand grasps one of the roses, and he takes it down with him. Gunner, panic-stricken at the accident, yields to a cowardly instinct, leaves Harry to his fate and returns to Ethel. He presents the rose to her and claims her love. But there is something in his look that strikes Ethel strangely. She asks where Harry is. Gunner says he does not know. Then she catches sight of a splotch of blood, staining the white petals of the flower. Her suspicions are aroused. Gunner averts his gaze. Ethel forces the truth from him, and rushes wildly toward the village to find men to go to the rescue. She reaches a number of fishermen at work, and they hasten to Harry's rescue. They find him stunned, bleeding, lying on a ledge half way up the face of the precipice. One of the sturdy fishermen ascends the cliff, ties a rope under Harry's shoulders and lowers him into the eager hands below. Left alone by Ethel, Gunner, in a frenzy of fear, determines to kill himself. He pulls a revolver from his pocket, places it to his temple. At that moment he sees the party returning and rushes to Harry's home, where he learns that he is not fatally hurt. Harry extends his hand in forgiveness. Later, when Harry is convalescent, he carries the white rose, now faded, to Ethel. He claims her as his wife and this time the little maid accepts him.

THE MOONSHINER'S DAUGHTER (Oct. 8).—Zeb Roth, a sprightly young Virginia beau of the country type, divides his time between making moonshine whiskey and love to Lucy, the pretty daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Blackwell. A letter is received from a rich cousin of the Blackwells, inviting Lucy to pay them a visit in their city home. When Zeb hears of it he is opposed to his sweetheart going, but little attention is paid to him, and Lucy departs. She has a splendid time during the visit and in addition, manages to fall in love with Harold Noyes, a wealthy young artist. She returns to her little country home engaged to Harold. The day after Lucy's return Zeb comes to see her, and learns of her engagement. Zeb declares that if Harold ever comes within reach of him he will kill him. A week later, Harold does come to see his little country lassie and is seen by Zeb, who hastens to the nearby still and tells the illicit operators that a revenue officer has come to the country. Heading the reckless band, Zeb comes upon Harold as he is returning to the hotel where he is stopping, accompanied by Lucy, who has walked part way home with him. Despite Lucy's wild protests, they tie her to a tree and depart with Harold. The whistle of an on-coming train suggests a fiendish means of getting rid of their supposed enemy to the moonshiners. Harold is bound to the railroad track and left to his fate. By a mighty effort Lucy frees herself, and rushing to Harold's rescue, tears him from underneath the wheels of the onrushing monster. At their quiet and simple wedding which follows a week later, there is one uninvited guest. Zeb, who unexpectedly and greatly to his surprise, departs from the scene in the hands of a sheriff.

THE PLAYERS (Oct. 10).—Ormi Hawley, at an artist's reception, meets Edwin August, a young actor, and they fall in love. August induces Mr. White, the manager of the company, to give Miss Hawley a part in the new play. She is engaged and makes a big hit. She, however, soon discovers that Jean Gale, one of the company, is in love with August and, quitting the organization, takes another engagement. Mr. Moore, a millionaire, is in love with Miss Hawley, and begs her to marry him and she accepts. August reads the notice in the papers. One night August becomes ill before going on the stage and during the performance he falls in a faint and is taken home. The doctor, who is summoned, gives out the report to the papers that his case is serious. The millionaire's wife reads it at the breakfast table and she persuades her husband to go with her to the sick man's home. They go together and arrive just in time for a last parting and the actor dies in his loved one's arms.

THE GERMAN SINGERS (Oct. 11).—Shutz, Bungarten and Schnitz, with their families, leave their home town to visit the Saengerfest. Thinking they are excellent singers, they decide to enter the hall and allow the public to hear their golden voices singing the songs of the fatherland. On entering they are confronted by members of the Saengerfest, who, on hearing their voices on the outside, think differently and eject them from the building. But Shutz, Bungarten and Schnitz, thinking the public should not miss the opportunity of hearing choice singing, decide to start a Saengerfest of their own, which they do. The terrible noise arouses a neighborhood of peaceful citizens who, not being able to stand it any longer, drive them from the streets, they finding refuge in a park. They get renewed inspiration through a German band playing national airs, and immediately proceed to emit golden notes, but the German band becoming extremely annoyed, seek the aid of two policemen who give chase, drive them from the park into a freight yard, capture them, lock them in a box car and ship them back to their home town.

MR. FIXIT (Oct. 11).—Mr. Fixit has an idea that the people in this world are not practical, that instead of sending for a plumber or other mechanics, they should fix it themselves. So his object in life is to help others out of their troubles and, as a natural consequence, he always makes a botch and gets the worst of it in the end. Some men are blasting, the blast failing to go off, he runs up and says he will fix it. The charge explodes, blowing him high in the air. The remains are

THE CRINGER (Oct. 12).—A young sheep herder, whom his associates had dubbed "The Cringer," because of his physical fear, was one day attending to a sick kid out of his flock, when some cowboys, who are a sheep herder's natural enemy, came upon him. They make sport of him and rough him up a bit, leaving him cringing on the ground. They then ride into town and have a blow-out. Muck Peters, the owner of the sheep, a renowned character for stinginess and brutality, happens to see the cringer nursing the goat and in his anger strikes the cringer to the ground. The cringer drags himself away from him back to his sheep, where he tells Joe, a stoic herder, of his mishaps and is again knocked to the ground by his fellow herder. His thoughts are not so much of himself as for the poor little kid. When he thinks of the suffering of the little goat his whole nature transforms itself. He determines to show them that he fears nothing. He steals one of his employer's horses, rides into a mountain city, sets fire to a barn, so that the citizens may be drawn thereto by the conflagration, enters a bank and holds it up, the cashier being alone as the remainder of the clerks have gone to the fire. He falls an easy prey to the cringer, but presses a button to the Protective Service Office, thereby giving the alarm that the bank is in danger. The cringer gets away with a sack of money, but through a daughter of the captain of the Protective Service, who runs to the fire and warns the cowpunchers that the bank has been robbed, the cringer is soon compelled to take to cover in an old abandoned log hut, where he makes his last stand, and he compels the posse to shoot him, dying with the words on his lips, "I wasn't afraid."

BIOGRAPH.

THE LINE AT HOGAN'S (Oct. 7).—Hogan and McNabb are rivals for the hand of the Widow O'Shaughnessy, but Hogan is the favored suitor and the day of the wedding is set. However, a clothesline in Hogan's yard aids fate in conspiring against Mrs. O'Shaughnessy becoming Mrs. Hogan. At first Hogan curses the line, but later he is made to realize that it was a blessing in disguise.

A TEN-KARAT HERO (Oct. 7).—The town bully has everybody whipped without striking a blow. He simply pulled a big bluff, and when Zeke Thompson passed with his sweetheart they were both forced to suffer an insult from the bully because Zeke was afraid to ignore the bully's reputation and resent the insult. Of course, his sweetheart stamps him a coward and jilts him, but Zeke makes good in a most novel way and the bully's laurels lose their verdure.

THE CHIEF'S BLANKET (Oct. 10).—When the Great Chief's body is placed before the funeral pile by his mourning braves, his sacred blanket is covered over it and a sentinel left to watch that this, his last resting place, is not desecrated. The tribe has just departed for their village when a mountain outlaw appears and succeeds in stealing the blanket, having given the sentinel doctored whiskey. When the Indians discover this they exile the unfaithful sentinel until he can recover the blanket. About this time there comes to the mountains a little family, which is forced into the location on account of the ill health of the old father. They meet the outlaw, who is stricken ill, and dying, he presents the sacred blanket to the wife. Later on, the blanket is seen in her possession by the exiled Indian and he vows to recover it. In his attempt he yields his life, but the blanket is returned to the tribe through his sacrifice.

JUDGMENT OF THE SEA (Oct. 17).—Captain Dixon, receiving a message from the custom office that there is a band of smugglers operating on the islands off the coast, bids his wife good-bye and goes on the assignment. At the island wharf he inquires of an old sailor for the most quiet lodgings in the place and is led to a hut where lives an elderly man, supposedly a fisherman, and his pretty daughter, Bess. The old man does not at first want to admit the stranger, but the sight of handsome board money quickly changes his mind. Bess leads him to his room. That night Dixon is still unpacking when a noise downstairs arouses his suspicions. He goes down and discovers the old man leaving the house stealthily with several rough-looking strangers. He follows them and learns that they are the smugglers for whom he was sent in quest, and Bess' father the leader of them. Hurrying back to the house, the captain discovers Bess waving a red lantern in the window (the secret danger signal), for she had heard him depart and suspected his mission. She had also learned through a photograph in his room that he was married. Dixon attempts to remove the light, but is forced by Bess at the point of a revolver to wave it. The smuggler and Ned, Bess' lover, heed the signal, and, returning, put Dixon out of the house. The latter, however has formed a wild desire for Bess and, meeting her on the beach, attempts to force his love on her. Failing in this he sends her a note to the purport that if she does not meet him on the pier at once he will expose her father. Bess' love for her aged father is stronger than anything else, so she sadly decides to sacrifice herself to save his life. She had not left the house long, however, when her father and Ned find Dixon's vile note. They hurry to the pier in time to frustrate the captain's designs, but in the melee, the officer falls into the sea.

ECLIPSE.

A ROMAN'S CONVERSION (Oct. 9).—In the days of ancient Rome, her mighty armies were commanded by leaders brave and powerful, but also cruel and relentless to the conquered. Titus, one of these fearless generals, becomes infatuated with the beauty of Cecilia, a Christian slave, and endeavors in every way to win her love, but she steadfastly refuses him.

One day, a messenger informs Titus that the Christians are holding secret meetings, nightly, in the quarries situated east of the city. In great wrath, he orders that they be arrested and brought before him. When they enter his presence, he notices Cecilia among them, and asks her to renounce her faith, promising to spare her life. Upon her refusal, he orders them to be cast into a dungeon to await execution. That night, however, the Roman general has a terrible dream, in which he sees the victims put to death by his order, and amongst them Cecilia. Frantic at what he has done, he awakes and orders that they again be bought before him. After testing their faith, and devotion to their belief, he acknowledges that his proud spirit is not equal to theirs, and is converted. He then orders their release and they depart rejoicing.

THROUGH DERBYSHIRE DALES (Oct. 9).—We are taken on a trip through this delightful country, located in the central part of England, and are thus able to gain many impressions of typical English rural life.

CINES.

THE WONDER POWDERS (Oct. 8).—Alas! Leah is lazy. One day, her father sees a traveling quack selling a wonderful powder guaranteed to put energy into a log of wood. He buys a package, and goes off confident that at last he has something to rouse his daughter. Unfortunately, however, Leah sees him make the purchase, and also buys a powder that has the contrary effect. Upon reaching home the clever girl manages to get possession of her father's purchase, and places the contents in the cups of her father and mother.

The tea is poured and the innocent victims are soon rushing about in an extraordinary manner. At last Leah takes pity upon them and administers a dose of the other powder which causes them to sink down exhausted. It is sad to relate that Leah is still lazy, but her parents let her entirely alone.

ARTISTIC GLASS WORK (Oct. 8).—The process of glass blowing is always very interesting and instructive to witness. In the film we are shown expert workmen making some of the most delicate and beautiful designs in vases, dishes, and ornaments of all kinds.

A GLIMPSE OF SICILY (Oct. 8).—A beautiful travelogue subject spreading before us some of the deslightful mountain scenery of Sicily. We are taken on a trip up Mount Pellegrino from where we are able to get many entrancing panoramic views of the city of Palermo and the bay.

TRAILING THE COUNTERFEITERS (Oct. 12).—Informed that a gang of counterfeiters is operating in the neighborhood, Detective Briggs starts out to investigate. Disguised as a farmhand, he secures work at Porter's farm, the place under suspicion. While toiling in the field, he is attracted by Rose, the farmer's pretty daughter, and endeavors to win her heart. She soon yields to his attentions and they pledge eternal love. One day the detective hears talk of a mysterious castle and investigating discovers the location of the coiner's den. Although in love with the girl and hesitating to betray her family, Briggs determines to do his duty and reports his discovery at headquarters. The den is raided, but in the ensuing struggle Rose's brother is slain.

Five years later, Briggs and a companion happen to be hunting in the district. Overtaken by darkness, they are forced to ask shelter at a farmhouse, which, as fate wills it, is tenanted by Rose and her newly acquired husband. Rose recognizes Briggs and tells her husband, who decides that the two travelers must die. After overpowering them, the farmer commands Rose to make sure of Briggs' identity. Looking the detective straight in the face, she is torn between the desire for revenge and the old love; she hesitates, and then simply answers that she has been mistaken, and the lives of the two men are spared.

HOW THE CAUSE WAS WON (Oct. 7).—Major Clarke is the president of a large steel works. His son, Tom, returns from college with ideas of leisure which do not coincide with the hardworking "governor," and the "governor" tells Tom that he must get out and hustle for himself. Tom, who is not really a bad fellow at all, has heard much of the hardships of employees in the steel works. He conceals his identity and becomes a steel worker. While here, Tom becomes engaged to Mabel, the daughter of "Old Man" Moody, a Civil War veteran, and one of the oldest employees of the works. This transpires just at the time that the steel workers plan a strike on account of a notice of reduction of wages, signed by Major Clarke. Mabel learns of Tom's identity, and, believing him a spy, working in the interests of his father, denounces him.

At this juncture a vote is called for to decide whether the men shall strike or not. There is considerable dissension in the ranks of the workers themselves, and half hold out against the strike. Tom Clarke casts the deciding vote in favor of the strike, as he believes that the workers' grievances are real.

The strikers are meeting around a stand erected for their speakers, when Major Clarke pushes his way through the hostile throng to demand a hearing of the employer's side of the case. The strikers start a demonstration against him, when "Old Man" Moody recognizes Clarke as one of his old Civil War regimental mates. Moody jumps up and quiets the strikers. The appeal to the Americanism of all present is so strong that the turbulent men become friendly and the "Big Boss" signs an agreement granting all they ask.

Tom and Mabel are, of course, reconciled, and the "governor" is convinced that his son is the "real thing."

A MOTORCYCLE ADVENTURE (Oct. 8).—Dave Martin, who has lately become a motorcycle enthusiast, leaves his Denver home on his machine for a visit with his uncle and cousin who live in the Rockies. His uncle, William Martin, leaves his daughter, Lillian, at the mountain cabin, while he goes to bait his bear trap. While tramping through the woods he accidently falls into an old abandoned mine and is unable to get out again. A half-breed, in the meantime has stopped at the cabin door, and after begging a drink of water from Lillian, he insults her. She slams the door in his face. Out of fear for her father, who he expects to return at any moment, the half-breed postpones his revenge until later. He finds the hat and gun of Martin and discovers his accident. With the knowledge that the old man is safely out of the way, he returns to the cabin and induces Lillian to go with him up into the mountains, on the explanation that she will see her father. After he has her in his possession he again attempts his assaults, but his career as a bad man is short-lived. The unexpected entrnce of Dave at the cabin and his failure to find his relatives there, starts that young man upon a tour of investigation. After a most thrilling ride on his motorcycle along the sky-line drive and an exchange of bullets he manages to recover his cousin without injury to her. Soon afterward he discovers his uncle, and the little family are once more reunited.

WHEN EDITH PLAYED JUDGE AND JURY (Oct. 9).—When Edith's mother died her aunt and uncle, living on the Wyoming range, invited her to live with them. Soon after her arrival she rode out alone and, becoming bewildered by the vast rolling expanse of country, became lost. To her delight, she found a small cabin and a man, whose gentlemanly manners contrasted strangely with his surroundings. He gravely offered to see her home and, on her arrival under his escort, she was even more surprised at the cool formality with which he was received. Their interest in each other grew, and he called so often that her aunt finally found it necessary to tell her that he was a squawman. Horrified and heart-broken she taxed him with it. Now, at last, the quiet, reserved, almost hermit-like man realized the coldness and suspicion of his treatment, and told her the story of how, when a student at Harvard a girl had jilted him and he came West to forget. How in a Navajo village, a man had cruelly beaten and lamed dis daughter, and he had bought her. How she had been with him ever since, the only one in whom he had found truth and fidelity. At the end he said, "Now you are my judge and jury. What is your verdict?" Of course her verdict was "Not Guilty," and she realized the folly of her suspicions when she saw the sweet face, but terribly maimed and bent form of the little squaw.

EUCHRED (Oct. 10).—Tom Saunders, of the Internal Revenue Service, acting on instructions from headquarters, is endeavoring to locate a band of smugglers on a Pacific Coast island. He is attracted by the suspicious actions of a party of fishermen, headed by old Joe Devonne, but is unable to obtain actual proof of their guilt. He meets the old man's daughter, and for business purposes, makes love to her. By a trick he learns through her, of the hiding place of the smugglers and their hoard, and tackles the men single-handed. He is overpowered in a struggle in which the old man is shot in the arm. He is bound and taken aboard their sloop, and the supposition is that they will make short work of the spy. The girl, to whom the love-making has been a very serious matter, struggles between love for the man and filial duty and fears for his life. She swims out to the yawl and releases Tom. Tom, released, still has his duty to perform and tracks the old man to his shack, discovers him hiding under a stack of nets and is about to make the arrest when the girl turns the tables on him in a most surprising manner.

AN INTERNATIONAL ROMANCE (Oct. 11).—The little town of Fleissengen, in far off Germany, is the pleasant locale chosen for "The International Romance." The month is July. Fatigued by their long tramp through the woods, Fritz and his party of hunter friends pause at "Zur Wald Huett'n," a typical mountain inn. The inn is conducted by Gottfriend who is the fathey of Lena. And Lena is the prepossessing sweetheart of Fritz. While Lena goes for refreshing steins of beer, her rival, "Tony," enters the room and coaxes Fritz to give her a sprig of Edelweiss which he is wearing in his coat lapel. Unfortunately for Lena's peace of mind, she turns just in time to witness Fritz's unconscious deceit. "Tony" escapes with the coveted flower, while Lena is left in tears. Soon afterward a party of rich American tourists stop at the inn for luncheon. Billy West, a handsome young fellow in the party immediately becomes captivated with Lena, and she, in a spirit of revenge, flirts openly with him. Fritz is immediately consumed with an ungovernable passion and decides to have it out with the young American. He does so, much to the amazement and chagrin of the young American. When he understands the true status of affairs, however, he effects a reconciliation between the estranged lovers and everything is once more in keeping with the tranquil peacefulness of the locality.

VITAGRAPH.

THE GODMOTHER (Oct. 8).—Everything is arranged by Dick and his college chums to have their sweethearts from the city, with their chaperone, visit them to spend the day. At the 11th hour, the boys receive a telephone message from the girls informing them that their chaperone has disappointed them, and they will not be able to come. The boys are disconsolate. While they are deploring the matter, their tailor, the ninth part of a man, enters. Struck with a sudden idea, they seize him and compel him to impersonate Dick's godmother. His protests are useless. Dick calls up the girls and tells them his godmother has kindly consented to chaperone the party and they can come with perfect propriety, to the dinner which they have prepared for them. The young rascals then instruct the tailor to pretend he is deaf and dumb. The girls come at the expected hour, but are very much surprised when they see Dick's funny little godmother. In order to give the young people a chance to enjoy themselves, the godmother begs to be excused for a few minutes. The tailor goes into Dick's bedroom, takes off his disguise, stuffing the dress with pillows, making a dummy which he sets on the bed. He then hides and waits results. The girls grow impatient when the godmother does not return and they all go to look for her. Entering Dick's room, they see her, as they think, sitting on the bed. On nearing the dummy, the girls discover the boys' deception and indignantly leave them and start for home. At the railroad station, the girls begin to grasp the humor of the whole affair, their hearts soften and they phone the boys their forgiveness.

WHEN PERSISTENCY AND OBSTINACY MEET (Oct. 9).—Henry Ford deeply loves Dorothy Ellis, but he cannot abide her poodle dog. She resents his reflections upon her pet. They quarrel and Henry in a "peeve" leaves. Later, he repents his hasty action and telephones Dorothy, who refuses to answer the 'phone, telling her maid to do so. This is a complete setback to Henry, but he still persists, writing her a letter which she returns to him unanswered. He is not discouraged. He sees his sweetheart in a millinery store making a purchase, which is later delivered to her home by the expressman. Henry follows the man and induces him to exchange costumes with him and allow him to deliver the package. He is admitted to Dorothy's home. At first she does not recognize him in his disguise, but when she does, she treats him as she would any common carrier. He is repulsed. He keeps at it: this time following her to the theater, masquerading as a woman. No use, she will have nothing to do with him. He tries again, attending a reception to which he and Dorothy have been invited. She arrives at the place d'affair in her limousine, and he in his conveyance, at the same time. After the reception, he tries to attract Dorothy's attention and secure a dance with her, but she obstinately resists him. He determines upon a coup. He gives the attendant who announces the conveyances at the door, his limousine check for Dorothy's, which he found on the sidewalk. Both their vehicles are alike. Henry gets in his machine and hides under the lap robes. When Dorothy comes out of the mansion to return home, she enters his machine, supposing it to be her own. After they have proceed some distance, Henry bobs out from under the robes and reveals himself. Dorothy at first will not listen to his overtures for forgiveness, but finally she weakens and cannot help but acknowledge his persistency as proof positive of his firm and lasting love for her.

AS FATE WOULD HAVE IT (Oct. 10).—While working his way through college, George Reynolds meets Edith Pond. Their acquaintance ripens into love. At the end of his college days, George returns home, with a promise from Edith that she will marry him.

Shortly after their parting, Edith's father is taken suddenly sick and on his death-bed, he implores Edith to marry Ralph Leslie. To please her father, she consents. She writes George, telling him of her engagement and asking him to forgive and forget her. Heart broken, he suddenly makes up his mind to leave his home town and establish himself in a large city, where he will be forgotten and engrossed with his profession. Just after he leaves home, a telegram comes from Edith, in which she states that he has broken her engagement with Leslie and requesting George to come to her at once. His parents, not knowing where he has gone, put the telegram aside until his return, which is five years later. His father and mother have almost given him up as dead. They are overjoyed to see him again, and to learn that he is a successful and prominent lawyer, in the metropolis. When his father hands him the telegram, which has been awaiting him, George loses no time in calling upon Edith. Imagine his surprise and delight in finding her unmarried, like himself, still awaiting his coming.

HER FATHER'S HAT (Oct. 11).—Just in time to catch the train and intent upon the fulfilment of a business engagement, Harry Smith seats himself and places his hat on the seat beside him. A stout lady enters the car and sits directly down upon his hat. She apologizes and gives Harry her card. She lives in the very city where he is going. She tells him to buy himself a new hat and send the bill to her. Reaching his destination, he enters a restaurant, gets something to eat, and after paying his bill, finds he has but 25 cents left. He is in desperate straits and writes a note to Mrs. Stone asking her to lend him $5.00 to get a new hat. Mrs. Stone is not at home. Her daughter opens the note, takes an old high hat of her father's and delivers it to Harry. She finds him a very agreeable fellow and invites him home, where he can wait for her mother's return. Harry feels that the hat which is altogether too large for him, looks disgraceful and suggests that she walk in front of him as he does not wish to make her look ridiculous. On the way Harry is arrested. As she is entering her house, her father and mother come along in a carriage. She tells them of her experience.

They go in search of Harry and find him at the Station House. Mr Stone secures his release. Harry learns that Mr. Stone is a member of the very firm he came to the city to do business with. He is invited home by Mr. and Mrs. Stone and placed in a seat in their carriage beside their daughter, very much to his delight. She grabs her father's hat from Harry's hand and slams it on his head. This creates considerable merriment and when they reach the Stone residence everybody is happy and all are the best of friends.

MAMMOTH LIFE-SAVERS (Oct. 11).—The circus is in town and the keepers of the elephants decide to take their charges to Coney Island and give them a bath. They enter the water and some very nice and fastidious ladies complain to the officers in charge of the beach that the elephants are interfering with their baths and polluting the waters. One fussy old girl is particularly emphatic in her denunciation of the beasts. The circus men are just withdrawing with their elephants when a scream of distress is heard from the water. The fussy old girl, who goes out beyond her depth, is seized with the cramps. She cries for help. The elephants immediately come to her rescue and one of them saves her from a watery grave, thus returning good for evil and heaping coals of fire upon her head.

WHEN CALIFORNIA WAS YOUNG (Oct. 12).—In days of old, when California was young, it was rife with Spanish chivalry and romance. No story more beautiful and pathetic has ever been known or conceived than the love of Rosita Peroso and Jose Martina. Rosita and Jose are of the peasantry, poor and happy. The youth loves the girl most dearly. She is beautiful and does not escape the notice of the knights of the Spanish nobility, who would fain make love to her. One, Don Sylvia, of the Spanish Guards, passing through California, charmed by Rosita's beauty, makes love to her, hastily proposes and seals their betrothal with one of his jeweled decorations. Jose, who has heard of Don Sylvia, and marks his attention to Rosita, jealousy warns her against him and angrily takes the jewel from her and throws it away. The girl tells her parents of her promise to marry Don and they are pleased, giving no heed to Jose, when he tells them that the Don is a profligate and libertine. They are so elated with the match they drive Jose from their presence and tell him he must not see their daughter again. She is to mary a grand gentleman.

In despair and broken hearted, Jose makes his way to the neighboring monastery and takes the vow and becomes a member of the order of ascetics. Rosita marries Don Sylvia and from that time he shows himself in his true colors. Through an insult to the Spanish governor, he loses his position as commander of the Guard, throw himself recklessly into dissipation, abuses his wife and, while in a beastly state of intoxication and a fit of rage drops dead from heart-failure. Rosita flees to the monastery and falls exhausted in the presence of the godly monks, who administer to her as she passes away. Jose, now Brother Joseph, is a silent witness of the sad ending of the woman, whom he would have given his life to protect and care for. Jose, instructed by the abbe, sorrowfully and prayerfully tolls the monastery bell, sounding the death knell of a departed soul entering the realms of eternal peace.

from the doctor that he has become a victim of this dread disease. He staggers blindly to the home of his fiancee and there is enacted that pitiable scene where two young lives stand upon the brink of separation, forced apart by the cruel hands of the disease. Fond eyes look into eyes for the last time perhaps, and dear hands clasp dear hands and the victim goes pathetically to his little hall bedroom to face the black future with only one gleam of hope—the Union Printers' Home, Colorado Springs, Colo.

He travels westward and arrives at the institution founded for these sad victims of whom he has become one. After a careful examination by the physician he is introduced to his nurse and assigned to his tent. The strong willing hands of the hospital nurse slowly but surely push back the impending doom and bring him back from the edge of the grave into the bright future of happy, healthy life.

During these hours of patient watching something steals in unexpectedly and that something is the love of a woman for a man. But the sad part of it all is that the eyes of the man never see the beauty of the woman who saves his life, but look far from the gray mountains towards the East, where waits and watches the woman he loves and longs to marry. The nobility of the woman who saved his life is brought forth when she learns of the dear one far away, writes to her and bids her come and claim the man who loves her. And when the victim, no longer a victim, steps forth into the world again, he is clasped in the arms of the woman he loves.

UNDER FALSE COLORS (Oct. 8).—Mrs. Goodwin had nothing but money and social aspirations. She wanter her daughter, Marcia to marry a nobleman. Marcia coldly refused Jack Brookfield, who is only a rich man. Brookfield, humiliated, determines to be avenged. The same evening, strolling home through the park, he chances to prevent a young man from committing suicide. The man, Vonberg, is a young German of refined appearance, completely discouraged and out of employment. Brookfield takes him to his apartment, where he makes this proposal: Vonberg is to pose as a German count and become engaged to Marcia Goodwin. He, Brookfield, will then expose Vonberg and Marcia, he believes, in her humiliation, will return to him. Vonberg signs a written agreement to do all this for five thousand dollars.

Affairs progress until the unexpected happens. Vonberg forgets to pretend and really falls in love with Marcia, and she, forgetting not to be sentimental, falls in love with him. Vonberg's honor now asserts itself and he tells Brookfield that he cannot keep up the deception. Brookfield insists. Vonberg is compelled to go on. He proposes to Marcia and is accepted. Now Brookfield gives the story of the imposter count to the newspapers. That afternoon, and before the newspapers are out, Vonberg comes to take Marcia out automobiling. She suddenly gets an idea and naively suggests that it would be a nice car to elope in. Vonberg is tempted. Why not? He at least really loves Marcia, while Brookfield's only object in marrying her is revenge. This last thought determines him and they motor quietly to a country church and are married.

They return to Marcia's home only to be confronted by her parents, who point to the newspaper. Vonberg humbly admits his guilt and Brookfield suggests that it might be worse. Marcia silently holds out her wedding ring. Brookfield is baffled, perplexed and furious. Marcia's father bids Vonberg to go. He starts, then stops and pours forth the whole miserable story about his poverty, how Brookfield tempted him, his love, his weakness and then ceasing, he turns to go, but Marcia stops him and turning on her parents, denounces them for bringing her up to satisfy their own selfish ambitions for which they are now paying the price. They are awed and cowered by the strength and truth of her denunciation and Marcia seemingly possessed of a new strength, yearningly holds out her arms to the one being who ever really loved her.

UNCLE MUN AND THE MINISTER (Oct. 9).—The story begins in Mr. Nankivel's country studio where he and little Dot are sojourning during the warm spell and incidentally doing some trick drawing for the edification of a country friend. Unable to secure the services of a model, he makes himself up to represent that eccentric and funny individual known as Uncle Mun and standing before a large mirror he draws his life-sized reflection. While thus engaged, the village minister enters and excitingly describes the capsizing of a canoe on the lake, precipitating a young man and his sweetheart, the minister's daughter, to the bottom.

Uncle Mun now rushes to the rescue with a goodly number of villagers following in his wake. Arriving at the lake-side, he discovers, by the aid of a tented at the bottom of the lake. This discovery causes no end of excitement among the villagers, who are at a loss to know how to bring the young couple back among them, until Uncle Mun strikes the brilliant idea of demolishing the dam with the wonderful spy-glass, the young couple, quite conaid of a huge cannon.

After firing into the dam we see the water rush out with great force until the lake is drained. The young couple are now seen on the muddy bottom of the lake making their way towards the bank, wading through mud knee-deep. They are soon in the embrace of their friends and are married there and then by the minister, while Uncle Mun is pronounced the hero of the hour and carried home on the shoulders of the villagers.

THE CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE (Oct. 11).—There are eighteen short minutes in the history of Great Britain that will live as long as the war drum is sounded and the shrill trumpet calls to arms. These historical moments are recorded in the annals of time on October 25th, in the year 1854, at the hour of ten o'clock, on the blood-stained field of Balaklava, where England strewed for over a mile the life-blood of heroes. Over four hundred soldiers gave up their lives to the everlasting glory and honor of England's military discipline, and all within this short space of time. Think of them, wonder at them, honor them, all you who love the heroic and brave, for it was only eighteen minutes from the moment Lord Cardigan gave the command, "Forward the Light Brigade," and the brilliant band of England's best blood made their never-to-be-forgotten charge, and then this torn, bloody, battle-stained, broken and shattered regiment, the pride of England's army, came back from the valley of death. All that was left of the six hundred, only one hundred and ninety-nine answered the roll call.

A FRESH AIR ROMANCE (Oct. 12).—There are few of us who cannot remember the time our old "family doctor," gray whiskered and spectacled, came gravely into the room, looked at our tongues, felt our pulses, gave us eight grains of quinine—admonished our mothers to keep the doors and windows closed. This film tells the story of one of these hard-headed old doctors—grown old in his native village—snug and content with his methods, refusing to accept the new and better theories; his patients believing in him only because he has gotten to be a habit.

Old Dr. Fogg takes his son into partnership in his practice. The young doctor is of the new school and tries hard to teach his father the value of later day methods, but without avail. While he is out on a call one of the doctor's patients has a relapse and the son answers the call. He sees at once the error in his father's treatment, and immediately throws open the windows, discards the old-fashioned nauseous doses and replaces them with a light tonic. The patient, a pretty girl, takes on the young doctor's cheerfulness at once and begins to recover.

A plan is laid to save the old doctor's feelings and at the same time take advantage of his son's more effective treatment. His medicines are brought and the windows closed during his visits—only to be changed again at his departure. The patient waxes strong and a love story is developed between her and the young doctor. In a pathetic scene the old doctor is told of the subterfuge, but is broad enough to see the error of the old way and the story ends with his quiet retirement, leaving the practice in his son's hands.

This is proven by the case of Mariola, who refuses to marry one of her tribesmen, because she is in love with a young farmer. The farmer is already married, but that makes no difference to Mariola, and, using all the wiles of her romantic nature, she soon leads him to urge an elopement. The following day, on her way to meet him, a babe crosses her path. She pauses and her heart melts as she watches his tiny hands clutching at the air. Taking him in her arms she walks on with him until she meets the man with whom she is to elope. The baby she holds is his son and when the farmer sees him he grows pale. Mariola realizes the situation and her determination to have the father for a lover fades instantly. She sends the father back to his wife with the baby in his arms.

Of course, they find the animal in Black Hawk's possession, and his vow that he purchased it is not believed. They take him to the barracks, where he is imprisoned to await trial. Black Hawk's tribe is determined to be revenged for the outrage against one of their warriors, and they kidnap Captain Brandon's daughter, a girl of nineteen. The whole garrison is then turned out to rescue the girl, which they do after a bitter fight. When she learns the reason why the redmen carried her away she clears Black Hawk with the information that she was a witness to the theft of the horse.

NAUGHTY MARIETTA (Oct. 12).—Marietta, out for a lark, masquerades as a chauffeur, and, in her father's automobile, she drives to one of the principal avenues in town, hanging a sign on the machine reading: "For Hire." A young man appears and asks to be driven to the railroad station. On the road the inexperienced chauffeur upsets a cart and the passenger pays the damage. Marietta's father by this time is ready to take a spin in his car and is astounded when he cannot find the machine. A motorcycle policeman is called and informed that a thief has been at work. After a brief search the officer discovers the car, but when he orders the driver to halt the car shoots ahead at terrific speed and the chase is on. Luck is with the law, however, and the machine is brought to a standstill. The policeman escorts the chauffeur (and the passenger), back to the girl's father. When Marietta removes her goggles the joke is on father.

AMONGST MANY LOVES (Oct. 8).—Wiffles, the noted comedian, is employed as bookkeeper in a millinery shop owned by the Fright Sisters. He immediately falls in love with all the pretty girls in the shop, but, alas, he is pestered almost to death by his two female employers, both of whom are madly in love with him, and his efforts to avoid their attentions make this film a real comedy.

THE TRIANONS—VERSAILLES, FRANCE (Oct. 8).—(Colored).—Beautifully colored views of the little palace in which the famous Marie Antoinette made her home.

HIS COUNTRY BEFORE ALL (Oct. 11).—Although representatives of a foreign power offer Arthur Herbert five times more for his invention than his own government will give, he refuses the better offer. The father of the girl he loves has been acting as the foreign government's agent and the young fellow's patriotism so impresses him that he gives his consent to his daughter's marrying Herbert.

KALEM.

WHEN YOUTH MEETS YOUTH (Oct. 7).—Will, the foreman of a stone quarry, loses his heart to Olga. The happy man introduces his sweetheart to his brother, Bernard, and the inevitable happens. Bernard is younger and therefore more attractive to Olga, who soon forgets the older brother. The two brothers, who have lived happily together for many years, now separate. A terrible revenge occurs to Will. As foreman, he orders Bernard to take a position directly over a section of the quarry which is to be blasted.

The tie of blood cries out to Will and before the explosion can take place he rushes to his brother's side and tears Bernard from his precarious position. But he is obliged to sacrifice himself and he is instantly covered by an avalanche of rocks. The workmen, seeing the incident from afar, hasten to Will's aid and finally extricate him. He is tenderly carried to the cottage and a doctor is summoned. Will's last hour comes and, calling Olga and Bernard to his bedside, he bids them a last farewell.

THE BELLE OF THE BEACH (Oct. 9).—Lizzie Mooney, who presides at the underwear counter in a department store, secures a week's vacation. Determined to make an impression at a seaside resort, she borrows the finery of a friend and prepares to take the place by storm. To her chagrin she discovers that there is but one eligible man to the resort, Claud, who is adored by all of the girls.

Lizzie resorts to strategy and induces the editor of the local paper to insert an item to the effect that Miss Edith Krocker, heiress to the Krocker millions, is spending a week at the Seashore Hotel, incognito. Then, with the assistance of the porter, she creates the impression that she is Miss Krocker.

The gullible Claud finds himself in the midst of a violent love affair with the supposed heiress and pledges of constancy are exchanged by the "sad sea waves." However, the time for parting arrives and Lizzie hastens back to the underwear counter, where she draws a vivid picture of her conquest. But the irony of Fate! Her first customer is Claud and the ideals of many dreams are rudely shattered.

ELECTION DAY IN CALIFORNIA (Oct. 9).—Solomon Wise and Susan Smith are devoted lovers and therefore find themselves confronted by many difficulties when they become rival candidates for mayor of their town. The campaign opens with a rush and Susan seems to be a sure winner. Solomon arranges for a coup to defeat Susan and, to his horror, receives a message that if he is elected, she will not marry him. Solomon, therefore, finds himself between two fires and finally resolves to defeat himself. The fight goes on merrily and the difficulties of the lovers are settled when it is found, after the votes are counted, that a "dark horse" has won.

HIS MOTHER'S PICTURE (Oct. 11).—As Tom Whitelaw, a wanderer, rests at the railroad bridge and gazes at his one keepsake—a small framed picture of his mother—he hears a cry and notices that a young woman has caught her foot in the frog of the track. He hastens to the scene and with his knife cuts away the shoe, just in time to remove the girl to a place of safety. The young woman, who is Kitty, the daughter of the W. & N. R. R. superintendent, starts back home and when she reaches the bridge she finds the picture which Tom accidentally dropped. Later Tom discovers his loss and returning to the scene he is unable to locate his keepsake and begins to make inquiries. Tom encounters a railroad man, to whom Kitty has shown the picture and learns her address. He proceeds to the house, but is driven away by the cook, who believes him to be a prowling tramp. In the meantime Kitty comes to her room and is about to place the picture under a sofa pillow. The sun plays upon the brilliants which bedeck the small frame and the flashes of light attract Tom, who stands in the roadway. Tom climbs up the porch and reaches through the window to secure his keepsake. Kitty is taken by surprise and not seeing who the intruder is, she bites the arm as it comes through the window and Tom hastens away.

Tom hides in a box car overnight, and next morning Kitty tells her sweetheart, a conductor, of the strange appearance of a robber. Later the conductor discovers Tom attending to his arm and knows that he is the man. Tom becomes suspicious and flees. There is a spirited chase in which Tom lowers himself from a high bridge by means of a rope. One gripping scene follows another and when Kitty recognizes the fugitive as the man who rescued her, a novel climax is reached.

THE REDSKIN RAIDERS (Oct. 12).—Dan and his wife, with a small company of pioneers, journey over the western prairie searching for a new home. Their approach is discovered by Lugo, an Indian, who advises Anapa, chief of the Poncas, and the tribe prepares to drive the settlers from the hunting grounds.

The pioneers establish a camp, and, holding a short council, the men go on an exploring expedition along the brook. Shortly after the departure of Dan and his companions the Indians appear, set fire to the wagons, capture Dan's wife, and ride back to the Indian settlement. Arriving at the Indian camp, Sarah is told she is to become the wife of Anapa, the Indian chief. Dan and his friends return to their camp and are overcome with grief when they learn what has taken place.

Rolfe, a trapper, explains to Dan and the settlers the uselessness of any attempt to free the captured woman from the Indian camp, with such inadequate forces, and he assures Dan that he will assist him in the rescue of his wife by strategy. Dan accompanies Rolfe to the trapper's hut, where the two men form a plan for the rescue of Sarah. The next day the two men journey to the Indian camp, where they present themselves as peddlers with a view of learning where Sarah is being held prisoner. Ascertaining that Sarah is in the wigwam of the chief, the two white men are successful in communicating with the unhappy prisoner. That night Dan and the trapper enter the camp, overcome the guard at the chief's tent, and make their successful escape. The Indians start in pursuit but Dan, Sarah and the trapper succeed in reaching a settlers' stockade before the Indians can overtake them. A sharp fight takes place, but the Indians are eventually driven off.

ALL ON ACCOUNT OF A RING (Oct 8).—It is the evening of Jack's wedding. He has loitered downtown to have the customary farewell drink with bachelor friends, and is late in getting dressed for the big event of a fellow's life. He rips his trousers and tries to mend them. All this is now happening while the bride and guests are awaiting his past due time for arrival. At last he appears and the ceremony starts, then Jack misses the necessary ring and, with a running explanation, bolts out of the house to go to his quarters to get it. But since he left his room, a burglar has entered it and found the ring. After many adventures with the police, janitor and fire escape, he discovers its theft. He returns to his bride and sadly explains his predicament. It looks like no wedding till Mrs. Jones inspiredly thinks of loaning Jack her wedding ring. So follows the ceremony and then happiness.

SURPRISING ELIZA (Oct. 8).—Silas Hobbs, farmer, purchases a new suit, while at the same time a woman customer is buying a bed spread. In wrapping up the parcels the clerks get mixed up and Silas gets the bed spread in the confusion.

He is riding home on horseback when the idea strikes him to put on his new suit and surprise Eliza, so he pulls up behind a clump of bushes and takes off his old suit, putting it over the saddle, while he unties his bundle, the old horse wanders down to the stream for a drink and as he bends over Silas' clothes fall in the stream and drift away.

Silas has now opened his package and discovered the bed spread. His horse returns minus his clothes, so he is forced to walk home wrapped in the bed spread, and he does truthfully surprise Eliza.

A CHOICE BY ACCIDENT (Oct. 10).—Caleb Jones, guardian to Tess and Trixie, discovers they are being wooed by the two fortune hunters, Clarence and Percy. So he writes a letter to his country nephew to come on and woo one of them and keep the money in the family. Tess and Trix chance to see the letter he is writing and to protect themselves against their guardian's scheme they write their grandmother to come to their assistance.

Both the grandmother and the country nephew chance to arrive on the same train. They get their suit-cases mixed in the depot and each sets off to the home of Caleb Jones. The nephew comes to a stream, and being hot and dusty, decides to have a bath and swim. He does, and while in the water a tramp steals his clothes, so in coming out of the water the nephew is forced to put on the suit he thinks is in the suit-case. Opening it he discovers it is filled with feminine articles, a dress from which assortment he is forced to don in preference to his state of nudity. Having to wear the dress, he decides to affect the whole attire, bonnet, glasses and all, and he is soon a perfect counterpart of grandmama.

He arrives at his uncle's and is welcomed by the girls as their grandmother, for they hadn't seen her for years. Then the same tramp who stole the clothes enters the home and holds up the crowd. The two fortune-hunters flee in fear, while the supposed grandma turns in and captures and ropes the hold-up tramp. Finally the real grandparent arrives and all is straightened out.

THE WHITE BONNET (Oct. 13).—George Hardy and Paul Dawn, reporters for the "Daily News," are both in love with pretty Miss Walton, daughter of the publisher. In order to decide between them, the publisher determines to put the two suitors to a test. "Let your mothers come and ask for my daughter's hand for you," is his plan of selection. Accordingly both young men write to their mothers.

George writes his mother an affectionate letter, asking her to come and help him to attain his life's happiness, while Paul pens a very formal sort of note requesting his mother to visit him and help advance him in certain interests. Now both mothers are but plain country women, so that when they arrive, immediately is shown the difference in the two men by the reception the respective mothers are accorded.

George is proud of his mother and her old white bonnet, while Paul plainly shows his shame of his mother because she too wears one. Paul at once sets about to make his old-fashioned mother into a seeming aristocrat. But she cannot pretend to be what she is not, and Paul, ashamed to introduce her, writes that she is detained at her country estate, but begs for the daughter's hand in his behalf. How different did George act, for proudly did he bring his mother to the home of the publisher.

The old publisher read between the lines of Paul's letter and was pleased by the pride George exhibited in his mother. He made his choice as he said, "He who is ashamed of his mother cannot make a good husband."

MILANO.

AN ALPINE TRAGEDY (Oct. 5).—Before her marriage to the wealthy stock broker, Olga was a popular actress at the Folies Bergere, and much sought after by the gallant Boulevardiers. But to all she turned a deaf ear, until won by the earnest and staid Mr. Bred. They open a cozy little chatelet in the Swiss Alps and invite a jolly party of friends to participate in the wild goat hunts.

Tired out, the gay hunters come across another party and are invited to share the luncheon which is being prepared. In one of the group Olga recognizes an old admirer, Count L'ery, an engineer in charge of the great Alps tunnel. He attempts to renew their acquaintance and during the afternoon finds an opportunity to slip a note into her hand, reading: "It is imperative that I speak to you alone. Can I see you at my cabin this evening?" Remembering that her husband had a business engagement in the nearby village last evening, Olga, with ready zest for the adventure, hastily scribbled her answer on the back: "Phone me at nine tonight; Mountain 26." That evening, after bidding her husband farewell on his short journey, Olga awaits the telephone call. Mr. Bred however, cannot reach his destination through the breaking of a bridge over the Alpine torrent and returns to the chatelet. Finding his wife dressed to go outdoors, he inquires her errand, and she, in her confusion, arouses his suspicion that all is not as it should be. This to him becomes a certainty when, as the phone rings, she refuses to let him answer. He forces her aside, securing the phone, hears a man's voice, recognizes who it is. Alone in his cabin, L'ery impatiently awaits the coming of Olga. A heavy rumbling sound draws his attention. He rushes to open the door, but at that instant his cabin is enveloped in a mass of snow and ice—a dreaded avalanche has come. It completely covers the house, blocking the chimney and turning the heavy smoke back into the room. Stifling, the terror-stricken man staggers to the phone and appeals to Olga for help; then, overcome, falls to the floor.

THE CRUEL STEPMOTHER (Sept. 30).—A father is greatly beloved by his two children and it is a bitter blow to them when they learn from their nurse that they are to have a stepmother. They decide to run away, leaving an affectionate note for their father, in which they explain that they don't want a "stepmother," so they have "runned away." They pack their toys together and make their home in a huge piano packing box. The father returning with his pretty young bride finds the note, and immediately starts a search for them. They come upon the packing box and the children reading "The Story of the Cruel Stepmother." The stepmother asks her husband to leave her alone with the children. They ask her if she is running away from a cruel stepmother too, to which she answers "Yes." Of course they take her into their confidence. The wife finds a better story in the same book, entitled "The Story of the Fairy Godmother," and it is while reading this to the little ones, that they fall asleep. The husband now returns with some men, and they carry the children asleep in the packing box, back to the garden of their home. Here he awakens them, after he has sent his wife to the house to be ready to receive her stepchildren. They do not like the idea of having to meet the stepmother, but the father persuades them, and gently takes them to the room. They are astonished to find it is the lady who read them the story of the "Fairy Godmother."

THE COUNTRY GIRL (Oct. 3).—This is a story of a country lass who is engaged to marry a young fellow whom she has known since they were both children together. The tempter enters into the scene. She consents to go away with him. The mother finds it out just in time to save her daughter. The country girl marries her lover of childhood days and everything is happy. One night after supper the young wife goes to sleep and dreams that she has eloped with the tempter and he takes her to the city, and after living a gay life he casts her off. She awakens with a scream just as her father, mother and husband enter the room, and she tells them of her horrible dream.

HE HAD BUT FIFTY CENTS (Oct. 5).—Charlie Hart, a young ribbon clerk earning about seven dollars a week, invites Helen Vaughn to luncheon. He possesses just two dollars and as he is about to leave his room, his laundry is delivered to him, for which he has to pay one dollar and fifty cents of his total, leaving him but fifty cents with which to entertain his guest. He is compelled to carry out his invitations, however, so he calls on Miss Vaughan, and she, in delightful anticipation of a pleasant afternoon, leaves with him for the luncheon. Knowing that his bankroll amounts to but 50c, he tries to guide her into a very cheap restaurant, where the prices range from 5c to 35c. She absolutely refuses, and she brings him to a real cafe. They enter, and Helen immediately orders a dinner that amounts to almost $5.00. Charlie is dumbfounded, and to add to his embarrassment, two young lady friends of Helen enter and she invites them to join Charlie and herself at their table. They accept and at once order two sumptuous repasts, which adds another $10.00 to Charlie's bill. An hour or two elapses and the young ladies decide to have fruit, cake and wine for a fitting climax to a splendid dinner. Poor Charlie is almost prostrated and at his wits' end how to get out of his predicament. He at last decides his only chance is to excuse himself, hustle out and borrow the money from some friend. He hits on a Dr. Sykes to help him out. He calls at his office, and after many funny incidents, manages to procure $20.00. In the meantime the ladies are in a state of hysteria. The waiter had demanded the payment of the cheques, they have but small change and are held in durance vile, awaiting the arrival of the lost Charlie. After moments of awful suspense Charlie comes on the scene. The waiter gives him a bill amounting to $20.50, which he pays, it taking every cent he possesses. The girls leave in anger. The waiter demands a tip. Charlie hasn't it and runs out. The ladies leave in an auto with an obliging friend. Charlie is soundly thrashed by the waiter and a patient from the dentist's whom Charlie had made miserable during his visit to Dr. Sykes.

POWERS.

EARLY'S AWAKENING (Oct. 2).—Early Gorman, a spoiled child, looked with contempt upon those less fortunate than herself. At the entrance of the park, Bobby and Gertie, two poor little foundlings, looked with awe at Early as she left the big automobile with her nurse and following, ventured to admire her big doll. Incensed at what she considered her presumption, Early cruelly struck Gertie, who told her story to the good sister at the park playground.

The sister, accompanying the children, found Early and tried to impress her that rich and poor were all God's children and that she some day might feel the sting of poverty. Upon the sister leaving, Early did not feel quite so well satisfied with herself. Sitting by herself thinking, she fell asleep and dreamed of herself, poor, mistreated and alone—waking up in terror. Her dream had taught its lesson and she tries to make amends.

TWO WOMEN (Oct. 4).—Fritzi, the spoiled wife of a wealthy man, tires of her husband and carries on an intrigue with an idle fop. She is suddenly left without an aide, and as it is wash-day, she sends the nurse to find her a washwoman.

Mrs. O'Hara, a poor but good and righteous woman has a baby which was born blind. She has struggled and saved to try and get enough money to have the baby's sight restored, but on visiting a renowned specialist, he advises her that it is possible for him to restore the sight of the baby, but that it would cost $400. She has only a quarter of this amount after months of hard labor, and is discouraged.

The maid, in her wanderings, finds her and she accepts to do the family wash. While taking the clothes from the basket, she finds in a pocket in one of Fritzi's waists, a note making an appointment for that evening, providing her husband is away.

It was necessary for the washwoman to bring the blind baby with her to do the work, as she had no one to leave it with. The child cries and is very peevish and Fritzi reprimands the woman for the disturbance of the child. Mrs. O'Hara fathoms the way in which Fritzi is ruining both her and her husband's happiness, and goes to her with the note and demands that she furnish the balance of $300 to save the sight of her child, or she will give the note to Fritzi's husband. Fritzi is panic-stricken and promises to secure the money.

It is necessary for her to offer some good reason to her husband for wanting this large sum of money, and she describes to him the suffering of the child of the poor washwoman. The husband gladly consents to stand the expense of the operation, as he believes from the actions of his wife, that she is beginning to take an interest in something else in life than merely a butterfly existence. The baby's sight is restored and the mother's happiness has no bounds.

CHAMPION.

HER WHOLE DUTY (Sept. 30).—Judge Kelley is a good fellow, but is addicted to drinking to excess. He is removed from the bench in consequence. A few years later the Kelley family is living in reduced circumstances. Myra secures a position as reporter on the "Times." Judge Kelley promises his wife and daughter never to take another drop of "booze." Myra is seated at her desk in the "Times" office when Marvin receives a telephone message from the desk sergeant at a police station that there is material for a good story down there. He is buried with work and irritated. He goes to the reporters' room and finds Myra the only occupant. He orders her to go to the police station and get the story. She goes to the station and discovers her father. She returns to the office and tells Marvin that she cannot write the story. He is petulant and orders her to write the story quickly, under a threat of dismissal from the staff. She writes the story and lays it on the desk of Marvin and goes out. He reads the account of the arrest of the once prominent man and then that he is the father of the woman he loves. Hastily turning his work over to an assistant he rushes from the office without coat, hat and vest and reaches the street, where he inquires of a policeman if he has seen Myra, describing her. The copper points in the direction of the river front. Marvin rushes to the dock just in time to prevent Myra from throwing herself into the river. He takes her in his arms and begs her to forgive him. They clinch.

NESTOR.

THE OLD PROSPECTOR (Sept. 30).—Thomas Boone, an old prospector, finds his later years embittered through continued failure. His wife and daughter, Moll, endeavor to humor and encourage him, but without avail. Arthur Wilbur and Will Brown are partners in Prospect 77. Both are in love with Moll, but Will seeing that Moll is more attracted by his partner, keeps his love silent. The boys make a strike of considerable value and joyfully take specimens and the news to the Boone family. The strike is of such proportions that the partners deem it necessary to guard the mine. Will takes the first night watch.

Old Boone fondles the specimens and the feeling that he has been robbed of his heart's desire works him into a frenzy of hate and avarice. He silently follows Will, attacks and kills him. He returns stealthily.

Arthur is suspected, can give no account of his actions that night beyond the fact that he was asleep, and is arrested and taken to jail. The day of the execution arrives and the awful fact is impressed upon the old prospector's brain. He confesses to his wife and daughter, who assist him to mount his horse and accompany him to the jail. Boone arrives in a dying condition, but in time to prevent the young man being hung. Arthur and Moll decide to take care of the bereaved mother.

THE BOOMERANG (Oct. 2).—Jack Curtis sends to his father, John Curtis, an old ranchman, half of his outfit and the following note. "Dear Father: —I am sending you half of my boys. Don't starve them as you did the others. Your son, Jack." The new outfit take possession, but although the ranchman has full and plenty, the boys have only dry bread and potatoes. As the boys are complaining of their food, the ranchman receives a letter from his niece, stating that she and her husband are coming to pay him a visit and will bring their children. They arrive and the extra expense almost drives the old man frantic. They break his bric-a-brac. His cowboys demand better food, so when the ranchman sees a newspaper article which reads: "Epidemic of strange diseases resembling smallpox. Physicians puzzled. Contagion spreading. General quarantine may be ordered," he decides to get rid of the "whole bunch." Going to the wagon shed, he paints his face with small red spots, and the next morning appears among them. The foreman hurries for a doctor, while the boys and the visiting family start to pack at once. However, before they can leave the ranch, the doctor arrives and places the entire outfit under quarantine, and the old man in the smoke-house, where he is fed on buttermilk. A wagon-load of supplies is ordered in the meanwhile, and the ranchman is forced to pay for it. At last his son, Jack, arrives and together they succeed in convincing the doctor that the ranchman is not sick at all, while Jack convinces the ranchman of the folly of his stinginess.

HEARTS AND SKIRTS (Oct. 4).—Mabel Russell, on her return from Europe, is informed by James Leonard, administrator of the Russell Estate, that it was her father's dying wish that she should marry Billy Jones, the son of William Jones, her father's schoolmate and lifelong friend. Mabel, however, has ideas of her own and rather resents being disposed of like a parcel of goods, so when Billy calls upon her, she takes advantage of the fact that he has not seen her since she was a child, and induces her maid (a young woman who has a good figure and passable manners, but is extremely homely), to impersonate her, while she dresses up as the maid.

Billy comes ready and willing to fulfill his part of the program, but at first sight of the maid, whom he supposes to be Mabel, he retreats hastily. Some months later, Billy receives word that Mabel will stop at his ranch enroute for California, and, remembering the lady with the homely features whom he met when he called, and hoping to head her off, he sends word to his attorney (who is Mabel's legal adviser), that he was married a month before. Mabel is notified and she decided to offer her congratulations in person and see what a real ranch is like at the same time. She notifies Billy, who is panic stricken, for he realizes he will have to find a wife on short notice and there is not a woman within twenty miles of the ranch. The cowboys come to his rescue and Joe is finally selected, much to his disgust, to act the part of the bride.

When Mabel arrives with the maid and a chaperone, Billy is made aware of the joke which has been played upon him when he called to see her in New York. He is tempted to explain matters as he finds himself getting really attached to the girl, but he holds off.

The cowboys invite every one for miles round to attend the ball to be given "To meet the new Mrs. Jones." During the ball, Joe, dressed as the wife, gets into an argument with a cowboy owing to the latter having stepped on his train, and acts in a most unladylike manner, knocking his tormentor down. A short fight is stopped by Billy, but Joe has lost his wig as well as his dignity. Explanations follow and Mabel and Billy are ready and willing to carry out the wishes of their parents.

TANGLED RELATIONS (Oct. 4).—Two old sweethearts, Henry Jones and Mrs. Mary Owen—he a widower and she a widow—meet at a summer resort and, renewing their old love, get married. On their way back to the city they send telegrams home—he to his only daughter, Florence, and she to her only son, Tom. The children receive the telegrams and are filled with disappointment. The old folks arrive and go first to his home where he proudly introduces Florence to her new "mamma." Florence refuses to acknowledge the introduction and runs away from home, and becomes a governess. The newly mated couple then visit Mrs. Jones' home and Tom is introduced to his new "papa." Tom, under the influence of alcoholic beverages, preceeds to disown his new relation most strenuously, and rushes out of the house in his evening clothes and without a cent. Climbing on a moving freight train, he lies down in a box car, and goes to sleep. He awakens and finds the car side-tracked at a little country station and sets out in search of food. It happens that Florence is living in this same community, and is out giving an airing to her charges, a girl and a boy. The children run away from her, and in searching for them she climbs a fence and finds herself face to face with a cow. The fact that the cow is peacefully grazing does not appeal to her, and she turns to fly only to pass the weird apparition in a dress suit. Tom, however, solves the difficulty by politely removing his high hat and shoving the cow to one side, at the same time "handing" her a hearty laugh, which naturally piques her vanity. She goes home hating him. Tom, in his search for refreshments, invades the property where Florence lives, and, meeting the footman, asks for food. Then seeing a woodpile he rushes for it and shows his willingness to earn his meal by sawing wood. The footman, greatly amused, tells Florence of the occurrence and she visits Tom and superintends his labors. Then when sandwiches are brought, she compels him to do a little more work before she allows him to eat. He finally finishes and refusing pecuniary assistance from her, he takes his departure in a most gallant manner. She, however, has grown to like him and induces the family to employ him as a gardener. In a short time an intimacy springs up between them, which soon ripens into love. Finally Tom, endeavoring to discipline the children Florence has charge of, calls down upon him the wrath of their mother and he is summarily discharged.

The young couple then decide to marry at once and leave together, each believing the other to be poor. Making arrangements for their wedding, they each, unknown to each other, send telegrams to their respective parents, announcing the hour and place of their nuptials, Florence stating that she is going to marry a gardener and Tom a governess.

The parents who have quarrelled and parted on account of their children's actions, receive the telegrams and start off post haste in their automobiles to prevent the ceremony at any cost.

They arrive together, he coming from one direction and she from another, and tear into the humble parsonage, only to find the marriage just completed.

THE GIRL IN THE NEXT ROOM (Oct. 6).—Alice Brady writes her brother Will that she is going to visit him. The letter is lost. Will writes his friend Jack Wilson to come over. Alice arrives while Will is away from the house and goes to her room to sleep. Jack, who has looked upon the wine when it was much too red, comes to the house and tries to get into Alice's room. She chases him out and Will comes home to find his friend shivering in the hallway. Jack explains that some woman threw him out of the room. Not knowing of Alice's presence, Will is very much wrought up. He knocks on the door of her room. Alice, thinking the inebriate, Jack, has returned, opens the door and throws a pitcher of water all over Will. Confusion reigns, until matters are straightened out by proper introductions and regrets.

THE MAN FROM THE NORTH POLE (Oct. 6).—Lieut. Carter, on his way home from the Arctic, is entrusted with the skin of a polar bear that was shot by his friend, Capt. Robins, and promises to deliver it to the Walkers, friends of the Captain. The Captain also gives Carter a letter to mail to the Walkers explaining that Carter, who is an eccentric chap, will call on them with the skin. Carter, on his way to the Walkers', is compelled to get out of his automobile, and try to fix same, which has broken down. A lunatic, who has escaped from his guards, comes upon the stalled auto in the middle of the road with the bear skin resting on the rear seat. He conceives the idea of stealing it, and thus effecting his escape. This he does and disappears while the guards come running up to the lieutenant, who has meanwhile discovered the theft, and they all get into the machine, to hunt the fugitive. The lunatic, on his wild rampage encased in the bear skin, comes to the home of the Walkers and is mistaken by them for Lieut. Carter. They entertain him royally, and, though somewhat shocked by his crude actions, let them pass remembering that Capt. Robins had written that he was eccentric. The lunatic takes a violent dislike to the butler and, after many amusing incidents at the dinner table, he chases the butler out of the house and up a tree, his method of attack being none other than the large carving knife. He comes back to the house and when Mr. Walker protests, the lunatic gives him the same treatment as was accorded the butler, only Mr. Walker's place of refuge is the dog kennel. The lunatic again returns to the house and compels Mrs. Walker to be his partner in a real bear dance. Mr.

BOB'S RECEPTION (Oct. 3).—By the death of his wife, Bob Warren is left a widower, with one child, Helen. He goes to the city to drown his grief in hard work, leaving little Helen with the housekeeper, Mrs. Hunt. Five years pass. Bob is now a successful business man, and woos and wins his employer's daughter, Ethel Hastings. Her father warns Bob of one thing—not to arouse Ethel's jealousy. Influenced by this warning, Bob does not tell Ethel of Helen's existence. One day, after their marriage, Ethel reads a half-written letter from Bob to Helen, and thinks he is writing to another woman. She is madly jealous and trouble follows. Bob is called away for a few days on business, and Ethel decides upon a separation. At this time a telegram comes from Mrs. Hunt, telling Bob to meet Helen on a certain train. Ethel reads the telegram and goes to the station herself, but decides that "Helen" did not come. Just then the conductor asks Ethel if she will look after a child whose father did not meet her and Ethel consents. While the child questions, the latter shows Ethel a letter which contains the address of her father. It is the note written by Bob to Helen. Astonished beyond measure, Ethel hurriedly takes the child home, and there the whole story comes out. In her joy and relief at finding that "Helen" is not another woman, Ethel forgives Bob's deception, and when he returns home, a happy reconciliation follows and Helen finds a true home.

THE WINNINGS OF SILAS PEGG (Oct. 6).—Silas Pegg is rather close-fisted. But so confident is he that Brown, who is a candidate for Governor of the State, will be victorious in the coming election that he wagers a member of his club $5,000 that Brown will win over Smith. After some discussion he consents to his friend putting in the hands of the stakeholder a check for $5,000. Shortly afterward he becomes convinced that he has made a terrible mistake and that Brown's opponent, Smith, will carry the election. He hastens back to the club and piteously appeals to his friend to declare the bet off, to the great enjoyment of the fellow members present. His friend positively refuses to call the bet off, and poor Silas goes home utterly dejected and is brooding over his ill luck when a newspaper is thrust into his hands, giving the results of the election, and upon scanning the headlines he fairly jumps out of his shoes when he spies the name of Brown as the successful candidate. He calls in the whole family to tell them the good news, goes out and buys flowers and gifts galore, and insists upon telling everyone he meets whether friend or total stranger, of his having won $5,000 on the election. Then he goes to the club rooms and receives the check, insists upon buying wine and treating everyone, and finally hilariously and joyfully takes his leave and hurries down to the bank to cash his check. Then comes the awful shock, the bank is closed and a sign is on the door to the effect that the bank has failed. He holds in one hand the worthless check—in the other what is left of his roll of good hard cash into which he has made such inroads on the strength of his having won his wager.

THE CONVICT'S RETURN (Oct. 1).—Bill Downing and Jim Redburn, two burglars, are in the hands of the police. Jim Redburn's wife, Mary, comes to the District Attorney and pleads for her husband. The District Attorney influences Jim to turn state's evidence and Downing is sentenced to prison. Downing swears to get even when his prison sentence is up. Five years elapse. The District Attorney has helped Redburn to a steady job. He has lived straight and has his wife and child in a nice home. Bill Downing is released from prison. He returns to New York to look for Redburn. He goes to the old thieves' haunts, but cannot find his man. He meets Jordan, another thief, and Nance, who tell him of Redburn's new address. Downing makes his way to Redburn's house in the country. He tells Redburn that he has come to kill him. Redburn admits Downing is justified, explains that he did it for the sake of his wife and child. Redburn gets up and writes a letter to Mary, telling her goodbye, and shows Downing that he is ready to take his punishment. Downing is impressed by Redburn's courage, and asks Redburn if there is a chance for him to live straight. Redburn shows him a letter from a man in the West who wants an electrician. As Downing has no money Redburn gives him $100, and he departs.

THE BOWSTRING (Oct. 2).—Sitting on the terrace of his castle, the tyrant is listening to the jokes of his jester. Suddenly he sees a beautiful woman passing through the gardens and he conceives an uncontrollable passion for her. She is the wife of his best bowman and through the advice of the perverse jester, he orders his guards to bring the woman to him. In the meanwhile only for cruelty, he asks the bowman (the husband of the beautiful woman), to join his table, and, while they are drinking wine, the woman is brought in. The fury of the bowman is terrible. He takes his bow and tries to kill the tyrant, but alas, the jester had stealthily cut the string of the bow and the arrow falls down to his feet. The bowman is accused of attempting his master's life and sentenced to be confined to the forest. The jester, as a joke, throws to him the useless bow. His wife joins him in the forest and vengeance knaws at the heart of the man. With the beautiful hair of his wife he makes a new string for his bow and, when the tyrant, hunting, passes near their exile, an arrow pierces the heart of the tyrant—vengeance is secured

A WESTERN EPISODE (Oct. 1).—Adele Wellington, of the Wellington ranch, is a very pretty girl, and is a favorite with the boys for many miles around. Senor Miguel, a fairly well-to-do Mexican, is Adele's most fervent suitor, much to the girl's displeasure. He becomes so persistent and so annoying that the girl is finally obliged to snub him. Miguel swears to have her at any cost.

Frank Darling, a rich young Easterner, goes West to invest in lands. He arrives in time to frustrate the plans of Miguel. With a well directed swing to the Mexican's jaw, he drops him for the count, thus saving Adele from the coward's clutches. Mr. Wellington is in straightened circumstances and unable to meet some very urgent bills. Frank, who has fallen in love with Adele, gets an inkling of the old man's predicament and decides to help him. Miguel, on the alert and yearning for revenge, finally has the opportunity to get even with Frank, whom he shoots from ambush. Adele rides in the direction of the shot and finds her lover badly wounded. She then rides for aid. The cowboys get on the trail and, after a chase, the Mexican is cornered, lassooed, and taken to the ranch-house. As Frank's recovery is imminent, he pleads with the boys and the Mexican is allowed to leave the country. Frank buys the Wellington ranch and marries the girl.

A SIX CYLINDER ELOPEMENT (Oct. 6).—The old man had political ambitions and a beautiful daughter. He uttered no protest when a bright young lawyer captured the latter, but when the same individual landed the congressional nomination upon which the elder had confidently counted, there was trouble. Enraged at his defeat, the old man summarily broke the engagement and sent his daughter back to a boarding school.

The Congressman-to-be was resourceful. He located the school and smuggled in a note, informing the girl that he would be waiting on the other side of the wall during supper hour, and that she should slip out then and join him. The school teacher was as cunning as the young man was resourceful. She learned the details of the plot, notified the father by 'phone, and laughed maliciously when he told her of a plan that had popped into his head.

At the appointed time the girl was in the garden and saw the rope slide over the garden wall. By its aid she clamored to the top, and to her horror discovered that a father, not a sweetheart, was waiting for her. The old man put her in his auto and drove off triumphantly. The resourceful Congressman-to-be arrived with his rope, but all he found at the end of it, when he pulled it up, was the school teacher. Then he departed. Perhaps the old man didn't have the right kind of an auto, or perhaps Cupid tampered with the engine. Anyhow, there was a breakdown on the road and the father, with many lamentations, did what many auto owners have done,—crawled under the machine to try and find why the wheels would not go around. The resourceful young man drove up at this moment. Softly he signalled to the girl, drove alongside and she hopped from one tonneau into the other. Then they proceeded on their way, and when the old man reappeared, covered with mud and oil, they were gaily spinning down the road. He gave chase, vowing he would follow them anywhere or everywhere. Perhaps he would have done so, had it not been that the younger man had another card to play. noticing a constable asleep by the roadside, he aroused him and directed his attention to the approaching auto. "Exceeding the speed limit," the young man gravely said. "Thank you," replied the constable gratefully, "I am paid by fees." Then he waited and nabbed the angry father.

As the happy young couple were entering a wayside church, father drove by in his auto. He would have stopped but the constable urged him on and led him to the presence of the representative of the law he had defied. He was still there when his new son-in-law arrived, and remarked that he had called to "pay father's fine." He did, and the old man was too crushed to upbraid him. Furthermore, he feared that if he struggled longer, he might be worsted in a more humiliating way.

MISS ROBINSON CRUSOE (Oct. 8).—A society woman who was traveling abroad, heard with deep interest from her husband, that a nobleman was deeply attentive to their only daughter. The mother, knowing that propinquity often leads to love, arranged for her daughter to take a long ocean trip, chaperoned by the young nobleman's mother. In this way the count and the girl would have many hours of each other's society and the girl's mother felt sure that she would not long refuse the honor of becoming a countess.

The girl was also wooed by a wealthy young American, of whom the family disapproved because of his lack of ancestry. He grieved over their separation, and later was completely heartbroken when news reached him that the ship had been lost and the girl he loved was reported among the missing. Still he could not believe that she was dead, and dropping all business embarked on his yacht, vowing that he would search the whole world if necessary to find her.

The girl drifted to the shore of an island inhabited by a savage tribe. They would have killed her, but her miraculous escape from the attack of a venomous snake convinced them that she bore a charmed life and instead of destroying her, they worshipped her as a goddess.

The young American in the meantime had carried his search into many strange lands and all on board except himself were convinced that the hunt was a fruitless one. He refused to turn back, however, and finally his boat reached the little island where his sweetheart was a queen and a prisoner. She was rescued after a lively battle with the savages, and the couple sailed away to their home in America.

SOLAX.

CANNED HARMONY (Oct. 9).—Evelyn brings Jack, her sweetheart, to her father's studio and introduces Jack to the musical professor. The professor, long having cherished the plan to unite his daughter with a celebrated musician, dissents to the match. Although the father objects, the pair meet clandestinely and have considerable trouble in keeping out of the old man's reach. One day the father finds them together and he makes it plain in a forcible way that Jack is not wanted around the house.

Jack goes home in a rather surly mood. He enters his room and finds his roommate, Dick, playing on his violin, imitating a phonograph. He takes his roommate into his confidence and Dick then proposes a plan. He urges Jack to disguise himself as Signor Tremelo and as that famous musician, pay his respects to the girl's father. At the same time they will take a phonograph to Evelyn's home and when the Signor begins to give a private concert on his violin, she sets off the phonograph. Evelyn approves of the plan. With the aid of a friendly newspaper man, the plan works out beautifully. When the Signor offers his hand the old professor gives his consent, he finds out the joke only after everything is over with.

A FOOL AND HIS MONEY (Oct. 11).—Sam Jones is a laborer—a wielder of the white-wash brush. He is in love with Lindy Williams. Having saved up quite a little money, Sam buys some swell second-hand clothes and goes to Lindy's home. Lindy's people are quite prosperous, her father having retired from his job as "Public Porter."

Lindy is a coquettish ebony beauty and trifles with Sam's affections. She plays Sam against Bill Johnson and finally in despair Sam retires from the field. Walking along the road beaten and despondent, Sam finds a lot of money. Now, he vows, he will show them! He buys full dress clothes and other swell duds, an automobile and jewelry. Like a peacock he begins parading himself before Lindy and his rival, and, as can be expected, coquettish Lindy transfers her affections to him. Sam makes hay while the sun shines and proposes to Lindy and basks in her smiles. After his acceptance he sends out invitations to a reception, on which occasion he plans to announce his engagement.

During the reception Bill Johnson and his pal, Slick Mr. Tighe, concoct a scheme to break Sam. They invite him to a poker game and by cleverly stacking the cards and passing aces under the table with their naked toes, Sam is relieved of his fortune. When Lindy is apprised of this she gives Sam the cold shoulder and offers her arm to Slick Mr. Tighe, the possessor of all of Sam's wealth.

RELIANCE.

TIME AVENGES (Oct. 5).—Jim, a sturdy life-saver, in love with Jane, daughter of the captain of the life-savers, is thrown over for Baxter, a summer visitor who persuades Jane to elope. A mock marriage, a year's unhappiness, and Jane returns to her father and Jim. She is forgiven. She sees the error of her ways and realizes Jim's great love. During a terrific storm off the coast, Baxter's yacht goes ashore near the life-saving station, and Baxter tries to reach the beach in a small boat. Jim, on watch, through the glasses sees and recognizes Baxter hanging to the upturned boat. The captain and Jane also look through the glass and recognize Baxter.

Jim refuses to go to the rescue. The captain orders the life-boat out; Jim seizes a revolver and threatens the captain and crew, preventing them going. Jane pleads with Jim. Jim's true nature asserts itself and he leads the rescue party. After a hard fought battle Jim reaches the nearly drowned man and succeeds in bringing him to shore. Jane, through the glass, watches the heroic fight of Jim. On the beach, Baxter lingers long enough to ask forgiveness, which is granted, and he expires in Jane's arms.

GUY MANNERING (Oct. 9).—Guy Mannering is present at the birth of Harry Bertram, the heir to the Bertram estate. Meg Merriles, queen of the gypsies, living on the Bertram estate, is also present, and by consulting with the stars they cast the young heir's horoscope. This shows he will have much trouble and misfortune during his life, holding forth until he reaches his twenty first birthday. Several years pass. The older Bertram is made Justice of the Peace. With this new authority he at once takes action against the gypsies who have lived for centuries on his estate. Meg Merriles, who has long been a friend of the house of Ellangowan, takes this as a personal insult and calls down the curse of her race upon the home of Bertram. In taking action against the smugglers who infest the coast, Bertram employs Inspector Kennedy to rout them. Young Harry, now five years old, and his tutor, are walking about the shore. They pass Kennedy who places the child on his horse. The smugglers in the meantime recognize Kennedy as their enemy. They attack him and throw him over the cliff. The boy being a witness to this is taken away to their cave. Meg, who has seen this, begs for the boy's release, but Lawyer Glossin, a silent friend of the smugglers, prevails upon them to kidnap the boy, for without an heir the house of Bertram, by his clever manipulation, will easily pass into his hands. Sixteen years later, young Bertram, now known as Brown, becomes an officer in Col. Mannering's regiment in India. He is very much in love with Mannering's daughter, Julia, whose mother, fearing the colonel's anger, encourages the young lovers in their secret meetings. This is misinterpreted by the colonel, who thinks that Brown is paying attention to his wife. This situation leads to a duel in which Bertram is shot and supposed by Mannering to be dead. In reality he is taken prisoner by the Sepoys and held captive till he manages to escape. Learning that the colonel has returned to England, he follows, and finds him living in Scotland, a widower, with his daughter, near the Bertram estate. He sees his sweetheart again. Old Meg recognizes him as the heir and the smugglers also recognize him, and inform Glossin, who, upon the death of the young man's father, acquires the estate at very small cost, leaving Miss Bertram, the daughter of his old master, penniless. Glossin at once takes action with the smugglers, who, to protect himself from the charge of the murder of Kennedy, is a willing tool of Glossin, and agrees to get them young man out of the way. This plot fortunately is overheard by one of Meg's trusty men, who immediately informs her. Realizing that she owes many a favor to the house of Ellangowan, she sends word to the colonel that if he would like to see that the heir to the house of Bertram is still alive, to come at once to the smugglers' cave with help. She tells Bertram who he is and bids him be at the smugglers' cave that she may prove what she says. She leads him into the cave. Here she confronts Glossin and Hatterick and promises that her prophecy shall be fulfilled. A struggle ensues, which by the timely arrival of Col. Mannering and his help, terminates in the capture of Glossin and Hatterick. Meg has been shot during the affray, and with her dying breath announces to all that Bertram is the long lost heir to the house of Ellangowan. The colonel recognizes in young Bertram, Brown. His daughter Julia arrives and the lover-like attitude of the young couple explains to him the error, and he consents to their speedy marriage. Bertram meets for the first time his sister Lucy, in whom Col. Mannering has shown an interest more than brotherly. They all repair to the castle where Bertram is formally proclaimed its master.

THE PEDDLER'S FIND (Oct. 12).—A Jewish peddler finds a blind Gentile baby girl in the woods. He takes her home and brings her up with his own children, though his wife at first protests. Jake, his son, in time learns to love Jenny, the waif. While she is dearly beloved by all, yet the matter of religion prevents a union between a Jew and a Gentile. Jenny overhears a family council, and rather than come between father and son determines to run away. Jake is distracted and goes to find her. Learning her whereabouts from a friendly newsboy, he goes to the old trysting place and finds Jenny kissing the rose he gave her years ago, now dried and withered. Jake declares his love, and they plan to be married at once. Seeking a near-by justice the knot is tied and they begin housekeeping and are happy. Later, father and mother, unable to longer endure the separation and heart-hungry to see the young couple, and the baby, visit Jake and Jenny at their new home, and are joyously received.

AMERICAN.

JACK OF DIAMONDS (Oct. 7).—Matrimony is an all-absorbing topic and one does not need to travel any great distance but what this subject, or something akin to it, can be heard being discussed. The two fairies in this story assure themselves with the warmest sincerity that they never will get married and both reject their respective suitors. But circumstances alter cases and so when handsome "Jack of Diamonds" arrives at the gulch and in his silken manner shows his interest in the girls, each in turn promptly falls in love with him, to the extreme dissatisfaction of their erstwhile suitors. With their hearts full of malice for the new-comer the two men lay plans for the undoing of their adversary. Opportunity presents itself when in a game of cards he is caught cheating. After the smoke of battle has subsided one of the fairies has the chance to reconsider, but the other has lost her chance forever.

A SISTER'S DEVOTION (Oct. 9).—To help one another is our devine mission on earth. Aside from the natural devotion, such as only a sister can display for a wayward brother, the heroine in this human interest story, not only helps her brother when he is in need of funds, but also displays a marked capability of guiding his destiny in an hour of greatest peril. Her mind operates instinctively and like a flash.

REFORMATION OF SIERRA SMITH (Oct. 10).—Having secured his degree of M. D. he takes affectionate leave from his parents and together with a newly acquired wife he starts for the West. En-route the stage coach is held up by a lone highwayman, who relieves him of his watch, a keep-sake from his father. Soon after the young doctor has hung up his sign he received a call to attend a stricken child. The little patient is found feverishly holding a watch, which the doctor is astonished to recognize as the one stolen from him. Just how he, the doctor, regained possession of his cherished time-piece, and how the highwayman came to lead an honest life, is beautifully told and you will experience most delightful sensations in following this story.

MAJESTIC.

THE LITTLE MUSIC TEACHER (Oct. 6).—The little music teacher has a hard time making enough money to pay her bills. A month's rent is due. Riding on the car she discovers that she has forgotten her pocket book, and is forced to borrow five cents from a handsome man sitting next to her. They exchange cards so that she can return the borrowed nickle. The man becomes interested in her and, although a great musician, pretends not to know the first rudiments of music so that he can take lessons from the little music teacher. After she has given him several lessons, she discovers a newspaper article about his wonderful piano recital given before a large audience the night following one of her lessons in which she has had great trouble teaching him some five finger exercises. Thoroughly angry and humiliated, she refuses to see him again, and it is only after he has declared his love and given it as the reason for his deception that she puts a lighted lamp in her window as a signal that he is forgiven.

THE WINNER AND THE SPOILS (Oct. 8).—Gaspard, Count de Castany, in the French army, has gambled away all obtainable money. He goes to his sister, Marie, and asks for aid. She refuses and while imploring her brother to keep away from his fast friends, one of them, the young Marquis de Fornay, is announced. Marie receives him distantly, and after their departure, Marie calls her maid, and they follow them. At the door of the club the Marquis comes down as she draws near to get the number. He recognizes her and offers to escort her home. She repulses him, and hurries away with her maid. The Marquis re-enters the club, joins the table where Gaspard is playing, refuses his I. O. U.'s, and so he is forced from the game. The next day Gaspard again begs Marie for money and she refuses. He then takes the family jewels and leaves. Marie thinks of a plan to circumvent him. She calls her maid, Nichette, and sends her to Gaspard's valet, of whom she demands one of Gaspard's best suits. She dresses her mistress and together they start out, making Jean accompany them. Marie enters the club and calls for Gaspard. He introduces her as his friend, the Count de Thirs. The Marquis recognizes her at once, but says nothing. The playing is resumed. Gaspard plays more recklessly than ever and finally stakes the family jewels. The Marquis plays hard to win and finally succeeds. As the jewels are handed to him, Marie denounces him as a thief and a card shark. The friends of the Marquis insist that he challenge her at once. Marie is horror-stricken and her brother insists upon fighting for his young friend. The Marquis will not listen to this and insists upon fighting with the count. He says "to the winner shall belong the spoils," and draws up a paper to this effect. Marie is terribly frightened. But when the word is given she nerves herself and plunges again and again at the Marquis, finally wounding him. His second hands Marie the jewels. The next day Gaspard asks for them again. As she refuses the Marquis is announced. He says Gaspard can never have the jewels again and points to the "not transferable" clause in the contract. The Marquis has brought orders sending Gaspard out to join a regiment in Algeria. The Marquis then offers Marie the balance of the "spoils," himself, and the estates of the de Fornays.

UNKNOWN MOTHER—(Three reels).—A little girl was born to Leonia, Count Roberti's sweetheart. The Count denounces the girl as his own daughter of an unknown mother. Egle (the newly born's name) was taken away from Leonia and put into an orphan asylum. Count Roberti and Leonia separate, after the Count has provided for her, and she leaves the city. Fifteen years have lapsed. Egle returns to her father's house. Count Roberti, who gives her a very loving reception.

After a few days, Egle makes her debut into society. Her grace and beauty attracted the admiration of all the guests, and particularly that of Luciano, the Marquis' son. Luciano and Egle love each other. Luciano tells his father he loves Egle and induces him to go to Count Roberti's house and ask for Egle's hand. The Count accepts the request, but feels it his duty to reveal to the Marquis that Egle is the daughter of an unknown mother. Hearing such unexpected news, the Marquis compells Luciano to forget Egle and leave the city. Egle cannot understand the reason of Luciano's sudden departure. She starts to guess that in her life there is a mystery that she cannot penetrate.

One day, Count Roberti receives a letter from Milan. It is from Leonia, who asks money of him in memory of the past and their daughter. Egle surprises the Count reading that letter. But the Count forbids her to look at it. One day, Egle finds the key of a secret drawer and is tempted by the desire of opening it in order to discover the cause of so many mysteries. She finds several love letters, among which are those of Leonia. Egle has discovered that her mother is not dead, but lives far away, unknown to her.

A few days later, Count Roberti happens to be the victim of an automobile accident and Egle having remained alone in the world, decides to go in search of her mother to reveal her identity and live with her. In the meantime Leonia, who had been abandoned by the Count, had fallen in other company. Her best friend now is Mario. Egle's visit was unexpected. Leonia is more pleased on hearing the invitation of Egle to live in Count Roberti's house, than by the meeting with her daughter. Leonia follows Egle to Rome accompanied by Mario. The latter starts to love Egle, thus awakening the jealousy of Leonia. But Egle, who had learned of the return of Luciano, rejects all other proposals. Terrible circumstances make Leonia believe that Egle is her rival and full of disdain she brings against her daughter the most vulgar and infamous accusation. Afraid and horrified, Egle runs to Luciano for aid.

The old Marquis, learning of all the sorrows that had fallen Egle, consents to the marriage. But when the two lovers returned to Count Roberti's house, they found that Leonia had been the victim of her lover's brutal anger.

A NOBLE LIE—(Three reels).—Celia (a sweet and honest girl who works as governess in a good family where she is very much loved, has the misfortune of having a drunken and brutal father, who wastes all of her savings in the tavern and in coarse company. One night, while Celia was alone and in charge of the little girl, her father with his companions force an entrance into the house, where they rob a jewel case. Celia, suddenly hearing a noise, runs out of the room and there finds before her, her father. Celia, who has not the courage to raise an alarm, bars the entrance to the room where the little girl lies asleep. At last, worn out by motion, she faints. The ruffians would have liked to pass over her body, but her father in a moment of repentance opposes it, and they pass out.

When the masters return home they find Celia still insensible and gather that they have been visited by robbers. Fortunately, the little girl is safe and sound, and has not even been awakened. The parents are grateful to Celia and question her as to the robbers. The girl declares she does not remember anything, and the other servants say that they were not aware of what had happened, being in another part of the building. It happens that while the police are visiting a tavern they arrest a gang of ruffians, Celia's father being among them. The magistrate summons Celia and her master to his office and has all the arrested brought before them. Celia again meets her father! "Do you recognize anybody amongst these?" asks the judge. "No," answers the girl. As there is no proof against them, the arrested are set free. Celia's father and his accomplices now being sure of immunity have only one idea, to sell the stolen jewels. But while the bargain is being settled Celia's father receives a letter from his daughter, as follows: "To save you, I have sworn falsely: I shut myself in a convent to repent my sin and yours." The criminal drunkard and heartless father is touched. Remorse begins to work and when his companions order him to quickly give the jewels over to the broker, he refuses and chases them away. Still following the good impulse, he takes the jewel box, runs to the house of Celia's master, calls the little girl who is playing in the garden, puts into her hands the precious case, and goes off. His accomplices followed him, saw what he did, and full of rage, get hold of him in a lonely spot, call him a traitor and beating him terribly, leave him as dead on the ground.

Celia's father, whose health had already been ruined by his dissolute life, cannot withstand those blows, but he has redeemed himself, and his good Celia comes to his bedside and comforts him during that supreme moment.

EASTMAN

motion picture film—the acknowledged standard the world over.

Manufactured by

EASTMAN KODAK CO.,

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

It is that wonderful, exquisite sweetness "Kubelic" draws out of his fiddle that makes his meal ticket spell $1000.00 per hour. A horse fiddle makes more noise but

"What a Difference!"

It is that quaint "humanly human" way "Whitcomb Riley" puts jingles together that makes him loved and famous. Not such great English but his "beat on the heart-strings"

"Makes a Difference."

It was the realism, fine arrangement of color and striking study of light and shadow that immortalized "Rembrandt." A circus ONE SHEET is sometimes even more striking but

"Oh! How Different!"

It is a Motion Picture when you only show "Flickering Shadows" that are meaningless, dull, indistinct, without perspective, roundness or depth and almost without interest. But on a "Mirror Screen" this same picture "comes to life," shows clear, true and sharp. Every detail is visible and not a shade, gleam or shadow is lost and "Believe Me"

"There IS a Difference."

It is a Motion Picture Theatre when your equipment and light is poor and you have a bum curtain. But the "Mirror Screen" insures you a great light so that an ordinary film shows like a FEATURE in comparison. Every foot is so realistic and natural that folks are spell-bound because pictures on a "Mirror Screen"

"Are Different."

It is the Extra Nickels over expenses that means Profits, Bread and Meat and some of Life's Luxuries. It is the "Mirror Screen" that will create a sensation in your theatre, bring the crowds, and it is the only way to get that Wonderful Light WITHOUT EYE-STRAIN. The old and young come and the pictures on the MIRROR are so delightful to look at that they won't miss a reel and that "Keep Them Coming" is what makes, in your bank balance,

"Such a Great Difference."

The young fellow thereupon commits his first crime; the crime of theft. The shock of this disgrace brings an attack of apoplexy upon the father, which makes him totally blind. From this time it is a rapid drop to bankruptcy for the once honored family. When it is too late the young man realizes his error and determines to begin life anew. He leaves his native country for South Africa and, after fearful hardships, which develop the better side of his character, he returns to his native land—a man.

Fire at Sea

Pathe Release August 26, 1912. Two Reels.

A young man sails with him, against the advice of his sweetheart, who has a premonition of evil. When a few days out to sea, and while the young sailor is asleep, the skipper drinks until he is irresponsible. He goes into the powder room smoking his pipe. Soon he falls asleep and the pipe, dropping from his hand, ignites the powder. A deafening roar and the vessel is a mass of flames, leaving a wreck-strewn sea and a red glow in the sky to tell a waiting sweetheart the story of her lover's fate.

Rip Van Winkle

Vitagraph Release August 19, 1912. Two Reels.

This legend is written by Washington Irving, of the time of George III of England, during the occupation of this country by the English in the 18th century. The story of Rip Van Winkle, the happy-go-lucky, ne'er-do-well, is well known to every child. Rip Van Winkle is portrayed by that eminent actor, Mr. Robert McWade, Sr., who was associated for so long with the famous Joe Jefferson. The splendid Vitagraph Company carry out the other parts in their usual creditable way.

Cines Release August 12, 1912. Two Reels.

A production of unparalleled magnificence, depicting a thrilling romance, laid in the days of ancient Egypt.

King Rameses, hearing of the beauty of a young shepherdess, disguises himself as a peasant and journeys to her home. She resents his ardent advances and tells him of her devoted lover, a shepherd, tending his flocks on the mountain slopes.

The King, angered, has her carried off by force to his palace. Although rejected, he determines to win her with lavishness, but without avail.

The shepherd, hearing of his lover's abduction, vows vengeance on King Rameses and attempts to stab him.

When again the king's advances to the shepherdess are rejected, he orders the two lovers before him and, in all the magnificence of the Egyptian court, he magnanimously commands their marriage to take place.

The splendor of the Oriental Courts, wonderful processions and ceremonies are all shown in a story not soon forgotten.

Don Juan insults the new king when he finds him forcing his attentions upon Lucinda. Don is arrested and Lucinda brought to the torture chamber to see him suffer in the hope that in order to save him she will consent to marry the King. Charles V is informed of the situation and, coming out of the monastery to which he has retired, he astounds the younger men by acquainting them with the fact that they are brothers. He makes them pledge their loyalty to one another, asks Lucinda to choose between the two men and when she and Don Juan embrace, gives them his blessing.

Siege of Petersburg

Kalem Release July 22, 1912. Two Reels.

A visit of a Confederate officer to his betrothed and her family is interrupted by a young man and his crippled sister who have been made paupers by the ravages of the war. The young pauper proclaims his love for the young lady of the house, and in order to demonstrate his bravery and loyalty, enlists in the Confederate cause. Some months later the young soldier rescues his rival, the Confederate officer, from a burning bridge. A year elapses, and the pauper has been promoted to a lieutenancy. The Confederates are entrenched before Petersburg, and the Federals succeed in mining a part of the Confederates' outer works, but their batteries are discovered in time to frustrate their plans. The Confederates place a small detachment under command of the poor, young lieutenant, to keep the nearby batteries working. The officer whose life has been saved, realizes the danger to the young lieutenant, forges an order, relieving him of that hazardous duty and takes command himself. The mine is exploded and the gallant officer and his men are killed.

The Money Kings

Vitagraph Release July 15, 1912. Three Reels

This is a story of a conspiracy on the part of the Money Kings to involve the United States in a war. A representative of the United States government starts for the peace conference at The Hague, with the President's signature on an agreement of peace. The Money Kings employ a clever woman, as their secret agent, to trap the young representative and steal the precious document. A little dinner "for two" is arranged, during the course of which the woman conspirator removes the document from the young representative's coat and replaces it with one that resembles the original. The daughter of one of the Money Kings learns of the conspiracy and that the original document is in her father's safe. On a pretense she opens the safe, extracts the original message and, in turn, replaces it with one to resemble it. She sends a wireless message to the young representative on his way to The Hague, telling him of the conspiracy and to watch for her cousin in his hydroplane, bearing the original message. The Money Kings are foiled.

The Adopted Child

Pathe Release July 8, 1912. Two Reels.

A little child, whose father is lost in a foreign country seeking his fortune, becomes bereft of her mother and is adopted by some kind-hearted ragpickers. When she reaches budding womanhood she falls in love with a young physician, who reciprocates her affection. This physician is in turn loved by a young woman, married to an elderly man, and she does her best to win his affection. She makes her advances so pronounced that her husband discovers the situation and challenges the doctor to a duel, which is fought by the flickering light of a passing ragpicker's lantern. The latter recognizes in the outraged husband a remarkable resemblance to his little ward's father's photograph, and, following up this clue, he succeeds in establishing the young girl's identity and she lives out her life happily with the man of her choice under her father's roof.

Tragedy of the Desert

Kalem Release July 1, 1912. Two Reels.

When the doctor recovers his health he embraces the Mohammedan faith and marries the young Egyptian woman who rescued him. Some time after the doctor's former wife visits the quaint village with a party of tourists and discovers her husband. The Egyptian wife sees her husband and the strange woman and believes she will be deserted. The doctor accompanies his former wife to the edge of the village to bid her farewell, and when he returns to join his Egyptian wife, finds, to his horror, that the heart-broken girl has killed herself.

A Nation's Peril

Pathe Release June 24, 1912. Two Reels

A foreign power, anxious to learn the location of the mines in New York harbor, sends the Countess Mentenberg to gather the information. At a naval ball the countess makes the acquaintance of a young officer. He invites her to visit the mine chart room at Fort Wadsworth. The countess comes to the fort accompanied by two accomplices and, after the officer has shown them a diagram of the location of the mines in the harbor they steal the drawing. With their prize the countess' two confederates board a launch and make for their cruiser, which is anchored off shore.

Through the window the woman watches them and suddenly she realizes that she is in love with the young officer. He calls her attention to the little craft and says that it is now over a mine. If his button is pressed, he says, pointing to it, the boat would be blown to atoms. The countess, realizing the disgrace that would befall her lover when the fact of the theft became known, presses the button and the mine explodes, blowing the launch and its occupants to fragments.

Listen to Reason, Exhibitors:

Your best friends are your patrons; cater to their tastes and wishes. Show them pictures that are alive and life-like, that seem to be real, soft, and full of depth without that white and foggy cast.

Don't try and please yourself alone. If you would do the above you must have a RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN. When so many experienced exhibitors, without promises or reward, praise it unreservedly.

Mr. Harry Bunkers was somewhat dubious. A gentleman high in one of the leading film companies had sung its praise, so he thought he would take a chance. Here's what he says:

Gilroy, Calif.

Gentlemen:—The Radium Gold Fibre Screen arrived on June 24th, in fine condition. I have just set it up, and it certainly is a beauty. I thought my Silver Screen was some curtain, but I take my hat off to your screen.

I gave it a thorough test at 60 feet, I showed a picture 9' x 12' on 15 amperes by actual test with Ampmeter and it showed up a fine, brilliant, and clear picture.

If at any time anyone from the Coast wants to know about the screen refer them to me, and I will give them a free demonstration.

Am forwarding check for amount as per statement.

Yours very truly,
Signed HARRY BUNKERS.

Could we say more? Can't we show you?
You have tried the rest. Now buy the best.

NOTICE

ON OCTOBER FIRST, 1912, the price of all Deagan Musical Electric Bell outfits will advance 33 1-3 per cent. This advance has become necessary owing to the fact that we have added a great many improvements to our Musical Electric Bell outfits, which have greatly increased the cost of manufacturing, and we can conscientiously state that our new improved Musical Electric Bell outfits are greater value at the advanced price than our old style Electric Bells are at the old prices which we asked for same.

Inasmuch as we have a number of prospective customers who contemplate purchasing these Bells, and who have been figuring with us, we will accept orders for the new style outfits until October 10th at the old list prices, namely $75.00, for our famous No. 310 outfit, consisting of twenty-five Bells mounted on quarter sawed Oak backs, with resonators, complete with new style keyboard, platinum point contact mechanisms, soft and loud attachments, and many other improvements which have been incorporated in these Bells.

Should you be interested in a set of these Bells, order now, as we will not accept orders at the old prices after October 10th. Any of our various outfits will be shipped C. O. D. with privilege of examination and trial, on receipt of $5.00 to guarantee express charges.

G. MÉLIÈS

A KIND NEIGHBOR.

Forgive Us Our Trespasses.

Little Danny, living alone with his father, is taught to say the Lord's Prayer every night and to live accordingly. Father and son become acquainted with their pretty neighbor, Mary, towards whom the father is inclined to show more than a friendly interest. Mary takes the lad to town on the day a theatrical troupe arrives, and one of the actresses recognizes in Danny her son. Years back she had gone astray, and husband and wife were estranged. Mary nobly puts her own feelings aside to effect a reconciliation, but without avail. Danny's father is stern, and not till the child repeats the prayer "Forgive . . . . . as we Forgive" is he softened and the home completed.

UNIVERSAL WINS AGAIN AND AGAIN!

Supreme Court of New York State Denies Injunction Sought by C. O. Baumann!

Close on the heels of the almost innumerable other victories won by the hustling Universal came the decision rendered by Justice Delany, of the New York State Supreme Court, refusing flat-footedly to grant an injunction against the Universal sought by Charles O. Baumann of the New York Motion Picture Co.

Mr. Baumann sold the "Bison" and the New York Motion Picture Co. to the Universal. After the deal was all closed, he became dissatisfied. He went to the courts with the result noted above. The court denied Mr. Baumann's plea.

The Democratic Committee Picks Universal to Make Film of Woodrow Wilson!

The Democratic Committee after looking over the whole field of moving pictures has decided that the hustling Universal is best fitted to make a special campaign picture of Woodrow Wilson, democratic nominee for president of these United States. This is one of the highest compliments ever paid to any moving picture concern!

The scenario for the Woodrow Wilson picture was especially written for the purpose so that even aside from its political effect it will be of nation wide interest. This big victory and the many other things we have accomplished ought to convince you that the Universal has got more hustle, more ability, more red blood and more determination to do big things for you than anybody else in the business.

REMEMBER!

The world-famous Ambrosio films are now a regular part of the already powerful Universal program. See that you get them!

IMP

"THE WRECKERS."
Monday, October 7th.

A soul-stirring marine story depicted with startling realism. Superb scenic effects, superior acting and brilliant production.

"THE BRIDAL ROOM."
Thursday, October 10th.

It's exquisite. A King Baggot Imp that will make your heart go pit-a-pat. King Baggot plays the greatest emotional role that he has ever been afforded an opportunity to portray. It's a pulsating, living drama.

"A BRONX COCKTAIL."
On the Same Reel:
"A BAD TANGLE."
Saturday, October 12th.

This isn't an ordinary smirk-getter, or a snigger-producing split-comedy. It's a genuine chuckle. The kind that will set the whole house roaring with laughter.

101 BISON

"THE INDIAN RAIDERS."
Tuesday, October 8th.

There's a zest in the producing of this Western drama that will leave a lingering impression. Snappy, spirited action, beautiful scenery and a splendid cast.

"THE TATTOO."
Saturday, October 12th.

An Indian Cowboy drama that will warm the cockles of your heart. Replete with thrills. Two thousand feet of excitement crowded into one reel.

NESTOR

"EMPLOYER'S LIABILITY."
Monday, October 7th.

There isn't a person in your house that won't relish this fascinating dramatic offering. You'll feel the cry of humanity down deep in your heart.

"HIS ONLY SON."
Wednesday, October 9th.

It's a real good Western. Just enough romance and enough of the "chase" to put it in the "worth while class."

"LOVE AND A LEMON."
Friday, October 11th.

A refreshing little comedy with heaps of joviality and good cheer in it. They'll be delighted when they see this sprightly production. Western atmosphere and plenty of it.

CRYSTAL

"THE DRESSMAKER'S BILLS."
On the Same Reel:
"McGUIRK THE SLEUTH."
Sunday, October 13th.

Hubby's practical joke in giving away his wife's clothes works as a boomerang. His own went with them. Really delightful comedy. On the same reel—a diverting comic that will chase away dull cares.

GEM

"THE ORPHANS."
Tuesday, October 8th.

There's a pathetic vein that runs through it, but it's not by any means sombre. There's a sublimity about it that surpasses description.

ECLAIR

Tuesday, October 8th.
"SURPRIZING ELIZA."

On the Same Reel:
"ALL ON ACCOUNT OF A RING."

After you've shown these two genial comedies they will all be as merry as a cricket. They will chirp with glee as this funny split is projected.

"A CHOICE BY ACCIDENT."
Thursday, October 10th.

It won't be as hard for the audience to raise a smile as it was for the nephew to raise a suit of clothes when the tramp stole his at the swimming-hole. It's a frisky comedy that will please even the dyspeptic skeptic.

"THE WHITE BONNET."
Sunday, October 13th.

It will touch a chord that will vibrate with emotionalism. He wasn't ashamed of his old-fashioned mother with her "white cap," but the other fellow was. It was a real test to show which man's heart was in the right place.

REX

"IF DREAMS CAME TRUE."
Thursday, October 10th.

There's something sympathetic about this picture that makes it so totally different from the average dream picture. One thousand feet of pleasure-giving diversion.

"WHEN TWENTY IS IN LOVE."
Sunday, October 13th.

One of those "happy as a lark" kind of comedies. Full of jollity; alive with exhilaration. A "Jim Dandy" for the Sunday program.

A very pretty Colonial picture with a very pretty story. Some beautiful locations topped off by some brilliant acting.

MR. OPIE READ

Announcement Extraordinary

The American Film Manufacturing Company is privileged to announce that it has secured the exclusive moving picture rights to the very popular story of and further has the honor to announce that the author, Mr. Opie Read, will impersonate the character of Jasper Starbuck.

Mr. Read is a true Southern type and possesses the characteristics which make it possible for him to portray the emotions of the character he created to the best possible advantage.

It is conceded that Mr. Read's popularity as an orator, journalist and dramatist will assure this production the warmest reception on the part of the general public. There is scarcely a nook in the country where the fame of Opie Read has not permeated. It is established that the dramatic performances on the legitimate stage were exceedingly popular and that the sale of the book proved one of the biggest on record.

The expense of this production has not entered into consideration, as the American Film Manufacturing Company is desirous of presenting to its patrons and friends a real and rare offering—a study in expression, manners and customs which will stimulate the intellect and prove to be a mental treat.

THE STARBUCKS will be released in two reels on Saturday, November 9, 1912, and will mark the change of release date from Wednesday to Saturday in all succeeding weeks.

Facts and Comments

IF Cotton Mather and the rest of the New England witch-hangers were to return to earth they would be found in the forefront of the men fighting the motion picture. Men of that calibre are by no means extinct even to-day, and once in a while a peculiarly offensive specimen is discovered. In Mobile, Ala., a doctor of divinity has drawn the attention of the whole state to him for his fierce denunciation of the Sunday exhibitions. He has set up the amiable motto: "If the people will not come to the churches we must drive them in." The reverend gentleman has by at least two centuries survived the age in which he should have been born. The day of forcing people into church and cutting the noses off the "reclusants" will not return again. In matters of belief argument, appeal to reason and example count more than all threats of ecclesiastical wrath. The leading newspaper in Mobile, the Tribune, voiced the public sentiment of the city in an article in which the fanatical preacher was gently but firmly rebuked for his narrow-mindedness and bigotry. We are very sure the exhibitors of Mobile know their business and have so conducted their shows that they have gained the favor of their patrons. If this were not so the Tribune would not have come to the rescue of the Sunday entertainment. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, which has been a persistent and earnest advocate of a decent Sunday entertainment, is deeply gratified to read and quote the following paragraph on the subject, taken from an editorial in the columns of the paper mentioned:

> Since the inauguration of the moving picture shows, the Sundays have been much more quiet and orderly than formerly, and there are not as many arrests by reason of the clean, wholesome shows which are put on at the picture shows, as it gives the people a chance to put in a quiet Sunday in a well ventilated, cool place, removed from the noise, dust and turmoil of the outside world. No other method of amusement has been started in the past twenty years which has been so productive of good as the very shows which the reverend doctor is trying so hard to eliminate.

When the reverend doctor read the article he immediately discontinued his subscription to the paper, a most conclusive and suitable argument to the type of mind represented by this divine. Sometimes we cannot help feeling proud of the motion picture just because of the enemies it makes.

A FRIEND and reader of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD writes from Portland, Oregon, to call our attention to an editorial in a local newspaper, which attempts to deal with the value of the motion picture as a recorder of history. The writer doubts the value of the motion picture as a chronicler of history because "passion and prejudice will sway the man with the camera as much as the man with the pen." Here we have a wrong conception of the mission of the motion picture as a teacher of history. To film all the great events of the age would of course be an utter impossibility, because the happenings of importance are not always scheduled in advance, and even the camera cannot catch up with the flight of time. In showing, however, to future generations the manners and costumes of the present day, its views of life, its institutions and customs the value of the cinematograph is simply inestimable. In the history of descriptive literature there are few finer efforts than the pictures Pliny gives us of the destruction of Herculaneum, but we would willingly trade his description for a reel or two of motion pictures showing the eruption of Vesuvius and the tremendous catastrophe which followed it.

WE hope that lecturers will, during the present season, come to form a more regular part of the motion picture program. Two facts will contribute to the growth of the lecture. The notable increase of feature films and the general improvement of the average production constitute the one reason, while the other must be found in the growing intelligence and broadening experience of the exhibitor. Exhibitors everywhere have taken a decided stand against cheap vaudeville and, thanks to their persistent efforts, aided at all times by THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, cheap vaudeville is practically a thing of the past. Let us remember that it owed its origin entirely to the very natural desire for the human voice as an essential part of any entertainment intended to attract and delight human beings. The lecture supplies this indispensable factor of the motion picture program. It is the right kind of an added attraction because it grows directly out of the picture and helps to make it more enjoyable. It runs with the picture. Intelligently used it gives to the dramatic subject a living force which creates the impression of a play rather than a dumb show. It emphasizes and makes perfect the value of the educational film. We all readily recognize the need of a lecture for such features as the "Passion Play" or "Dante's Inferno" or the "Odyssey"; but there are hundreds of reels, not necessarily features, which can be made ten times more attractive to an audience by means of a good lecture. Not even the keenest intelligence will understand all the nice and fine points in a picture on witnessing it the first time. A lecturer who has thoroughly studied and analyzed a dramatic, historic, classic or literary subject and will then patiently and conscientiously prepare a lecture, making his words run with the action on the screen, emphasizing here and explaining there, will always be listened to with grateful interest by any kind of an audience, whether it be composed of men and women from the mills and factories or of a more cultured clientele. Indeed, we have the enthusiastic testimony of scores of exhibitors and hundreds of spectators that a picture which they had before seen without a lecture seemed like a new revelation when they saw it later and heard it properly explained; on the other hand, they characterized as "dead and flat" a fine picture which they saw without a lecture after having seen it once with a lecture. While in some cities, especially Boston, Chicago and Philadelphia, the lecture has made a distinct progress, it is but little used in other sections. Here is an opportunity for the wide-awake exhibitor. Let him try to introduce the lecture in his theatre, at first once or twice a week with proper advance advertising. If the experience of the past counts for anything, the box-office receipts will furnish the one unfailing test of the merit and value of the lecture.

"The Life of Christ" (Kalem)

Reviewed by Rev. W. H. Jackson

THIS masterpiece of Cinematography is at last realized. During the preparation of this subject frequent references have been made to its growth, as word came from the Holy Land, where it was being prepared amid the original surroundings. The great and first importance of the subject, and the immensity of the project, gave occasion for much wonder as to the outcome.

Without doubt the world holds no greater subject; for nearly eighteen centuries the greatest users of pen, pencil and chisel, have made their names great and immortal, only as they have succeeded in depicting if but occasional scenes, of the most marvelous life ever lived among men. These occasional scenes have enriched the libraries and art galleries of the world, until to-day a fortune is spent to secure a record of but an incident.

In the closing years of the last century, an eminent French artist, Louis Tissot, made the world richer by a most elaborate and painstaking series of pictures of the Bible lands and of the life of Christ. These pictures were the first attempt to link together those great occasions which earlier artists had only depicted separately, as their admiration for any particular occasion inspired them. The greatest honor, however, remained, as if waiting for the advent of the wonders of the Cinematograph. Thanks to the great and enlightening possibilities of cinematography, together with the ambition and enterprise of the Kalem Company, the history and art of the centuries have been linked together in one chain, and with the true groundwork of original location and familiar surroundings, coupled with a reasonable chronological arrangement, a picture five thousand feet in length illustrates that marvelous life, in which the whole world is interested from the "Manger to the Cross."

Beginning with Mary in her home in the true character of the saintly maiden, the Annunciation is the first familiar scene and is emphasized by the gentle and modest bearing of the young woman who is here taking so delicate a part; Joseph, in his work-shop busy, yet contemplative, as he looks upon Mary, pondering over that which has been revealed to him. The arrival at the "Inn," where accommodation is refused, is, to this point, the best scene (the Kalem Company seem to have been singularly successful in their groupings, every large group of people is most commendable); here Joseph, leading the ass upon which Mary is seated, moves away from the crowd and seeks the shelter of the stable. The manger scene is very beautiful and becomes instructive as one realizes that it is identical with the original conditions of the "manger cradle." The midnight shepherd scene upon the very hills of Judah is most realistic, the coming of the Wise Men from the East, and joining with the shepherds in the "adoration" is well balanced, and, although broadened a little from the original scene, is a reasonable digression and makes a good picture; the presentation of gold, frankincense and myrrh by the Wise Men is very clear.

Passing from the childhood to the youth of Jesus, traditions as to His boy life have been drawn upon legitimately. The picture of the youth working with his father and carrying a piece of wood over his shoulder in the direct sunlight, causing to fall upon the floor "The Shadow of the Cross," is prophetically sympathetic. The first visit to Jerusalem is a natural caravan scene, and the search for the missing boy portrays many anxious moments. The temple scene, where Jesus is found with the doctors, "both hearing them and asking them questions," is based upon familiar drawings and is very real, when discovered by His anxious parents, so perfect is the reproduction that it is easy to read His lip movements as with uplifted hand he says, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

THE MINISTRY OF JESUS is described in the next series. Beginning with John the Baptist as "The voice of one crying in the wilderness," we have what is perhaps the best single figure picture. John, dressed in "camel's hair" in the actual wilderness of Judea, is crying his warning, how fittingly nature suits the divine purpose, is here proven from the fact that the human voice carries several miles. Again John is seen addressing the multitude while Jesus is seen in the distance, whereupon John points Him out as the coming Messiah.

THE CALLING OF THE DISCIPLES is among the most perfect of the pictures, on the very shores of Galilee. "Simon and Andrew, his brother, casting a net into the sea, for they were fishers," are seen to respond to the "Master's" call; a little further on James and John with their father, Zebedee, are "in the ship mending their nets," when they, too, respond to the "call," and go forth with Him as the first of that little yet wonderful band, that was destined to influence the world.

The Marriage in Cana of Galilee, the healing of the blind, the lame and "all that were diseased" form a continuous series of strong scenes, which are depicted without undue emphasis being placed upon any event. The healing of the "man sick of the palsy" is especially detailed as a valuable subject, the exact kind of house in which the miracle took place being used. Lifting the palsied man to the roof, letting him down among those assembled within, the indignation of the Pharisees as they hear Jesus' words, and the final command "take up thy bed and walk," are all thoroughly and correctly shown, making a valuable picture in itself. The raising of Lazarus from the tomb which tradition holds to-day as "Lazarus' tomb," is produced with a care that does no violence, to what is perhaps the most difficult subject in the series.

Scenes from the Kalem Feature Production "The Life of Christ" (In Five Parts).

The last year of Christ's ministry is crowded with strongly portrayed events, leading up to the "Last Supper," and the attendant incidents. Events attending the especial relationship of Judas are given full consideration; beginning with his protest when Mary "wastes" the box of precious ointment, and wipes the Master's feet with her hair, are most carefully and thoroughly enacted.

"A Voice Crying in the Wilderness."

The covenanting with the Chief Priests for thirty pieces of silver and finally the betrayal. Of the betrayal it must be said that careful and unostentatious work has been done; incidents which might be easily exaggerated have been kept within moderate bounds.

In the "upper room" a careful representation of Christ "washing the disciples' feet," is given, Peter's protest is plain, followed by his desire for complete cleansing. Of the "Last Supper" it is evident great care has been taken to follow the record, as also to depict the occasion as seen by artists of earlier times. Reverence and due solemnity are apparent, the gravity of the dipping and presenting the "sop" to Judas are answers to the question of Peter and John, "Master, is it I?" The scene in the Garden is full of detail, which is only seen by careful observation. Peter's assault on the servant of the High Priest, whose ear he cuts off, and Christ's immediate healing of the same are important. The "falling back" of the soldiers at Christ's declaration "I am He" is well shown.

After the arrest the several appearances before Pilate lead up to the masterpieces of the whole. The groupings here are of the best, "Christ before Pilate," and Pilate's endeavor to release Him are exceedingly strong pictures. The "Ecce Homo" is a graphic reproduction ending with Pilate washing his hands and giving sentence "see ye to it." The mocking, scourging, the crown of thorns, the casting lots for Christ's garments are all shown in unexaggerated yet sad detail.

The procession to Calvary following the presumed route originally taken is a strange scene, which, while true, arouses a conflict of thoughts as to how thoroughly these scenes should be reproduced; suffice it to say that the written record has not been violated, cruel as is that record, so likewise is the portrayal. The crucifixion follows with the numerous details, the reed and sponge, the repentant thief, the faithful women, the darkness, the loud cry: "It is finished" and "yielding up the Ghost." He dies, making redemption complete, and the world's greatest tragedy is over.

What shall we say of this production? Simply this, if it had never occurred the picture need never exist, but having occurred, and being the one incident vital to the highest interests of humanity, rooted in the hearts and minds of men, the theme of all languages, the inspiration of all art, the fulfilment of all history and prophesy, its reproduction is legitimate. The greatest fear the writer had was lest the great character of the Christ might be, even unwittingly, abused. To the credit of all concerned, it must be said there is no "acting"; all seem impressed with the solemn dignity of the occasion equal to that shown by the players at Ober-Amergau in the Passion Play, and the impersonator of the Christ carried himself with solemn, humble yet becoming dignity throughout. As this is the world's greatest theme, it only follows that this is the greatest picture, and the Kalem Company must receive due commendation for placing before the world this wonderful film which places the highest and best uses of the moving picture in its most exalted place.

BRITISH PICTURES BACKWARD.

In commenting on the notorious backwardness of British film production, our esteemed contemporary, the "Bioscope," has some interesting things to say. We are quoting from the article:

"The fact which has militated, perhaps more than any other, against the English picture play's chance of reaching its fullest development, is the prejudice which unquestionably existed, at any rate until recently, on the part of the average professional actor against the rather contemptuously regarded 'photograph play.' It is the story of the music-halls over again. In the early days of the modern variety house, the actor—carefully distinguished from the mere twice-nightly 'artiste'—despised and rejected such offers as may have been made to him to appear on the 'halls,' believing such a method of revealing his talent to the public to be hopelessly vulgar, inartistic and altogether unworthy of his calling. Nowadays, however, the variety boards are recognized, even in the most exclusive and cautious circles, as being a perfectly legitimate field for the exercise of art, and, indeed, as an improvement in some respects upon the ordinary drama houses.

"It is this evolution of opinion which is now being gone through in regard to the Cinematograph drama. Actors are learning that, far from being beneath their notice, the picture theater has called into being an entirely new art with new conditions and new possibilities. They are commencing to realize that the business of acting for pictures demands a perfection of technique and a quality of talent no lower and no less exacting than those of the ordinary stage. The picture play has artistic possibilities as wide as those of the spoken drama; it is simply a question of difference of conditions—and these different conditions must be understood by the actor who ventures his art on the screen, no matter what his experiences in the older methods of dramatic expression. Speaking or silent, the players of both schools are brother mummers all, and to say that the art of one is higher than the art of the other is to attempt an impossible comparison."

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

CALIFORNIA LEAGUE ORGANIZES.

Successful Meeting Held in San Francisco—Picture Men Transact Much Business and Have Good Time, Too.

ON Tuesday, September 17, the first convention of California Motion Picture Exhibitors was held in the Kohler and Chase Hall, San Francisco. The first session of the convention was called to order by President Rothchild, of the San Francisco Local, at 10:30 o'clock Tuesday morning. Prayer was offered by the Rev. Dr. Rider, after which Mayor Rolph, of San Francisco, was introduced, and, in the name of the city, welcomed the exhibitors to their first California convention, offering to co-operate with them in an effort to secure the National convention for 1915. In conclusion he said: "A great responsibility rests upon the shoulders of you gentlemen. You have it in your power to do agreat amount of good in this world. The motion picture is just in its infancy and it will depend to a great extent upon the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League whether it will continue as a blessing. In the past the newspapers have been the greatest disseminators of intelligence, but the motion picture is rapidly coming to the front as an educator and means of entertainment. I live out here in the Mission and visit the motion picture theaters every once in a while, and I want to tell you I am astonished at the strides that the motion picture has taken in the past few years." The Mayor then handed "the Keys of the City" to the exhibitors during their stay, and said good-bye.

President Rothchild then addressed the convention as follows: "Mr. Mayor, on behalf of the M. P. E. L. of California, I extend to you, the heartfelt thanks of this convention and to assure you of the sincere appreciation of this organization for your many kind sentiments and to express a hope that, although this has been your first welcome to us, that it will not be your last; thank you. Gentlemen, we will now proceed with the regular business of this, our first convention. But before doing so I desire to express sincere gratification at the goodly attendance. The earnestness manifested and the many expressions of good feeling that have reached my ears. We are all to be congratulated upon the splendid showing that is being made here to-day. This has been made possible by the earnest, arduous, and unselfish labors of the enthusiastic and faithful members of the San Francisco Local and by your loyal co-operation. The various committees appointed by the chair about two months ago have been working strenuously to make this convention a success and our organization all we could expect it to be.

"A short time ago the exhibitors in San Francisco were strangers to each other and strangers to each others' methods and policies. To-day we are all acquainted, thanks to our meetings. We are all acquainted and have a neighborly feeling even though near competitors. This is as it should be and best results can be attained by the frequent exchanges of ideas and improved methods.

"It is the desire of this convention that every exhibitor whether a member or not, be permitted to freely air his views, to give his ideas as to what could or should be done to improve and elevate our business.

"It is an undisputable fact that through organization and consultation much can and will be done to elevate and improve the business. It is also an undisputable fact that the combined investments of the exhibitors are greater than the combined investments of the manufacturers and exchanges. They, through organization, control the business, while the control should be with us.

"The National and State Leagues in time will correct many of the glaring evils and differences that now exist; we must, in order to succeed, work shoulder to shoulder, put aside petty differences and labor for the general good. The ultimate result, the success or failure of our mission rests entirely with us. By proper management and devotion to our cause we cannot fail. Every member of our association from Siskiyou to San Diego shall and will be benefited.

"We must be patient and not expect every abuse to be corrected at once. Remember that Rome was not built in a day. When we build we must do it right and upon a solid foundation. And after we begin our structure, to proceed along correct lines. That we will not have to undo what we have done. Eventually success must crown our efforts.

"Many changes must be made in methods of transacting our business from the manufacturing down to the handling of the public in our theaters. We should transact our business with the public in a dignified and business-like manner and not permit them to leave our places with the idea that we have taken their money and given them nothing in return.

"Our competitive ideas and desire to obtain from the public the ultimate nickle is to blame for much of our unpopularity. We should refrain from misleading, sensational and vulgar advertising. We should put our business upon a higher plane by refusing to exhibit indecent, sensational, or criminal subjects. If we proceed along these lines and labor for the perpetuation of our business, it will not be long before the guns of our enemies will be effectually spiked. And we will have the unanimous support and approval of all right thinking people.

"And now, gentlemen, and ladies, I will call upon you to place in nomination a temporary chairman."

President Rothchild was chosen temporary chairman and W. O. Cory, secretary of the San Francisco Local, temporary secretary. Chairman Rothchild appointed the following gentlemen on By-Laws and Constitution: Messrs. Oberly, Cory, Connare, Martin, Bunkers, Hanlon and Tugwell. The committee retired for consultation and the exhibitors present signed the roll of membership and engaged in an informal discussion of the convention until 12:30 o'clock, when an adjournment was taken to enable the Committee on Constitution to prepare its report. Pictures were taken for the animated weeklies as the exhibitors left the hall. After luncheon at the Portola Louvre, the party boarded automobiles and visited the show places of the city.

Tuesday Evening Session.

The evening session was called to order at 7:30 o'clock when the report of the Committee on Constitution and By-Laws was heard. It developed that a unanimous decision could not be reached for the reason that one of the clauses submitted prohibited exhibitors who were engaged in the exchange or supply business from becoming members of the League. This clause affected several exhibitors from Los Angeles and San Francisco. The delegates from Los Angeles held out for a compromise, but the other members of the committee opposed the plan on the ground that the National League constitution contained such a provision which must be complied with by every branch thereof.

While the exhibitors from Los Angeles remained during the convention their organization, as at present constituted, could not become affiliated with the California League, for the reason that its president and secretary are interested in the exchange business. It is believed that a reorganization of the Los Angeles local will take place before the next state convention. The San Francisco local squared its membership list with the constitutional requirements before the expiration of the session, those not entitled to membership under the rule handing in their resignations.

Wednesday's Session.

The greater part of Wednesday was taken up with an excursion to the Niles Studio of the Essanay Company, where the exhibitors were royally received by Mr. G. M. Anderson and his company of players. After witnessing the taking of a scene from one of the "Broncho Billy" pictures, the party went to Fernbrook Park, where the delegates were further entertained by the Essanay folks with an elaborate luncheon. A picture of the party was also taken.

In the evening but few assembled in the convention hall. The question of the regulation of traveling shows was taken up and a committee consisting of Messrs. Martin, Bunkers and Schmidt appointed to devise a plan to eliminate the evil. On the question of restricting the number of picture theaters in the smaller towns, Messrs. Bunkers, Meyers, Greenwood, and Von Emmell were appointed as a committee to frame up a plan to meet that emergency.

Thursday's Session.

Thursday's morning session was called to order at 10:30 o'clock. A motion to exclude all members of the press from the room was defeated by an almost unanimous vote. Questions regarding "state rights" men and the number of reels that shall constitute a show at a five cent admission price were discussed. The first question was referred to the officers of the National League. Regarding the number of reels for a show it was decided that the limit of a five-cent show should be three; more than that with singing acts should call for a 10-cent admission.

An adjournment was taken at 12:30 o'clock to give the members a chance to prepare for the election. This order of business was taken up at 2:30 o'clock when the convention went into executive session. The result of the election was:

President—Charles Rothchild, San Francisco.
Secretary—M. E. Cory, San Francisco.
Treasurer—H. L. Hilts, San Diego.
Sergeant-at-Arms—Mr. Beach, Berkeley.

The president of each local will be a vice-president of the state organization.

Delegates to the National Convention—Ben. Michles, A. R. Oberly, and William Woober.

San Diego was selected as the place for the next state convention to be held during the month of September.

Standing committees were appointed on legislation, adjustment of labor difficulties, publicity, auditing, grievances, and investigation.

Votes of thanks were accorded the San Francisco local for its efforts to entertain the members of the convention, and to Kohler & Chase for the use of the hall.

All business of the convention being concluded at 5:30 o'clock an adjournment was taken.

Convention Banquet.

At 8 o'clock Thursday evening the delegates to the convention and their friends assembled at Swan's Cafe, where 250 covers were laid. During the banquet an interesting program of entertainment was furnished by an orchestra, and singer, supplemented by a good picture show, including the motion pictures of the convention party taken during the two previous days.

While the diners were still at table a flashlight photograph taken early in the evening was passed around. The picture was taken by Mr. Sciaroni, of Miles Brothers, and completed in less than an hour.

Under the direction of N. K. Herzog, as toastmaster, remarks were made by President Rothchild, Supervisor Ralph McClarion, G. M. Anderson, Arthur Mackley, Judge Tugwell, Ben Michles, W. A. Cory, George Chase, Sol Lesser, Mr. Lobe and H. L. Hilts.

Their Mr, Bernhard Badrian also demonstrated the G. E. Rectifier, Ozonators and Spot Lights. The Pacific Home Motion Picture Co. were projecting pictures in their display room; the manager, Mr. M. E. Cory, being in charge. Hancock Bros. had a display of their "Made in California" tickets and coupons. The Art Slide Co. had several hundred of their advertising and announcement slides on display, showing the varied designs they carry in stock. The Tam Slide Co. had a number of their unique slides in their display, they making a specialty of original designs. Mr. Tam was formerly cartoonist on an evening paper, but is now devoting his time to the slide business. Bio Carbons were well demonstrated, a complete line of that product being shown. The A. H. Andrews Co. had a complete line of their theater chairs on the floor, and they called especial attention to their "Spreckles" chair, which is the same as is being installed i the million dollar theater now being erected in San Diego.

The wonderful success of the convention is due mainly to the efforts of the following chairmen of committees and their associates: Wm. P. Wobber, Arrangements; Chas. Maio, Hotel and Transportation; Sol Lesser, Entertainment; W. A. Cory, Concession; Joseph Hoff, Publicity. Everyone remarked on the truly remarkable smoothness with which the business was attended to and the Moving Picture World hereby congratulates M. P. E. L. of California upon the really astonishing success of their initial convention.

GREAT ENTHUSIASM IN TEXAS.

Reports from the office of the National President of the Motion Picture League indicate that there will be a record breaking convention of exhibitors in Dallas, Tex., on the 15th and 16th of October. President Neff writes that he has received eighty-six letters from Texas exhibitors, all of which speak of the coming convention in most enthusiastic terms, the writers promising to be in Dallas when the meeting opens.

Dallas exhibitors are making extensive preparations to take care of the visitors. At a recent meeting they appointed T. P. Finnegan, manager of the Hippodrome Amusement Company, as chairman of the entertainment committee. He will have charge of all arrangements and has taken hold of the task in a way that promises a splendid reception for the delegates. E. T. Peter, of the Mutual Film Exchange, has secured the use of the Chamber of Commerce hall for the meetings of the convention. Ned Depinet of the Texas Film Exchange, Dallas, is also on the job, planning an entertainment.

President Neff writes that he expects to leave Cincinnati for Dallas about October 12, and hopes to arrive in that city on the 14th. He is looking forward to a very successful meeting.

PLANS FOR A WORLD'S MOTION PICTURE EXPOSITION.

President S. H. Trigger, of the New York City Exhibitors' Association, has been working on the details of a plan for a World's Exposition for the motion picture industry, to be held in New York in conjunction with the National Convention of Motion Picture Exhibitors in July, 1913. A preliminary canvas of the situation reveals that such an exposition can be held at an expense not to exceed $30,000. A very fair proposition has been made by the World's National Exposition Company, of which Richard G. Holloman is vice-president. This proposition contemplates the use of Grand Central Palace, New York, for both exposition and convention.

In view of the progress made, President Trigger has appointed the following Exposition Committee: Frank Tichenor, chairman; M. Needles, F. E. Samuels, L. Rosenthal, M. Blumenthal, and Mr. King, with and additional advisory committee to act in conjunction with them consisting of Sidney Ascher, R. L. McNabb, Edward Valensi, A. Baurenfreund, Grant Anson, Goldfarb and Fleischman.

These committees will make a further canvas of the proposition.

NEW YORK CITY LOCAL REDUCES DUES.

Desiring to increase its membership the New York City Exhibitors' Association has reduced its annual dues from $40 to $20, beginning October 1st, 1912. The initiation fee has also been waived for the current quarter, so that those paying $5 will be admitted to full membership. The officers of the organization explain this action on the ground that the financial condition of the local is such that a large membership fee is no longer needed to create a fund, while there are many exhibitors who have been holding out on account of the cost who ought to be members. Exhibitors of Greater New York should take advantage of this liberal offer and enroll themselves on the membership list at once.

LOOK OUT FOR POLITICAL SLIDES.

Mr. A. Baurenfreund, chairman of the political slide committee of the New York Exhibitors' Association, has sent out a warning to members of the Association cautioning them not to accept slides handed them for political purposes until the claims of the candidate have been passed upon by the committee. Exhibitors are requested to refer all such propositions to the Association Headquarters, 136 Third Avenue, New York.

NEW LOCALS ORGANIZED.

Local organizations of exhibitors have been formed in Charleston, W. Va., and Springfield, Ohio.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

IT is now being developed that a number of sharpers are taking advantage of unsophisticated men and women throughout the country, who have a desire to become attached to the producing forces of the manufacturers of films. These unwary people, whose chief purpose in life is to get before the camera in a photoplay, are so intent on their purpose that they become an easy prey to designing and unprincipled men, whose one object is to get money at all hazards.

About two weeks ago an intelligent looking man and his wife called at the city office of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, in the First National Bank Building, this city. Manager Day listened to their tale of woe with a sympathetic ear, for they had been promised lucrative positions with the Essanay by an oily tongued rascal in Kansas City, who had an office in the Missouri Building there. This fellow, so they said, had a class of twenty-two aspirants for photoplay honors as actors, and each of them had paid a stiff price for the course that was to fit them for the positions, which he assured them, it was in his power to secure. This gentleman and his good wife began to grow suspicious of the "professor" as time passed, and, without advising him of their intention, they came on to Chicago to investigate. When Manager Day explained that every film manufacturer in the business had a special department for the engagement of talent and that their "professor" had no right to claim that he could place any member of his class with any manufacturer, they were greatly surprised, and were evidently pleased that the swindler had not got his aching palm on more of their good money.

Mr. Day advised them to call at the Chicago office of the World and give particulars. This they promised to do; but, being likely ashamed of their having been played for "fall guys," they never did. I do not even know their names, as they were careful not to reveal them to Mr. Day, but that fact will not prevent the matter being aired.

That the Kansas City shark is not the only one engaged in such "professional" duties, I submit the following excerpt from the Los Angeles Examiner, bearing the date of September 22:

"Offering to plead guilty, if given a suspended sentence, Fred Osborne, proprietor of the New York School of Acting, with quarters in the Canadian Building, attempted to have his case disposed of yesterday morning before Justice Williams in police court. Objections, however, were entered by Inspector J. J. Egan, of the State Labor Commission, who effected the arrest of Osborne on the ground that Osborne had accepted money for positions he did not have to offer.

"Egan agreed, however, to drop prosecution and permit a suspended sentence for Osborne, only on the ground that the school make complete restitution to all of the pupils who have paid money for motion picture experience.

"Osborne claimed that he was not responsible and that H. J. Brand, supposed to be the head of the Brand's Advanced Motion Picture Company, should pay back the money, as he has about $15,000, Osborne says, derived from the scheme.

"Justice Williams refused to take action in the case, and refused to enter into any agreement, saying that the case would be passed on according to its legal merits. Inspector Egan claims that only a conviction in the case will be warranted in the light of the facts and refused to treat with counsel for Osborne. Osborne will appear in court October 30, for a jury trial, when he will be confronted with the statements of many of his alleged 'disgruntled pupils,' who claim that after they had paid him sums ranging from $20 to $45, he did not see a position in sight."

The film exchange men and exhibitors of Kansas City will render motion picture business good service by drawing the attention of the local press to the swindle. It is hoped that the swindler may yet be caught and forced to disgorge the money obtained from his too gullible victims; or, if not, that he may be compelled to earn the full amount, at $1 per day, on the rock pile.

Improvements at Selig's Edendale Plant.

William N. Selig returned last week from his California trip. He tells me that additions are now being made to the Edendale plant, which will extend it so as to cover the entire block. The Mission walls will be carried out to the boundary lines, and the five entrances will be exact duplicates of California Missions. The two additional entrances will represent the Santa Barbara and Mount Carmel entrances. The improvements will include new dressing rooms, a developing room, etc.

Among the prominent feature films now under way at the Selig studios are: "The Servant in the House, Mizpah" (by Ella Wheeler Wilcox), "The Crisis" (by Winston Churchill), and "The Cherry Pickers." These will be two and three-reel subjects.

Chicago Screen Club Under Way.

On Wednesday, September 25, about eighteen men, connected with various branches of the film industry in Chicago, met and formed themselves into a temporary general committee for the formation of a Screen Club, similar to that recently formed in New York. Organization plans were discussed and arrangements made for a general meeting of all interested at an early date.

In a few days from the time of writing a call will be issued to all who are eligible. At the first regular meeting of those who make answer, the temporary committee will be dissolved and a permanent organization effected. It is expected that the movement will have the hearty endorsement of all Chicago motion picture men, and that the club will be typical, and worthy, of Chicago.

Picture Business Booms in the Southland.

R. W. Horne, traveling representative of the Kleine Optical Co., has returned after a trip of seven weeks in the interests of his firm.

During his absence, Mr. Horne visited New York City, Jersey City, Newark, N. J.; Montclair, N. J.; Savannah, Ga.; Macon, Valdosta, Ga.; Jacksonville, Fla.; Tampa, Pensacola, Mobile, Montgomery, Birmingham, Atlanta, and Nashville. Motion picture theaters are doing fine business all along the line. Mr. Horne was struck by the attractive and modern picture houses in the South, and by the fine projection and good programs offered. Music is made an important feature.

The houses in Mobile, especially, lay considerable stress on musical accompaniment. Most of the Southern houses charge 10 cents for a program of two or three reels. Mobile is the only city among those visited where five cents admission is charged.

Cines films are in big demand in the Southern States, more especially in Louisiana and Alabama.

Mr. Horne states that the Lubin Company will open a studio in Jacksonville this fall.

Beverley B. Dobbs' Arctic Pictures.

After a run at the Whitney Theater, this city, during which 330 presentations of his famous Arctic films were given—breaking all previous records here—Beverley B. Dobbs, arctic explorer and expert camera man, has departed for New York City. There he will present his absorbing views of the polar regions for a long run, in one of the leading first-class theaters.

The collection of pictures exploited by Mr. Dobbs is especially interesting to Americans, because it deals chiefly with life in Alaska, that great possession, teeming with natural wealth and scenic wonders.

The programs offered by Mr. Dobbs are highly educational, and the eye is aided by lectures, delivered in simple, conversational style, by Mr. Dobbs himself. The ear also is enabled to assist in making the scenes realistic; for that really wonderful Arctic-sound-effect man, Sidney Davies, works with such magical effect behind the screen that one hears the bellowing of the walrus, and all the other sounds heard in that strange land, on mountain, river, lake and ocean.

Among the pictures is a fine travelogue, which shows a trip beginning at the Seattle docks and ending at St. Michael and Nome. One travels to Skagway; out over the White Pass, through Skagway Valley, along the trail of '98, on which so many met disaster; up to the Summit, where the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes float together at the boundary line; down to Lake Bennet, through Miles Canyon, past the Forty Mile Landmark, on to Caribou, Dawson, Circle City, and the land of the midnight sun.

One the most exciting scenes among the lot is that showing the walrus hunt, with many thousands of the bulky creatures thrashing the sea into foam. Then there is a polar bear hunt, a scene showing native seal hunters, another giving the most definite particulars of an all-Alaska dog team race.

We pass through an ice pack on our voyage through Bering Sea into the Arctic, visit the miners at work in the Northern goldfields, see living pictures of the Eskimo at work and at play, and take a cruise along the rugged coast of Siberia and learn the customs and means of livelihood of the Siberian natives.

Mr. Dobbs, indeed, deserves not only liberal support, but also warm praise, for the entertainment, education and positive enjoyment afforded by these pictures—the result of ten long years of hardships and peril in the far North.

Miss Marth Russell's Lecture Tour.

Miss Marth Russell, whose special season with the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company as leading lady, has expired, was a visitor at the World office last week and informed me that she would leave the city in a day or two on a lecturing tour.

Miss Russell will appear in all the leading picture theaters of the South, and will give interesting talks on the production of moving pictures, these talks being illustrated by film subjects in which she has appeared for the Essanay Company. About 20 films are listed in her repertory, in each of which she has acted the leading part.

Among these are several fine films taken during the season just closed, including "The Return of William Marr," "Signal Lights," "Her Hour of Triumph," "Adamless Eden," "Twilight," "Neptune's Daughter," "The End of the Feud," "The Call of the Sea," and "Romance of the Dells."

Miss Russell will first appear in several Missouri cities, and will thence proceed to Shreveport, La., and thence to Texas, where she has been booked for 24 nights in leading picture theaters at a high guaranteed salary. She will be in Dallas during the approaching State Convention of Exhibitors.

Chicago Film Brevities.

The Sanitary Bureau of the Health Department of Chicago has just turned in a report covering the past summer months. Out of a grand total of inspections, numbering 14,805, for the month of August alone, including all kinds of cases, there has not been a single adverse report against picture theaters, nor has there been one during the entire summer. This is a standing rebuke to all who would class such places of amusement among public nuisances.

Fred W. Young, manager of the United Amusement and Supply Co., of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, writes that "Convict Life in an Ohio Penitentiary," one of their leading feature pictures, is being presented to fine audiences. "It is one of the biggest money getters on the road to-day, and we carry the best display front of any feature now showing," writes Mr. Young.

Charles O. Baumann, Ad. Kessel and Fred Balshofer, all of the New York Motion Picture Co., stopped over in Chicago, for a few hours on Thursday, September 26th, on their way from Los Angeles to New York City. It is understood that these members of the New York Motion Picture Co. have formulated new plans regarding their future output and its distribution.

Herman Fichtenberg, of St. Louis, interested in the Consolidated Film Exchanges of the South, was a guest at the Sherman House, for several days last week. During his stay he visited relatives and transacted business connected with his companies. He left on Tuesday, October 1, for his home.

Miss Clark is the only lady manager of a photoplay house in Elgin.

F. L. Lane, of Andalusia, Ala., arrived in Chicago several days ago after disposing of his three Southern photoplay houses at a very satisfactory price. They were the three Iris theaters of Andalusia, Florida and Greenville, Ala. Mr. Lane at one time owned The Dixie at Andalusia, which was devoted exclusively to the colored race, but which he was compelled to close shortly after its opening, on account of the natural prejudice existing and the effect upon the patronage of his other playhouses. Mr. Lane expects to take a trip to Milwaukee and from there to New York to look over the field, with the intention of erecting a modern moving picture theater. His nine years' experience in the South prompts him to say that this section of the country offers great opportunity for the exhibitor who is willing to give the right sort of service. He personally has expressed his highest appreciation of the splendid patronage given him.

READY TO RESUME.

Phillips Smalley and his wife (Lois Weber) who severed their long connection with the Rex company a couple of months ago, have returned to the city from an extended walking tour in the Catskills. Mrs. Smalley not only played leads but wrote many of the Rex plays and assisted in their direction and their retirement from the company was largely due to her need of mental and physical rest. This they found in the haunts of the heroes of Irving and Cooper and now they are back home ready to resume work when it offers, which should not be long.

Doings at Los Angeles

Stirring Up the Actor's Schools—Selig Manager Injured—Much Good Gossip.

"TAKE all or none" was the ultimatum which the Los Angeles delegation to the state convention delivered to the motion picture men's state organization during the big meeting in San Francisco last week. According to the report which the Los Angeles exhibitors brought back the convention accepted the latter portion of the proposition and the consequence is that the Los Angeles exhibitors, as at present organized, will not join the state organization.

In the last analysis the situation resolved itself into the question of whether Judge A. P. Tugwell, of Los Angeles, should be accepted for membership in the state body. Judge Tugwell is president of the Los Angeles organization and one of the pioneer exhibitors in the business. The by-laws of the state organization bar all persons connected with exchanges and manufacturers, and the Judge recently organized the Sunset Film Exchange of this city, which he is now conducting. There were other members of the Los Angeles organization who are connected with the proscribed branch of the business and they, too, would have been excluded had the local body joined the state body.

This, in the end, was the ground upon which the Los Angeles delegation based its action in failing to join, but there were, of course, other minor considerations. For one thing, the San Francisco men, it was said, are seeking a daily change of programs. The Los Angeles brethren do not consider this desirable and are all satisfied with the twice-weekly change.

"We are getting along pretty well as we are," one of the returned delegates said. "Apparently what we want, the San Francisco exhibitors either do not want, or are indifferent about, and vice versa. We have a strong, healthy organization in Los Angeles now, our only battles are local issues which our organization is able to handle, and since we saw so little to gain through joining, and so much to lose in having to drop some of our most influential members, there seemed only one wise course to be followed."

Actors' School Promoters In Bad.

Fred Osborne, director of the New York School of Acting, of this city, was arrested September 19 by J. J. Egan, deputy commissioner of the state labor bureau, charged with violating the state employment law. The specific charge was that Osborne had obtained fees from pupils on the promise that he would obtain positions for them, when the promised positions did not exist.

Two days after Osborne's arrest the name of H. J. Brand, president of Brand's Advanced Motion Picture Co., was brought into the case and he, too, was arrested as an accessory to the violation.

Eagan charges that Osborne and Brand had an arrangement between them whereby the head of the motion picture company advertised for actors for motion picture work, and that applicants for the positions were told that it would be necessary for them to obtain certain experience before they could be employed, being then referred to Osborne, who charged them $5 a week or more for schooling. Some of the applicants who had been paying tuition for upwards of six weeks were unable to get any satisfactory statement about when they would begin to collect salary, and thereupon filed complaint with the state labor bureau.

Both Osborne and Brand have stated that the violation of the law was only technical and that they acted in good faith; that the pupils were given bona fide instruction, designed to fit them for motion picture work, and that it was the intention to give them employment as soon as they became proficient.

Both were arraigned in the police court. Osborne's case will be heard before a jury October 30, and the Brand case will be disposed of later.

Cameraman Loses Life.

Maxwell S. Bruzzel, who lost his life in Arizona last week under tragic circumstances, which themselves suggest a photoplay situation, was well known in Los Angeles, where he was formerly employed as cameraman for the Selig Polyscope Co., and later for the Bison-101 Company. Bruzzel, who was barely 22 years old, had just married a 17-year-old bride after a romantic courtship of two years. They went to Arizona on their wedding journey to visit a mining prospect which Bruzzel owned. Robert Hunt, father of the bride, accompanied them, the three traveling with a wagon and team. They camped one night seventy miles from any habitation and, during the night, Bruzzel awoke and went around to the front of the wagon to get a drink of water from the canteen. Hunt was aroused but only half awake. He seized a rifle and mistaking Bruzzel for some wild animal, fired and mortally wounded him. Then began a race across the desert for the nearest doctor. Bruzzel lived out the seventy mile journey, but died soon after receiving medical attention. His widow has returned to Los Angeles. The dead man came to Los Angeles a little more than two years ago from New York City.

Magee Injured.

James L. Magee, general manager of the Selig Polyscope Co. plant, at Edendale, was painfully but not seriously injured September 21, when he was the victim of a brutal attack made upon him by E. H. Philbrook, a discharged employe. Philbrook, who had served as cameraman, actor and bookkeeper, had been discharged by William Selig, after Magee had turned over the management of the plant to Thomas S. Nash, his successor, preparatory to making a trip to Japan with a Selig Company. The discharged employe went to Magee's office, where the two men were alone. There was no altercation and Magee says that they had just shaken hands when Philbrook, who is a large, well built individual, struck him suddenly and knocked him down. Magee was left unconscious on the floor while Philbrook left the plant and from another place telephoned Mr. Selig that he had just knocked Magee out. Some person about the same time telephoned to Mr. Magee's mother in another part of the city, telling her that her son had been assaulted. This message was not sent from the Selig plant.

Brevities.

The appearance of Director Griffith, of the Biograph, as an actor in one of his own films, created a great deal of professional interest among exhibitors in Los Angeles. The film was "Two Daughters of Eve," released last week. Griffith appears only in one scene, the last one at the stage door, where he walks slowly into the picture from the spectator's left and crosses the screen. He is the tall man in the light suit and Panama hat. Griffith has spent a great deal of time here with his company and is known personally to most of the exhibitors. Extreme shyness of the camera is one of his personal peculiarities, hence the amazement of his friends when they found him walking into a picture. So far as they know this is the first time he has ever been photographed—barring, possibly, baby pictures, which he couldn't help.

Frank C. Egan, head of the Egan Dramatic School, and business associate of John Cort, Oliver Morosco, and other theatrical magnates, has announced that he is going into the motion picture business at once. The announcement was not a willing one, but was dragged out of him after advertisements had appeared in the local newspapers under his name, asking for cameramen, a director, and other employes necessary to the mechanical side of motion picture manufacturing.

The details of his project are not ready to be announced, he says. He has concluded negotiations with New York interests to begin work with one company immediately producing photoplays, which will be remarkable for their artistic merit, but which will not be educational in the technical sense, except only as beauty and perfection are always educational.

An Information Department for the benefit of its patrons is the innovation which has just been instituted by the Liberty Theater, a Licensed house at Third and Main Streets. At every performance a slide is shown bearing the inscription "Any information desired by our patrons about the films or the actors will be furnished by the Liberty management." The experience of the management has been that most of the queries can be satisfied with the assistance of the data furnished by the manufacturers and exchanges and the Moving Picture World, but whenever a difficult question is asked the patron is requested to leave his name and address and the information is hunted up and sent to him. The plan promises to stimulate interest in the motion pictures.

Miss Edna Levi, of San Antonio, Tex., and Rollin S. Sturgeon, director and general manager of the Western Vitagraph Company's studios at Santa Monica, Cal., were married in Los Angeles September 26. Miss Levi, whose stage name is Edna Fisher, was formerly leading woman with the Santa Monica Vitagraph Company. Sturgeon kept his approaching marriage a profound secret from his friends and associates and the first information they received reached them after the ceremony had been performed.

Col. Theodore Roosevelt, on his campaign tour of the West for the Progressive Party, visited Los Angeles, September 23. With him, occupying a portion of the private car at the rear of the train came two cameramen of the General Film Publicity and Sales Co., who have been photographing the colonel daily on his trip. In California, the reception he received was something extraordinary, and it kept the operators busy climbing off the train at each station between San Francisco and Los Angeles, taking pictures of crowds that increased in size each time he spoke. The biggest crowd of all was in Los Angeles, where, according to one of the operators, the best crowd picture he ever saw was obtained.

POWELL.

At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs.

By G. F. Blaisdell.

Joe Welch, the famous character actor, has closed a contract with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to appear in a two or three reel production, to be entitled "The Peddler." Mr. Welch will have the lead. The picture will be made under the supervision of Edwin Porter here in New York City. The Universal announces that it will spend all the money necessary to make this a real feature, and in order that there may be no question as to local color has obtained special privileges from the United States Bureau of Immigration.

Albert Smith, of the Vitagraph, so I am informed, is to "raise" Frank Bunny, the son of the man everyone knows. Young Bunny started in this week at the Vitagraph plant, and he will be sent through every department. Here's the best of luck!

Harry Warner has gone to St. Louis, where he will make his headquarters and have general charge of the agencies of his brother's "Features." Also he will be closely in touch with the St. Louis Motion Picture Company, with which concern "Warner's Features" have intimate business relations. A. Warner will devote his attention to general affairs. Mr. Warner announces that his two-reel feature "Regeneration," is now ready for shipment. This is a strong domestic drama, vividly depicting the temptations of a man with an appetite for strong drink and how he surmounted them with the aid of a wife who stuck to him. Following "Regeneration" will be a big military drama, which will be ready for booking by the middle of the month. Mr. Warner says it will be a "crackerjack."

The Kalem Company has made a picture in which is featured "Death Valley Scotty," not unknown to fame as a transcontinental record-maker. The title will be "Death Valley Scotty's Mine." In the course of the picture a trip is made across the desert to Scotty's mine. In one scene it was scheduled that Scotty should be tied. To this he made strenuous objections, saying that all his life he had made it a point never to allow himself to be placed in such a position that he could not defend himself. It is said that the eccentric Westerner proved a "find," and that with his aid it was possible to put over a genuine Western—one with a real thrill.

Dropped in on Abe Rothschild, the genial manager of the Herald Square, on Monday. He was busy counting money. Asked if that particular feature of his work was the hardest task he had, he replied: "Well, I'll admit we are counting about 75 per cent. more than we were last year this time. And we were going some then." The Herald Square certainly deserves all the success it gets. It puts up a fine show, the house is carefully managed, and every attention is paid to the comfort of the patrons of the house. The front of the Herald Square and the lobby as well are undergoing improvement, getting ready for the big winter business. Mr. Rothschild is assisted in the management of the "Square" by Abe Kalman, who also is alert in promoting the comfort of the patrons. On Tuesday, October 1, Bernhardt's "Queen Elizabeth" was at the "Square." Four thousand nine hundred and sixty-one persons paid on this one day to see the Divine Sarah. This may not be a record for a photoplay in New York, but the figures are impressive.

William J. Burns, the well-known detective, has collaborated with the Kalem Company in the production of a multiple reel picture, the title of which will be "Detective William J. Burns in the Exposure of the Land Swindlers." The scenario is based on land frauds in the South, and in the writing of it use was made of the first-hand knowledge of Mr. Burns in a similar case. Mr. Burns is said to have proved an excellent actor. The play will cover a wide range of country, many of the scenes being laid in the South, and others in Washington and New York.

This sterling actress should bring out something worth while. She will be supported by Chiefs Phillippi and Harvey, of the Chimallo tribe. The title as announced will be "Star Eye's Strategy." A feature will be in the introduction of several vivid Indian dances. It is believed this production will be one of the first, if not the first, straight Indian drama to be made on the screen.

David McGowan, cashier of the Eclair Company, showed the writer a remarkable bookkeeping coincidence this week. Recently two plays with a political touch were released within a few weeks of each other—"Running for Congress" and "The Governor's Daughter." In no item of expense were the figures the same; in one there were sixteen entries; in the other twelve. The total in each case was identical to a penny—and if an equal amount should be expended on films by all manufacturers the average quality of pictures would be materially raised.

The Kalem Company that made the "Life of Christ" pictures in Jerusalem left Liverpool for New York on October 3, after having been abroad nearly a year. Recently this group has made a number of multiple-reel plays based on old-time Irish subjects, notably Boucicault's "Shaughran" and Joe Murphy's "Kerry Gow," besides a number of one-reel Irish subjects. This past week the company had been working in Scotland on a historical production.

Mr. Buel is working on various scenes in Bronson Howard's "Shenandoah," a military play, the rights of which have been purchased from the widow of the playwright. It is intended to make the picture in historical locations in the South, taking in Winchester, Va., the location of the well-known Sheridan's ride; Fort Sumter, and various other places.

This shift means that within four blocks on Broadway one may now see representative programs of Licensed and Independent films.

GLADYS HULETTE IN LEGITIMATE.

Gladys Hulette, who has appeared in many of the pictures produced by the Edison and Vitagraph Companies, is now filling the role of Beth in a dramatization of Louisa M. Alcott's popular novel, "Little Women." The play opened for a week at the Alvin Theater, Pittsburg, Pa., on Monday, September 30th. After a few dress rehearsals at the Playhouse Theater, New York City, the company will begin playing for the public.

ITALA TO RELEASE LONG FILMS.

The Itala Film Co. of America, of which Harry R. Raver is the head, will soon issue for the American trade a series of long films composed of two and three reels each. For these special productions a coterie of noted artists have been engaged, prominent among whom are Gina Marangoni, Giuseppina Amici, Berta Nelson and Lydia Quaranta, all of whom are well and favorably known throughout the largest theaters in all Europe. Commendatore Ermete Zacconi, conceded to be the greatest living Italian actor, and perhaps the most prominent in Europe, will be seen in these forthcoming Itala multiple films.

Mlle. Gina Marangoni, Leading Itala Artiste.

The policy of the Itala Company will be confirmed to the appointment of exclusive agents in the United States, these agents to control certain territory. The first of the new Itala releases is called "Souls in Torture," and consists of two reels. As the title infers, the subject deals with heart throbs and the bitter problems of life. Several elaborate scenes are unfolded as the story proceeds. A very large cast of players is used. A reproduction of a fox hunt with blooded horses and a fine pack of hounds adds to the exciting features of the story. "Souls in Torture" will be sold to exclusive state right buyers through the Film Supply Co. of America. The headquarters of the company is at 805 Columbia Theater Building, New York.

SCREEN CLUB ELECTS OFFICERS.

On Saturday evening, September 28, the Screen Club elected permanent officers. John Bunny placed in nomination for president, King Baggot, who had been acting as temporary presiding officer. Mr. Baggot was elected by acclamation. He was given a hearty reception. Mr. Baggot returned the compliment by nominating Mr. Bunny for first vice-president, and he also was elected by acclamation amid applause. The others elected were: Second vice-president, G. M. Anderson; third vice-president, Arthur Johnson; corresponding secretary, Calder Johnstone; recording secretary, Harry Raver; treasurer, A. C. Willat; two-year governors, William Robert Daly, Lawrence McGill, Herbert Brenon and A. Victor Smith; one-year governors, Tefft Johnson, Pierce Kingsley, Oscar C. Apfel, and C. Jay Williams.

The next meeting will be held on Saturday evening, October 26, at which time it is probable the charter will close.

"The Little Minister"

A Two-Part Vitagraph Feature

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THIS photoplay is made delightful from beginning to end by the engaging charm of Miss Clara Kimball Young. Her acting has the winning spontaneity that Miss Lawrence first injected into the picture comedies, and her character revelations bring her swiftly to the front rank of young actresses who have to depend entirely upon the visual appeal to express the sentiments and attributes of a role. She has done fine work before in Vitagraph portrayals —the sympathetic intelligence of a woman far above the average in character and training has been visible in minor opportunities—but the part of Lady Babbie seems to let out what is in her. I am sure that Barrie would have found her just what his imagination pictured, or satisfying enough to have replaced his own ideal.

It is not an easy matter for the most appreciative of critics to closely define what is especially pleasing in the personality of an attractive young actress. Youth and beauty count, and Miss Kimball has both. She has expressive eyes and keeps them very busy. She has a smile that is fascinating, and it is as girlish as her joyous movements. She has variety in swift changes from tragic resentment to tender affection, she is distinctly feminine in her moods, and all these combine to attract and hold the eye from the moment she enters a scene until she leaves it, but I am inclined to think that what goes over is what lies deep in herself, undiscovered by theatrical artifice. She has an unconscious manner of showing us a true-hearted young woman of brains and broad sympathies.

Miss Young is extremely fortunate in having James Young play opposite her in the title role. I am reasonably sure that he could have drawn more attention to himself—his big chance has yet to come—but he exhibits great delicacy in not obtruding upon the antics of Lady Babbie. His performance is the more creditable for its responsiveness without enforcement of his prominence. He probably follows the stage play rather than Barrie's story in this respect, filling the impersonation without distracting interest from the real centre figure, her characterization being the more important and decidedly the more interesting. "The Little Minister" is a rather simple gentleman thrown into an environment that calls for patient toleration rather than any striking traits, his congregation being made up of dull, stubborn and Puritanical Scotch farmers of a generation that gave forth sturdy blood, but was extremely narrow-minded in its generation.

With these two stars lighting the way, the whole company plays well up to the requirements of the piece, William Shea and W. V. Ranous especially distinguishing themselves—even the elders of the church adding powerfully to the only purpose I can see in the story—a humanizing character contrast—and some well-known names will be found among those taking minor parts.

CAST OF CHARACTERS:

The Little Minister.....Mr. James Young
Mrs. Dishart, his mother.....Mrs. Kimball
Jeanne, their servant.....Miss Flora Finch
Lord Rintoul.....Mr. Herbert L. Barry
Lady Babbie, his ward (the Gypsy),
Miss Clara Kimball Young
McKenzie, friend of Rintoul.....Mr. Richard Leslie
Rob Dow .....Mr. W. V. Ranous
Sanders Webster.....Mr. Charles Eldridge
Captain Halliwell.....Mr. William Shea
Wearywold, the policeman.....Mr. Robert Gaillord
Old Sexton .....Mr. George Ober
Gypsy King .....Mr. J. Trevor
Elders of the Church—Messrs. Edward See, Edward Kimball, Frank Currier and Hal Wilson.

Scene from the Two-Part Vitagraph Feature, "The Little Minister."

The screen story deals less with the Little Minister than with the Gypsy girl, who falls out of a wagon unnoticed when she is a child and is picked up and subsequently brought up as his ward by Lord Rintoul. The self-constituted guardian falls in love with the girl when she bursts into full bloom of youthful loveliness—she is now called Lady Babbie—while she becomes slowly attracted by her obvious affinity, the good Little Minister. Her sympathetic and democratic character is shown during a strike of the weavers in the dull little town, for it is she who warns them that the soldiers are coming to disperse the mob and arrest the leaders.

The strike of the weavers affords some fine ensembles in the photoplay, as do the scenes before the church where the Little Minister holds forth to a pious and attentive, if not a wholly appreciative congregation. In this congregation are some hard-handed and hard-faced old deacons. Perhaps the "brither Scot" of Mr. Barrie is purely local—a Scotch critic complains that his countrymen are not all ministers, elders, precenters and howlers of tuneless hymns—but the types shown in the picture play are not unknown in our own enlightened body. They represent the old religious element that was cruelly vindictive in condemning human frailty, however illogical their attitude in pretending to follow Christ's gentle and merciful teachings.

Whether Barrie depicted what was rather a phase of human nature as a Scottish characteristic is of no moment. He found in these rigid and bigoted old people the materials for a contrast to the Bohemian and unconventional Lady Babbie and set up his marionettes to be bowled over by the sprightly, changeable and altogether delightful girl of Gypsy descent. Barrie conformed to the good old idea that a girl could not exhibit independence of spirit and be at the same time a proper young lady—so much for not living in America. He is compelled to bring the girl and the young clergyman into rather intimate relations, and resorts to the time-worn expedients of making her a Gypsy by natural tendency and involving her and the Little Minister in a Scotch marriage. He works up an emergency where the young clergyman is forced to declare Lady Babbie to be his wife in order to save her from arrest for warning the strikers.

From a modern story telling point of view this is all very strained. The elders are duly horrified at the reported intimacy between their pastor and the wicked ward of Lord Rintoul—how all good women love to play wicked parts! The Little Minister is in all kinds of trouble when Lady Babbie runs away from the ceremony to be performed between her and the Lord and enters his house to hide, but she braces him up and they have a ceremony performed in a convenient camp of Gypsies. A villain carries off the bride; everybody gets lost in the woods; Lord Rintoul falls over a cliff; Little Minister jumps down a mere hundred feet or so and saves him. A dummy does the falling and jumping, but the cliff and the raging water are real. When the moist Lord comes to his senses in the home of the Little Minister, and the diminutive clergyman comes to his own in the darling person of Lady Babbie, the noble Lord generously gives up his claim and tells her that the Little Minister is more worthy of her than he is. He approves of their union just as the pesky elders come in to make things characteristically and religiously disagreeable. Now they get theirs, for they dare not dispute the iron will of the noble Lord. Their heathenish faces wrinkle in artificial smiles, and all ends well with an "Auld licht Kirk" wedding. When it is all over we feel mighty glad that it was dominated by the gay and buoyant spirit of lovely and charming Lady Babbie.

NEW PICTURE HOUSE AT CHELSEA, MASS.

The Empire Theater Company, recently organized under the laws of the city of Boston, is building a new motion picture and vaudeville theater at Chelsea, Mass. The house will have a frontage of fifty-two feet and a depth of one hundred and twenty-two feet. It will have a seating capacity of about fourteen hundred persons. The incorporators are Dr. F. S. Raddin, James Bloomberg, president, and William O. Johnson, treasurer and manager, each owning one-third of the stock of the company.

"The Charge of the Light Brigade."

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THIS is a film to be highly praised because of the distinct advance it exhibits over those attempting to depict great military movements with a handful of men, and it is also remarkable in perpetuating the one poem Tennyson ever wrote that entirely escaped criticism. The brilliant ballad has been sung by thousands, and the photo-portrayal in action will be enjoyed by millions, but the incident was really of minor importance. The light cavalry charge at Balaklava is only to be recorded in prosaic history as a stupid blunder.

When Napoleon made a stupid blunder in the Moscow campaign he went out with 400,000 able-bodied soldiers and came back with 20,000 cripples, but no poet of Tennyson's lofty patriotism immortalized the human slaughter. There was bravery enough shown at the great battle that was fought at the Moskowa, where sixty thousand Russians lay dead or wounded on the field, among them the elite of the Muscovite officers, but the Russians had no singer like Lord Alfred. It was the wonderful trumpet call of verse that made the death of four hundred soldiers immortal together with the sympathy men the world over feel for those who fall bravely in the discharge of their duty.

"When can their glory fade?
"Oh! the wild charge they made!
"All the world wondered.
"Honor the charge they made!
"Honor the Light Brigade,
"Noble six hundred."

Honor the poet's name! He gave enduring fame to the six hundred. The Edison Company could not have selected from Tennyson's splendid performances a finer character representation. He was patriotic in a very noble sense—he believed in liberty for those qualified to use it intelligently. He was English for justice and enlightenment; yet he was broad enough to sympathize deeply with the American spirit as evinced in his poem, "England and America in 1792." His splendor of brain and heart touched all that he wrote and gave his creations unusual dignity and charm.

The poem which the Edison production attractively illustrates appeared in "The Examiner," during the year 1854, and set all England aflame with martial spirit. It galloped into favor, stormed the hearts of men and over-rode criticism. The demand in the army for it was so great that the poet had a thousand copies printed at his own expense and sent them to the men before Sebastopol. With characteristic modesty he said that no writing of his could add to the glory the soldiers had acquired in the Crimea.

One of the few of the Light Brigade who survived the fatal order and its results was a cavalryman who fell in another action and was kicked in the chest by a horse. While lying in the hospital he became so depressed in spirits that he was unable to throw off a diseased condition engendered by the blow. The doctor in charge remarked that he wished the soldier could be roused as he was a fine fellow, well worth saving by extraordinary means. Some one suggested that Tennyson's poem be read to the drooping warrior, and this was done. The man awoke from his torpor and listened with kindling eyes to the finish. He begged that it be read again, then he recovered so rapidly that he was soon on his feet again, ready for service.

The Edison production deserves commendation for many details, and not the least of these lie in the admirably chosen exteriors. The ground selected responds to the account of the scene so well that it might easily have been the actual territory. The soldiers number hundreds and ride like cavalrymen to the saddle born. The horses seem to be accustomed to the explosion of bombs and form in themselves an interesting sight. The costumes are accurate, having been made to order from authorized designs furnished by London military authorities.

The charge is justly a subject of admiration as an exhibition of courage among those re-enacting the scenes—many are seen falling from their mounts during action—and the real charge at Balaklava was brilliant enough even if it was a mistake. The French and Russian officers exhibited astonishment when it was made, and it became the the subject of unpleasant controversy among British officers on the field. The order was wrongly given or misinterpreted with dreadful consequences.

The troops rode to almost certain death without murmuring at the order, leaving the responsibility to be placed on the shoulders of those who gave it. Practically a few hundred horsemen attacked a complete army drawn up in position. There had been some criticism of this particular body. It had been whispered that the Light Brigade had been favored in previous battles, and this created an indignant feeling among the men. They were determined to show what they could do if an opportunity was offered them, and it now appears that their onslaught might have been followed by a general attack to advantage, so staggered were the Russians by the ferocity of the little fight.

If the command was a grave error, the motive of the men was open to criticism—it was within their power to retreat—as one of the first objects of war is to overcome the enemy with a small loss of life. Six hundred and seventy officers and men rode down a gentle descent into a storm of shell. Volley after volley burst forth from well-placed batteries—cannon to the right of them, cannon to the left of them—and a deadly fire was poured in by Russian riflemen as the Light Brigade advanced until they were within fifty yards of a battery they expected to take.

Encircled by a blaze of fire, they rode on, every officer but one killed, wounded or his horse shot under him, until they cut down men serving the guns and literally galloped through the Russian lines including a body of cavalry estimated to number over five thousand. They reached the rear of the enemy's lines only to find that they must return as they came—they had been unsupported. Now they were a mark for all the deadly weapons that could be brought to bear upon them.

So rode the six hundred before the eyes of many thousands in a thrilling exhibition of courage. Canrobert remarked that it was very fine, but not war. The Russian general, Gortchakoff, witnessed the charge until it was all over, then sent a message under flag of truce that could be variously interpreted. He wound up by declaring, "The charge was very fine, but permit me to say that it was also very stupid." Such is the common opinion to this day. The army was not there to slaughter brave men in spectacular charges.

There is a little story woven into the Edison release, but it is not made obtrusive in this case, to the betterment of the film. The military crime is depicted in a spirited manner throughout and constitutes another advance in the rising Edison productions.

"How the Cause Was Won" (Selig).

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE Selig Western company has turned out a regular release under the title "How the Cause Was Won" for which I predict a strong demand and hearty welcome from photoplay lovers. Sentiment and loyal friendship are prominent elements of the story, and these are supplemented by patriotic spirit, a fine observance of the Golden Rule and a happy illustration of the maxim that there is good in every man if he has only the opportunity and the conditions to prove it.

The acting of the principals in this film subject is worthy of hearty mention. Miss Betty Harte again wins the spectator by the ease and convincing sincerity of her impersonation of Mabel Moody. The tender little love scenes between her and Tom Clarke (Wheeler Oakman) reveal unaffected shyness and sweet maidenly reserve. Altogether, her Mabel Moody is about as sweet and charming a sweetheart as the heart of man could desire. Major Clarke (George Hernandez) and the Civil War veteran, Mr. Moody (Frank Clarke), are fine character studies; and the young lover and the college ne'er-do-well, Tom Clarke, is snappily portrayed by Mr. Oakman. In a word, I have no fear of the reception that awaits "How the Cause Was Won," from the standpoints of good photography, talented acting and an appealing story.

THE PRINCIPAL CHARACTERS:

Mabel Moody .....Miss Betty Harte
Tom Clarke .....Wheeler Oakman
Major Clarke (Tom's father).....George Hernandez
Mr. Moody (a veteran) .....Frank Clarke

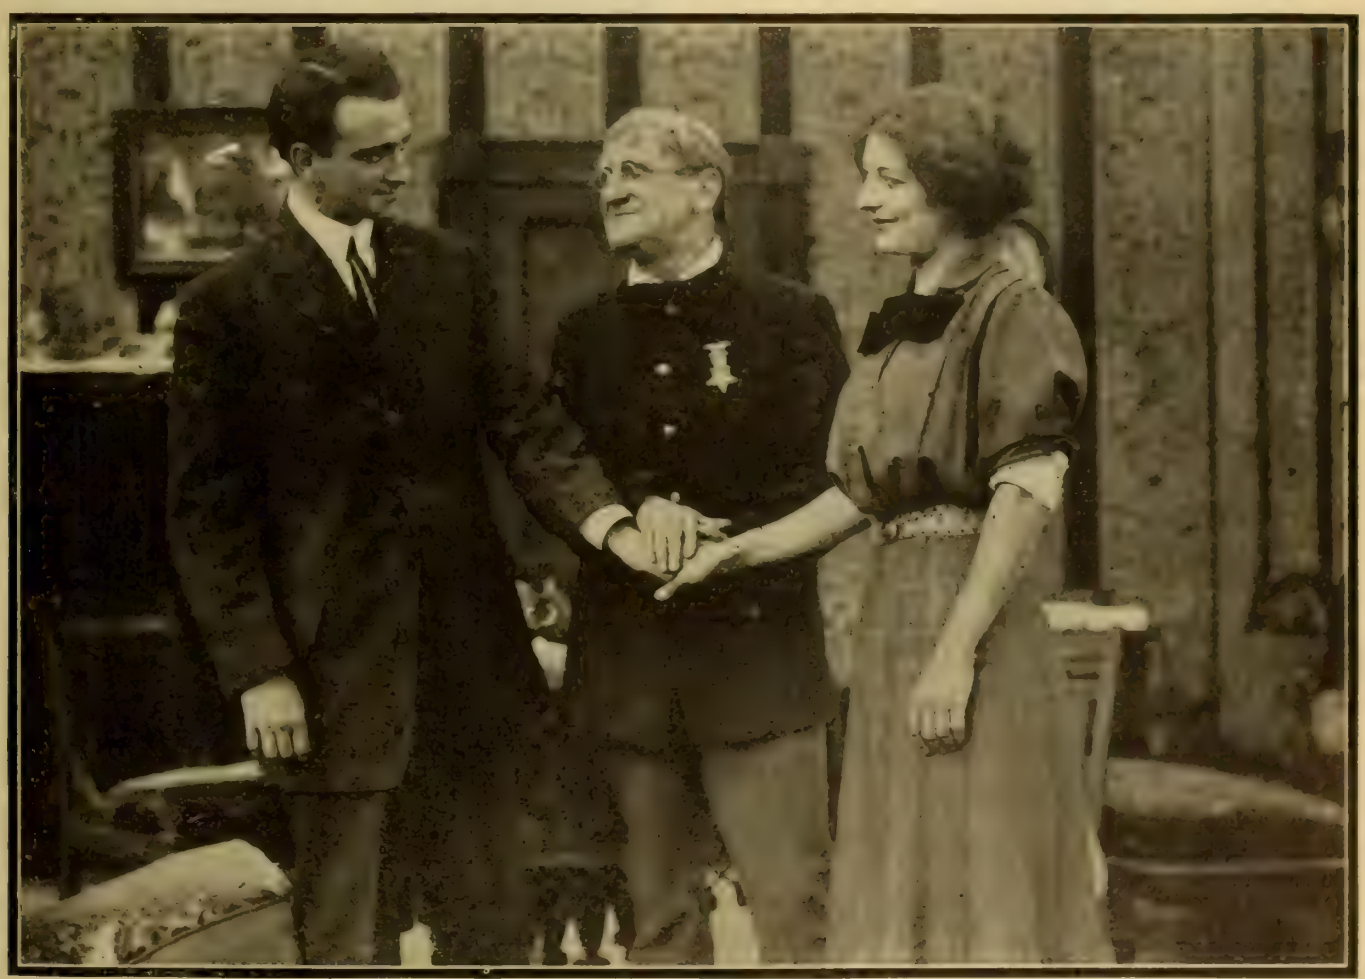
Tom Clarke, like many young collegians, didn't give a bow-wow for books or class standing. College for him meant having a good time, and he must have given many a heartache to the dons during his stay, as the story tells us he was not only rusticated but dismissed. We are not surprised, therefore, to see choleric Major Clarke, during an interview after Tom's return, reading the riot act and vehemently announcing that he must shift for himself and expect no further doles from the parental pocket. Tom is just as spirited as his father is dictatorial, and he walks from the room with the air of a conqueror, who feels that the world is his.

But good luck is on Tom's side. His retiring footsteps have scarcely died in the Major's ears when a messenger boy arrives with a telegram conveying the news that the men employed by the Clarksville Steel Co. will not renew their old contract. The Major's temper is raised to fever heat by the intelligence, and it is only by a strong effort that he is able to bring himself to sober thought and reflection. It turns out that his extremity is Tom's opportunity, for he decides to send his son to investigate the conditions at the works. Tom jumps at the offer and, with hearty handshakes, father and son say good-bye.

While not possessed of a love for book lore, Tom has a ready fund of mother wit and good business judgment; and, with an independence inherited from his father, he decides to solve the problem confronting him in his own way. Without his father's knowledge and being unknown at the works, he applies for a position there, in order to get in better touch with the men. He is successful. He meets old man Moody, an old employe and a veteran of the Civil War, and becomes acquainted with Mabel, his daughter. The young people are mutually attracted from the outset, and the old soldier looks on approvingly.

True love did never run smooth and clouds soon lower over its course in this case. The superintendent of the plant posts a notice that on a certain date the wages of the men will be reduced. Amidst the angry remarks of the crowd gathered in front of the board, Moody pulls down the hated placard and is immediately discharged by the superintendent. Tom, seeing trouble ahead, telegraphs his father that the conditions at the works are bad and suggests that he come to the scene and meet a delegation of the workers. Major Clarke replies immediately that the Company will receive no delegation.

On the day that this message is received, Tom calls at the Moody home and drops the telegram unconsciously. Mr. Moody discovers it and shows it to his daughter. Both look on Tom as a spy and informer. The following morning



Scene from "How the Cause Was Won" (Selig).

Tom is on his way to make another call, when he meets Mr. Moody. To his surprise, the old soldier treats him coldly and after handing him a letter passes on. Tom opens the letter and reads the following, signed by Mabel: "When I accepted your proposal last evening, I did not know you were a spy, an informer. Until you can prove otherwise, I do not wish to see you."

The next day a meeting of the workers is held, and a tie vote is cast on the resolution that a strike be called. Tom enters at the moment, and is called upon to decide the action to be taken. He brings them to their feet by casting his vote in favor of a strike.

Major Clarke immediately comes to the works and meets his bookkeeper. While engaged in conversation, an office boy brings in word that the president of the local desires to see the proprietor. Major Clarke is surprised to find that his own son, Tom, is the president. He refuses to treat with him, and Tom, with a smile on his face, retires.

Mr. Moody after hearing of the Major's decision addresses a meeting of the men, explaining why he had lifted his hat to Major Clarke on his arrival at the works. He explained that when President Lincoln called for volunteers, he and Mr. Clarke had enlisted together. He described the scenes of carnage through which he and the Major had passed during the fratricidal strife. These scenes are shown in realistic dissolving views. Before finishing his story, Major Clarke entered the room. He is seen wiping his eyes at the close and walks toward the platform. On ascending it, he grasps the hand of his old brother soldier and then, asking for the written demand made by the men for higher wages, he signs it.

The closing scene shows the interior of the Moody home where Major Clarke is introduced to Mabel. He kisses her cheek and turning around quizzically introduces her to Tom. Both smile and the Major seeing how the land lies smiles significantly at his old companion in arms, Mr. Moody. They both shake hands in token of satisfaction felt at the happy ending of the trouble.

This film will be released October 7.

"The Amateur Iceman" (Lubin)

By G. F. Blaisdell.

THOSE lovers of Arthur Johnson's pictures will have a treat in store in "The Amateur Iceman." It is a rarity to see him in comedy. Here we not only see him in comedy. We see him in a crackerjack. It is the fortunate combination of a good story and good people to put it on. The picture emphasizes the judgment displayed by the Lubin management in making Miss Lottie Briscoe the leading woman in Mr. Johnson's company. She has done good work in previous pictures. She will add to her reputation in this one. Mr. Johnson brings to bear in the making of "The Amateur Iceman" and in the portrayal of the leading character a wide experience. The lovers of motion pictures, and the lovers of the best in motion pictures, will reap the benefit of this wide experience. Mr. Johnson is popular. The reason for it is plain. Speaking again of combinations, it is in this case the union of a most pleasing personality and unusual ability to convey to those watching the screen the very things he wants most to convey.

The story opens in the home of Betty Baxter. Mr. Baxter is upbraiding her for her indolent habits. Betty goes to work. She dusts with a vim. The following scene is the entrance into the luxuriously furnished home of the Westcotts of the midnight son. He has been "out"—that is more than evident. A butler enters, and, in fear that the master of the house will discover the condition of his son, extinguishes the lights and hurries the young man off to bed. In the morning the son lingers fondly over the water bottle. He is handed a note by his friend the butler wherein his father stipulates that when sober he wants to interview him at his office. The father there informs the young man that he has got to go to work on one of the family ice-wagons. The son smiles. He puts on old duds as befits his new occupation and sets immediately at work.

In the course of the day he delivers ice at the Baxter home. Betty, the now industrious daughter of the household, is at work in the kitchen. Young Westcott, the amateur iceman, shows in the handling of the ice his inexperience. The cake slips from the tongs and falls to the floor. Possibly the lack of skill in handling the ice may be due to the discovery of the charming daughter of the household. However, Westcott smilingly apologizes and makes one more effort to land the ice in the top of the box. Again he fails and likewise again he apologizes. The third effort is successful. By this time the iceman and the girl he believes to be the maid are acquainted.

Young Westcott bows himself out of the kitchen. In the evening he returns to the rear of the house and the amazed servant is requested to inform the maid that her friend of the morning wishes to speak to her. The servant gazes with much interest on the bouquet carried by the iceman, still in the same garb he wore earlier in the day. However, she sees the fun in the situation and goes to the front of the house to inform Betty. To her mistress, seated at the piano, entertaining her father, the servant breaks the news. Betty puts on a cap and apron, primps her hair—after excusing herself to her father—and goes to the kitchen. The servant, as she witnesses the apparent attachment between the two, no longer sees any fun in the rapid developments of the day and is properly shocked. A romance, however, has been begun, and it moves swimmingly along.

Westcott, Sr., and Baxter, have offices in the same building; in fact, they adjoin. Also, the men are personal friends. We see them sitting on the piazza of the Baxter home on an extremely hot day. The daughter of the house brings to them each a fan. There is a sudden demand for ice-water. A search of the ice-box reveals the fact that the ice is nil. The daughter is commissioned to get some. She sees in the near distance her new friend. He brings a large piece of ice. It rests on the back steps. The iceman and the maid sit down for a chat. The two thirsty men at the front of the house are fuming and fretting and perspiring. Finally they get tired of waiting for the ice and Baxter institutes an inquiry. He discovers the two on the back steps. They are close together. The ice has almost melted. There is a scene that is quite natural and to be expected. The iceman retires, the daughter is pulled into the house and the remnants of the ice are employed in the making of ice-water.

In a few moments the iceman returns to the back of the house. He enters the kitchen and implores the daughter to elope with him. She consents and the two hurry to the ice-wagon. The fellow-worker of young Baxter is pulled off of the seat and Betty takes his place. Young Westcott gives the horses a clip as he gets in and the team is away. The maid, who has witnessed the unusual occurrence, hurries to the father and tells him what has occurred. The father of young Westcott, learning that it is one of his men, also is interested in the proceedings. The two fathers rush into the street and commandeer the first automobile passing. The chase is short, but certainly exciting. The machine is driven to the front of the madly galloping horses and the ice-wagon is forced to halt. When Baxter learns that the man with whom his daughter is eloping is none other than the son of his friend Westcott, his anger disappears; in fact, he is delighted. There is a laugh all around. Possibly Betty is the most happily surprised of all.

On the Firing Line.

A Cines Military Drama Containing Real Incidents of the Italian-Turkish War.

GEORGE KLEINE will release on November 12th one of those thrilling war dramas for which the Cines Company has become so well known. The struggle between the Italian and Turkish forces is still being carried on with no immediate signs of abatement notwithstanding the attitude of the world to arrange a settlement. As can readily be understood a struggle of this kind is replete with incidents which make excellent plots for dramas such as "On the Firing Line" and which are rendered still more interesting and realistic by the fact that many of the scenes in the film are actual happenings, showing real soldiers in active warfare.

The story begins in the home of Colonel Sandor, an officer in the Italian Army, spending a pleasant leave of absence in the bosom of his family, which consists of his wife and little daughter Claretta. His visit is short lived, however, for almost immediately he is ordered to make preparation to join his regiment in Tripoli. With his usual promptness he instructs his faithful servant, Louis, to get everything in readiness for his departure.

Louis begs to accompany the Colonel and his earnest pleading soon wins the officer's consent. The faithful servant is delighted; his only regret being to part from little Claretta, of whom he is very fond. The child comforts him, however, by commissioning him to look after her father and to bring him back safely.

After bidding a fond farewell to the family the Colonel and Louis start on their journey. We are treated to many inspiring sights of huge crowds of people cheering the soldiers as they march through the streets to the wharves where they are to be loaded into great transports which, under the protection of several war ships, are to carry them to Tripoli. The sight of these immense vessels with their funnels belching forth huge streams of smoke and their general menacing appearance is very impressive indeed and indicates the serious aspect of the conflict which is now going on.

The next scenes show the arrival at the camp in Tripoli, with the excitement during the disembarkment of the troops, the erection of tents, and the general preparation for active campaigning.

Although proving a brave and efficient orderly the faithful Louis becomes the butt of the regiment for his constant reading of a letter which Claretta has given him, with the instructions "to take care of father and see that the Turks do not hurt him." This letter with a medallion which his little mistress presented to him before leaving home, are his most sacred possessions to be kept from any eyes but his own.

It is not long before the regiment is in the heat of combat. The Turks first assume the offensive and, approaching under cover, furiously attack the Italian camp, pouring in volley after volley which create a veritable hailstorm of bullets falling in among the Italians. This, with the enemy's superior force of numbers appears somewhat disastrous for the regiment at first and the Colonel is in grave doubt as to the outcome but, fortunately the timely arrival of reinforcements alters the situation. The regiment soon recovers from its surprise, and, obeying the orders of its brave Colonel repels the Turkish forces with great slaughter and breaking their line puts the foremost of them to rout, and then, forming themselves, make a valiant charge across the fields carrying all before them, resulting in a glorious victory.

After the battle Colonel Sandor is highly congratulated upon his able generalship and in turn rewards Louis with a medal of honor, for he realizes the fellow showed remarkable bravery and even saved his life in one instance.

Soon afterward the Colonel and his servant return home and receive a warm welcome from the family. Claretta has a special welcome for Louis who so bravely carried out her instructions and brought her father back safely and the two "chums" have a happy reunion. Louis proudly displays before her admiring eyes the medal bestowed upon him for bravery but gallantly asserts that he does not prize it half so much as the medal given him by Claretta.

The many battle scenes in the film are very thrilling indeed the charges of the infantry and cavalry across the fields will literally bring people to their feet. Newspaper reports indicate that the war will last but about two months longer; but the fighting between armies of the two opposing countries as shown in the film does not lend much encouragement toward the belief that an amicable settlement will be reached soon.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Post Cards for Pullers.

POSTCARDS as business getters for dull nights have been advocated by some of the companies and a number supply these cards to exhibitors, but the idea of centralizing the business and making the offerings uniform the Exhibitors' Advertising and Supply Company, of 30 Union Square, has arranged for a long list of popular favorites in uniform finish. Their circular lists twenty-seven licensed photoplayers, but this list is being constantly added to and eventually will cover the entire catalogue of players. Unlike the cards issued by the manufacturers, these do not carry the company title and the sudden shifts in companies do not affect the value of the cards.

Under the plan advised by Arthur D. Jacobs, these cards are to be used in series, one night of each week being devoted to a certain player, each person attending receiving a portrait of this favorite, the following week another is selected and so in turn until the list is exhausted—if it should be. It naturally suggests itself that the dull night is the best selection for this distribution.

A Lantern Slide.

A lantern slide is supplied at a moderate price reading:

> FREE TO OUR PATRONS
> A handsome photograph of one of the leading Photoplayers given to each patron.
> Blank space for inserting Date and Name of Player given away on that date.
> Come Regularly and Secure Entire Set on Exhibition in the lobby.

With the blank filled in, the slide is started the day after the last distribution or even that night and so the card announcement is made to work for the entire week. The scheme was used with decided success by the Franklin theater, Brooklyn, last season, and a number of New York houses are running it this season and finding that it brings business on the weak night and also aids in establishing patrons in the habit of regularity, since the desire is to obtain the complete set.

Although it is suggested that the distribution be confined to one player each occasion, the cards may be had assorted to suit in lots of one hundred of a name. Either way the price is $4 a thousand or $2.50 for 500. The cards are uniform with the two sets of large cards for lobby display, the new set being, if anything, better than the first.

Other Jacobs Novelties.

Other Jacobs publications are a very useful set of strips with dates and varied reading matter that are put out at thirty-five cents a hundred assorted as desired. There are forty-four numbers in this assortment with twelve numbers in a six by six size designed for use where fire arms must be covered up. These latter are almost as cheap as white paper and help attract attention to the poster.

Another item is a three sheet poster frame to take the usual A. B. C. poster and raise it to a three sheet with varied reading matter, and the one sheet posters of the photoplayers have been reduced to fifteen cents a sheet. With paper of this sort to hand the use of "stock" paper from old melodramatic shows is inexcusable. The lurid stuff displayed in front of some New York houses is a crime against the business in general.

Will You Be There?

The Blanchard Amusement company, which runs the People's Theater, Sunbury, Pa., has been trying some mystery advertising. The town was flooded with small cards asking merely "Will you be there?" They were done in the blackest kind of type on white card and naturally attracted attention. This was followed by a second card and posters announcing the opening of the People's theater and adding the same inquiry, catching up the earlier advertising.

Mystery advertising is excellent where the mystification is not continued too long and where the line is not stolen by someone else. In New York some $50,000 worth of this sort of advertising was appropriated by another concern just as the originators were preparing to realize on their outlay, but for a day or so the plan works well and with a catchy line it may be made a local slang phrase overnight.

The Peoples does not hold to any particular line of advertising, but sends in two pieces of paper, the first a weekly bill with a type page about 8½ inches square giving the offering by days. Another bill advertises Martin Chuzzlewit at a special matinee (a scheme E. M. Blanchard tried out last season), with a tag for When She Was About Sixteen. Both hold the interest and should get business.

The Fourth of Mary.

The fourth story of What Happened to Mary will be released by the Edison Company, October 25th. In this Mary gains the confidence of her employer and is sent on an important mission to England, which explains Miss Mary Fuller's recent departure to join the Edison field company in England. The Mary series seems to be holding interest uncommonly well. A purpose story is A Fresh Air Romance, released October 12th, dealing with the curative properties of fresh air as opposed to nostrums, and A Soldier's Duty, to be released October 19th, is announced to present some unusual features. It pays to keep tabs on the Edisons.

Joe Steed's House.

Manager Joe Steed is an old reader of this column and he sends in a picture of his theater at Ensley, Alabama. It's a snappy looking little house with plenty of paper to catch the eye and a good show inside. Mr.

Steed has contributed many novel ideas to this department, though we have not heard from him lately. He first came to notice as the man who made his features pay for themselves before they came into the house. We note that he has added a five piece union orchestra to his program. Good music and the pictures seems to be replacing the hackneyed vaudeville.

Curing an Invalid.

F. H. Maybury, of the Savoy theater, New Orleans, sends in some samples of his paper and writes:

> The Savoy is one of the best equipped suburban houses in the city of New Orleans, having a seating capacity of 398. It is thoroughly modern in every respect, and from what I can learn, cost the owner nearly $12,000.00 to build, less than two years ago. It has, however, been a "sick" house almost from the start, due principally to the fact that it is situated on a side street just off from two of the principal residential thoroughfares.
> In taking charge of same last June, I secured a term lease at a very reasonable figure, but the fact that the theater had remained closed nearly five months prior to my re-opening it, has made it extremely hard for me to regain the patronage which has been shifted to another house nearby. However, I have managed fairly well considering the difficulties which had to be overcome.
> Any suggestions which you might be able to offer either direct or through the Moving Picture World would be duly appreciated.

Getting Them Coming.

Bringing back the patronage that has been diverted to another theater is not an easy task, but it can be done, the method depending largely upon the class of residents nearby. A residential district argues schools and if the teachers can be interested in the educational features they may send the children there and these, in turn, will recommend it in the homes. Treat the kiddies right and they are apt to bring their elders. Find out the pet schemes of the churches and get up a series of special days for the benefit of whatever interests the congregation. One church may want a recessed chancel. Arrange with the pastor or the guild, if there is one, to give half the receipts on a certain day to the fund. Be particularly careful of your program for that day. Give the church people a couple of weeks in which to work up the enthusiasm. Let some well-known member of the guild watch the door. This will not only assure them there is no drawback, but the presence of the checker will help make the newcomers feel at home, and the presence inside of the other mmbers of the church will give them a feeling of familiarity that will count for much on return visits when the atmosphere is lacking but still suggested. Take each church in turn and do your best with special advertising to help the church work up the feature.

Contests.

Give prizes to the children for compositions. They will ask the aid of their parents and gain their interest, too. Have as many prizes as you can afford that there may be many winners to spread your name abroad. The postcard scheme referred to above should help. Get a reliable list of addresses, get the cards of some well-known player and send them out by mail. On the address side print the brief legend that one of these will be given each Thursday or Friday night, the subject being changed weekly. It will cost about eighteen dollars all told to send out a thousand cards, but we think that if the addresses are carefully obtained it will be money well spent. The house to house distribution will not prove effective as a rule with the cards as they should be made to reach the persons intended and coming by mail they are given more respect than a card shoved under the door.

Put plenty of light outside the house. A couple of flaming arcs will be noticed where an incandescent display will not. You must pull them down a side street by making it lighter than the main street, and the flaming are will make its presence felt.

Above all be around the house to make your patrons welcome. In the locality theater the manager should be something more than the man who runs the house. He should make friends through his quiet courtesy. Give a greeting to the people as they enter whether you know them or not, and if you can remember the regulars drop a hint of the coming special. Don't brag about it, just a quiet "Don't forget that we'll have that big Edison feature Friday. I'd like to have you see it." It sends the patron into the house with the feeling that you are personally interested in his coming and they'll come if only not to disappoint you. If you can remember when they do not come it will be better yet.

The Circulars.

The locally printed circular for The Coming of Columbus is a good piece of work save for the front page cut. This should have been made ready more carefully or a coarser screen should have been employed. The text is borrowed matter, but well selected, better printed and a credit to the house. The other is a 4½ by 12 throwaway on cheap yellow paper. The display is good and the press work in the same class, but we think the name of the brand could have been played up to greater advantage and the title of the subject given a larger type. The circular is good of its class, but not very good for a house trying to win back patronage. The cheap dodger is all right where the clientele is established, but for a starter more pretentious paper should be used. Impressions count for much at the start.

Newspapers Alone.

C. T. Smithers, of the Idle Hour Circuit, with the home office in Aberdeen, S. D., writes that he worked up Robin Hood solely through the newspapers without any poster or other work and played to capacity. An ad the following morning tells the story. It runs:

PACKED LAST NIGHT?
WELL RATHER!
But You Can See
ROBIN HOOD
this afternoon at 2:30 and tonight at 7:30 at the IDLE HOUR
and it's your last chance too

There is a punch in an advertisement like that that will round up those who did not see the film the first night.

Other Schemes.

The film was advertised in advance both in straight advertising and write ups. There is about half a column in the morning paper and something in the evening edition, and there is a criticism by the office boy in the morning issue that will make talk, though we do not think that the office boy wrote it.

We like one line in the advertising that runs: "Three thousand feet of the finest picture ever brought before the public." Lines like that read alluringly and Robin Hood made good for it.

Newspaper advertising tells where it can be afforded, but we think the better scheme combines newspapers and poster work. Each has a field of its own and supplements the other. The newspaper work appeals to those who read, but the poster reaches the eye with quick appeal and gives the whole thing in a glance if it is the right sort of poster. Trouble is that the right sort of cut copy is not always supplied the poster maker. Dozens of times we've seen an indifferent poster when the film showed some scene that if put on the paper would have drawn the crowds in. From personal experience we know how difficult it is to get good copy from the camera men and directors, but it is most important that the best possible scene should be used. It is a matter that is not given sufficient attention.

More About Subject Photographs.

A San Franciscan writes that he would like to try to supply the Coast demand for photographs of subjects for lobby display if he can get in touch with the manufacturers and prospective clients.

We do not think that it would pay to cater to a local demand. There is no profit in handling small lots for the patrons of one or two exchanges, since the demand would be limited and much of the material would lie dead on the maker's hands. To be a success the production must be made for the entire country and the subjects must be so cheap that the exhibitor may take all against the coming of those he will run. With forty-two licensed releases a week, as will shortly be the schedule, a house would have to run six a day to use up all the subjects.

Done in Good Form.

The Queen Theater, Galveston, Texas, owned by the Texas Amusement Company, of which E. H. Hulsey is president, sends one of the invitations they issued for the opening of the house September 15th. The invitation is on heavy cloth finish paper, a double sheet though but the first page is used. The text is surmounted by the monogram Q-T enclosed in a crown, the name of the theater and the city falling below. This is embossed in blue instead of gold and presents a more striking appearance, more in harmony with present good usage. It strikes the note of good form and makes its appeal to those who will appreciate the sort of performance that the printing suggests. The text follows:

The management wishes to call your attention to the formal opening of the QUEEN THEATER
on Sunday, September the fifteenth, presenting HIGH CLASS VAUDEVILLE
(PLAYING MAJESTIC ACTS)

It is our policy to offer for your approval the very best amusement it is possible to procure and to make you feel that at all times it is our object to cater to your comfort, pleasure and general satisfaction, in this way soliciting your patronage and co-operation.

The Queen.

A Little Late, But—

Now and then a letter will hide out for a couple of weeks and we have just exhumed a letter from Albert W. Hardy, assistant manager and operator, of the Idle Hour Theater, Hyannis, Mass. The theater re-opened for the season August 2 with a special performance including "The Coming of Columbus," and a song written by a local poetess and sung to the tune of Maryland. It was dedicated to Matthew Cushing, the manager, who also got a silver loving cup from his friends. We add the chorus of the song to our poetical collection:

The Picture Show, the Motion Show
That Mr. Cushing runs just so,
It is a place to rest awhile,
Drop your cares and smile and smile.

Street Display.

The Skydome Company, Springfield, Mo., sends this picture of a float they had in the Labor Day parade. The photograph is not very clear, but it can be seen that a projection machine is mounted on a float and a screen set up, presumably with a painted picture to suggest the scene projected.

Above the picture appears the list of brands of the Universal Company. We think that for a general display such as this, talk about the house would have carried more weight. The object of such a street display is to make fans rather than to appeal to those already made.

A New Program.

The Circle Theater, Washington, D. C., offers a new program and a special cover design for the formal opening of the remodeled house. The design works in all of the Licensed trade marks and a headpiece showing a youth operating a projection machine that throws a picture of the globe upon a screen circled by the name of the theater. Within there is a space for greeting and explanation and the program for the week, giving from two to four of the titles of the four-reel show. For the opening week the management goes in heavily for specials. Just a line or two is used for each reel, but the subject is attractively presented and well displayed and the advertising shows a generous patronage. We should like to see future numbers. It looks promising.

From the Tenth Street.

The Tenth Street Theater, Kansas City, in its program discusses the musical question in connection with other matters in its greeting for the season. We like the tone of the entire article, but can reproduce only parts. It says:

> The Tenth Street Theater was opened on Thanksgiving Day, 1910, since which time it has been the constant endeavor of the management to display to its patrons high class Moving Pictures, accompanied by an orchestra of the best musicians obtainable. At various times, when able to secure them, we have spared no expense to obtain singers whom we thought to have sufficient ability to please the class of patrons who have come to our theater. We may have bored our audiences at times with some mediocre singing, but we have never inflicted upon them poor vaudeville, and we never expect to. Our policy regarding singers is rather unsettled at this time, as a great number of our regular patrons have stated that they come to a picture show to see pictures, and prefer that singing be eliminated; on the other hand, good singing has been warmly received. We believe that all agree that poor singing is a bore. In the future whenever possible to secure high class singers we may do so. It will be our intention to strengthen our orchestra whenever this can be done, and conditions so justify. Whatever can be done to make this the "Theater de Luxe" photoplay house will be done, and the management is ever alert for any new idea that tends to that end. We have visited numerous large cities, and, without wishing to be egotistical, can safely say that we have not seen the equal of the Tenth Street Theater in all its appointments. Very few theaters in this country show "first run" pictures exclusively, as does this house, and our patrons are assured that they see pictures here on the same day that the same pictures are shown in all the large cities of the country. New York City has no advantage over Kansas City as regards moving picture first performances.

Kansas City seems to have the advantage over New York in the matter of first runs. The best house we know runs one and two day stuff and one independent house runs six reels of old timers to two new ones.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A Club Suggestion.

SINCE the photoplay dinner there has been more or less talk of a club of some sort for the photoplaywriters. We had hoped that the Screen Club might serve this purpose, but it does not appear that that club will make much appeal to the play writer who is not connected with a company, and we think that perhaps a special club would be better. We have such a club in mind, a club without entrance fee or dues, without constitution, charter or by-laws, with no officers save a chairman, and no permanent place of abode. This may sound like an odd club, but we think it will serve its purpose, and if you are interested you are invited to send in your name.

In brief the idea is to get together one night a week or twice a month, visit the same photoplay theater, and afterward talk over the films and other matters of common interest over a sandwich. We think that such a club will be helpful alike to the advanced writer and the novice, and we would like to hear from those in Greater New York who would care to belong to such a club. The idea is not a new one, save in its application to photoplaywriters, but more than one club has found in such a start a foundation on which to build a more permanent organization. In writing suggest what night would suit you best, naming a second and third choice. Several photoplay editors have already expressed a willingness to help the idea along, for most editors seek opportunities for getting in touch with the man who may be taught to deliver the goods.

Lawrence S. McCloskey.

We make you acquainted with Lawrence S. McCloskey, the man who either sends you a check or a rejection slip when you send a story to Lubin's. Mr. McCloskey is one of us, for he got his position on the strength of some of the stories he sold the company. They were looking for an assistant in the photoplay room, and the merit of his work and the fact that he was a Philadelphian, influenced his appointment as assistant to the then editress. On her retirement he was advanced to the editorship, since when he has made a host of friends for himself and the Lubin Company. On his accession to the editorial desk Mr. McCloskey caused some comment from the fact that he promptly abolished the rejection slip on which appeared a variety of reasons for rejection, but it soon appeared that these explanations were being replaced by real reasons more directly applicable to the particular script in question, and dozens of promising photoplaywrights have been helped toward success by his keen and competent comment. He not only knows why he doesn't want a story, but he can tell the writer why in a way that enables him to avoid the same mistake in future and in cases where budding genius seems to warrant it, he supplements the slips with letters of helpful suggestion. During his incumbency he has not only materially raised the standard of Lubin stories, but has improved the general standard of output as appears from many letters we have received from those who have been helped. Apart from his position as editor, Mr. McCloskey has another claim to fame in that he is the proud dad of Brooks McCloskey, the desperately daring villain of the Buster series.

Lawrence S. McCloskey.

We Stand Corrected.

Some weeks ago we announced that copyright had been provided for photoplays, but it appears from correspondence with Mr. Thorvald Solberg, Register of Copyrights, that this was a mistaken reading of the law. A provision was made in the Townsend Bill, but thrown out in committee, and only the registration of produced photoplays provided for. We take the liberty of quoting Mr. Solberg's letter in this matter.

> We cannot, of course make legislation by taking any action not justified by express provision of law. We are making no registration for any articles not directly named in the copyright act as subject matter of copyright, and are proceeding just as we have consistently done from the first as regards scenarios of motion pictures. Such scenarios, when printed and published as required for a book, are registered without any question. If they are submitted in manuscript or typewritten they are not registered and the action of Congress of course strengthens that attitude. It having been at first proposed definitely to exclude them from copyright protection by express provision of law in one of the bills submitted, and the attention of the committee having been called to the demands for registration of scenarios for motion pictures by the Register of Copyrights, the committee taking the ground that they did not believe that Congress should authorize registration, the matter is, for the time being, practically settled.

We can only take such cold satisfaction as we can get from the fact that the Hon. Edward Townsend, who once wrote several scenarios and who engineered the bill to simplify copyright for some of the manufacturers, got the thing so badly balled up that while he did gain limited liability for innocent copyright infringement, he did not gain the copyright privilege without the deposit of two full copies of each subject as was sought.

Scripts Wanted.

Frank E. Woods (Spectator) asks that mention be made of the fact that Kinemacolor, Mecca Building, New York City, is in the market for good grade scripts. Several directors are now at work and there is a brisk demand for really good stories. It will be useless to offer the hackneyed.

Kinemacolor has been advertising for scripts for some time, but has been doing little with them, but now the production staff is well organized with David Miles, formerly of Majestic, and Mr. Woods, in charge, and scripts will be handled promptly and courteously. We can't imagine a better combination than these two veterans. Get your scripts in quickly.

Get Inside.

This is the time of year when the demand from those companies remaining in the north is for stuff to be made mostly in the studio or in the city streets, with the majority of the scenes inside. A. Van Buren Powell writes that a company advised him that they had stopped making summer stuff. Others are doing the same thing.

Of course where companies are maintained in the South the stuff should be mostly outdoors. Lubin, Selig, Kalem, Imp, Bison, Nestor, and others, work under cloudless skies, but with the exception of Bison and Nestor the companies also want stuff for studio work.

Joe Roach to Comet.

Monday Joe Roach, until last Saturday with the Universal Film Company's Photoplay Department, will take charge of the scripts for the Comet company. Until now the Comet has practically had no photoplay script department and there have been complaints innumerable as to lost scripts and ignored letters, but this promises to be changed. Mr. Roach is not only a thoroughly competent photoplay editor but a good executive and he may be counted upon to bring order where order has not been before. It is possible that some of the scripts that have been away from home for many months will be headed in the proper direction, and it is certain that scripts sent in now will be properly handled. Since leaving the Universal Mr. Roach has been spending a brief vacation in St. Louis.

That Book on Plots.

In response to a number of requests, we have arranged with the publishers of Phillips' The Plot of the Short Story to handle that publication and the books may be had at $1 per copy by addressing the New York office of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

The book is not designed to replace Technique of the Photoplay, but admirably supplements that work, devoting an entire volume to the rules for developing the idea into a plot, treating the subject exhaustively. It is a work that is useful alike to the novice and the advanced author.

Complained of Speed.

Phil Lang, of the Kalem Company, received a letter of complaint the other day in which the writer declared that it was not possible that the script could have been read and returned in so short a space of time. It didn't happen to be the Kalem style of script as a glance at the synopsis showed, and so instead of letting it kick around the office for a couple of weeks Mr. Lang shoved it right back. Most people appreciate his promptness in handling scripts, but this writer seemed to think that he was entitled to have his script pay a longer visit and actually made complaint.

No script comes from the Kalem company that has not been read to a point where its unavailability is certain, but even if the scripts were not read the author has no moral right to have his wares read.

That may sound strange, but it is none the less true. You have something to sell and are trying to sell it. You send it to a certain company in the hope of making a sale. You send it to them because you believe that they want scripts, possibly because they have advertised for them, but if you advertised that you wanted a pound of butter would you consider that your request required you to sample every stale and rancid offering that came in along with the good, or even give your time to the sweet butter that was offered after your wants had been supplied? It is the same way with the script. You send it in because you hope to sell it, but you have no more right to demand that your script be read than the dry goods man has to compel people to come into his store and examine his stock. We know of no company more courteous in its reading than the Kalem, but we fail to see why the Kalem or any other company should be required to read scripts just because it happens to be in the film business.

Don't Believe in Signs.

Here is a good suggestion that Phil Lang, of the Kalem company, is making his authors. Don't use signs to get your idea over.

Suppose that you want to show that scene twelve is the office of the Alta Mining Company. You write in the script that the name of the company appears on the door and dismiss the matter. The sign has saved a leader. Some scripts are almost wholly dependent upon signs for explanation of their location. It is all right for the American and English markets, but most of the films are sent around the world and the London agents of the American films maintain film printing plants where the leaders and letters are done into French, German, Spanish, Italian, Russian and perhaps other languages. At one time a certain company was making translations in a dozen tongues. That works very well for leaders and inserted matter, but it is not possible to translate the signs and many of these may be as important as the leaders. If you'll bear in mind that your story, if it is good, will be sold on five continents and that editors must pick stories that are reasonably intelligible to all races, you'll understand why some of your pet scripts come back. As stories they may be all you think them, but the editors know that the run of the story will not be intelligible to the Frenchman or the Russian, and manufacturers keep an eagle eye on the European market, for these sales represent the bulk of the real profit.

In London the first prints are run at the agency for the benefit of the buyers, the bulk of the buying being done by some eighteen or twenty representatives of the large users throughout the world. These men see each week the output of every company and make their selections from fifty or sixty brands. American films are most strongly in favor, but the too purely local story does not find purchasers. It may make a difference of several thousand dollars to a manufacturer, for five prints may be ordered of one subject and one or two hundred of another. Both prints cost the same to make, both represent the same profit per copy, but one pays a return of a couple of hundred dollars and the other perhaps two thousand. Keep this fact in mind when you write your story, keep slang and colloquialisms out of your leaders and do not trust to signs to help you get your ideas over.

Take a Tip.

We were talking with an editor the other day and running over the names of some of the people we thought might be able to give him the work he wanted. At one name he checked us.

"That man gave us one story," he said, "but since then he has sent us half a dozen which were wholly unsuitable. We took the trouble with our acceptance to write him a long letter telling what we wanted and why we wanted only that, and yet he sends us anything he happens to write whether it is in accordance with that request or not. I've stopped reading his stuff because we have to have a certain type of play and if he cannot take the trouble to heed our suggestions, I think it is better to give my attention to those who can."

Think of that, you who have not yet reached the point where you can write plays that sell. Here is a man who can sell plays if he will write for a certain market, but instead of shaping his plays around to fit certain requirements he merely sends in all he writes and leaves the editor to make the selection.

If an editor takes the trouble to write and tell you that he wants only strong Western stories don't flood him with airship stories or try to make him take stories of shipwrecks. If you can't write Western stories do not bother him until you see the style of the company has changed to the style of stuff you can write. It is not enough to have written a good story. Success means even more the knowledge of where to sell, and where a market is clearly defined for you, be courteous enough to appreciate the favor and send what is wanted or make no submission.

Read Over Our Shoulder.

Look over our shoulder and read these comments from Hugh King Harris. He writes:

> I've been pretty busy "putting 'em over" lately. Coming along nicely, thank you. Was over at Selig's Chicago plant the other day and had a nice visit—but honest to goodness, you don't realize the editor's troubles near so much as when you get a good chance to size up the junk that is tumbled onto his desk.
> I have been trying even harder to make 'em better since I came back to the grind, and I had been doing pretty well, at least the acceptances would seem to make me think so.
>
> Had letter from an editor the other day—friendly sort of a cuss he is, too; I used to think differently, but it is all in getting in touch. He wrote, returning a couple of scripts, and made the explanation that they were "Too far ahead of the times." —gee, it hurts to have to put on the brakes as we read your preachments to advance, and as we strive to excel in getting something ahead of the ordinary.
> There's a limit, I guess, and the elaborate stuff had better be left to the occasional special orders that come along. I like the way McCloskey is swinging the big stick for Lubin, he is mighty prompt and it helps to have his friendly comments. A little different than before he took charge.
> Heard a good one over at Selig's. Editor asked a "lady" writer why she would put as much as twelve cents postage on the letter to carry the script TO the office—and only two cents on her return envelope. She replied "Why, it only takes two cents to bring back the check." Some optimist that, eh?

Mr. Harris is the advertising manager for a big manufacturing company up around the great lakes, but he finds time to write a lot of scripts. He sells many of them to Selig and the visit seems to have been intended as an educational trip. Now keep on reading and listen to a New York woman who was going to be a photoplaywriter, but who changed her mind. Here's the meat of a four page letter:

> I do not know of any person who ever sold a photoplay, and if you will tell me of any you have written and sold I will give you one dollar just to see them on the screen.

If she'll buy the lot we'll make a special price of seventy-five cents a title. After you've had that laugh, look over our shoulder again and get this gem:

> I am going to tell you my reason for not sending you a play to criticise, hoping that the reason will affect you as it does some writers in the trade papers. I'm not complaining, merely stating facts. I have sent out twelve plays; the four of them that I really liked and intended to send you are worthless because what shred of originality was in them has been seen in plays this summer, immediately, in fact, after they were returned. You see I cannot rewrite them in that case. One concerned a bugle, one a small boy advertising for his dog; one the dressing in old time clothes for a joke and making a hit.

Mr. Harris writes new ideas and sells them. He thinks the editors are all right. The second would write but she knows they will steal her ideas. She is foredoomed to failure starting work in that frame of mind. The third has had her ideas stolen—so she thinks. We don't know the story about a bugle, but the dressing in old-time clothes was done long before last summer and probably without inspiration from her. It's all in the point of view. We refuse to share her indignation. We know better.

How Do You Think?

How do you think? Do you go into a room apart and laboriously construct your idea, or do you pull up suggestions in your idle moments? Find out the way you can do your best thinking. We know one man who used to sit down in front of his machine and glare at it until an idea came and then he would pound it out, glad to get away from the sight of the keyboard. Then he found that by going to the theater and taking a rear seat he could think better than at home. He picks out the vaudeville houses where there is apt to be plenty of music, but he does not look at or listen to the show, he just thinks. We do most of our plotting on the street cars. Figure out your best way, and make use of it. You may not think you have a best way, but you have.

Got His Dander Up.

Here's a line from Montreal that indicates the right spirit. Go at the game the same way yourself. The writer says:

> I read in your last issue that some one (wonder which one. Ed.) had been kicking because he or she has had their manuscript returned. I am not kicking, thought I am in the same boat. I have written dozens and have had them returned, but my mind is made up to sell one before I quit. Rex Beach and others never sold their first nor their second nor third venture.

Tools of Trade.

We cannot understand why some authors place so much stress on the cost of paper, envelopes and stamps. We think that an author should take the same pride in his tools as a carpenter or machinist and no carpenter will buy a cheap hammer or edged tool when he can afford the best make. It's poor economy to cut costs below a certain point.

The average script runs from five to ten pages. What difference does it make whether the paper costs one or two cents? The more expensive paper creates a better impression on the mind of the editor and somewhere along the line some editor will be moved to add a five or ten dollar boost to a script because it looks professional and the smaller price will pay for two thousand sheets of good paper. In such a case is it economy to buy your paper for thirty-five cents a box? Another point that will suggest itself is that a script that does not sell will stand the rounds better if done on good stock.

The heavier paper may cost four cents to send out instead of two, but here, again, the saving is not really a saving. It costs us four cents to mail five sheets of paper because our cloth envelopes are so heavy (and they themselves cost a cent and four-fifths each), but if the script arrives at the studio in better condition we regard the three and a half cents as a profitable investment. You stand a better chance in a bank in a frock coat and silk hat than in corduroys and a sweater. Don't put a sweater on your script. Send it out looking right.

Comments on the Films

"THE DOCTOR'S DEBT" (Lubin), Sept. 28.—A romantic melodrama set mostly in and around a fisherman's cabin near the beach. The story is very acceptable. Of two lovers of the fisherman's daughter, the jealous one does some heavy villain work with a view to making it impossible for the doctor to reach the other lover in time to save his life. The heroine makes a long swim to the coast. It is played by the same company that made "A Romance of the Coast," recently released, and the two pictures compare very favorably. Miss Ethel Clayton is the girl. Harry Myers, the hero; Charles Arthur, the villain. Mrs. Geo. B. Walters and Mr. Mitchell also have roles. It is a picture that will please.

"A GIRL'S BRAVERY" (Lubin), Sept. 30.—A melodramatic picture that seems fabricated largely to permit a struggle on a foot bridge over a swirling rush of waters in a canal lock. The story wasn't built to be very effective and the picture seems artificial. It has, nevertheless, a few thrilling scenes that get over. The girl's bravery is shown by her diving off the lock to aid her lover whom her much bigger brother had hurled into the stream. The danger is very well suggested, and these scenes make it a fair offering.

"THE VOICE OF CONSCIENCE" (Essanay), Sept. 27.—Just ordinary, natural happenings are shown as giving "the third degree" to a man-slaughterer. Not daring to confess, he lets an innocent man (played by Francis Bushman) be suspected. The trial lasts three days and he (Harry Mainhall) looks on in torments that finally make him confess. Such a situation is perennially fresh and Mr. Mainhall's interpretation of it here makes a good offering. His acting shows a good measure of restrained imagination until the last few feet where the action becomes a little hysterical. One of the lesser roles, that of the conscience-stricken man's friend, weakened the effect somewhat by being too much like Mephistopheles, too much like a conscious torturer. He was made to appear to us more, as he must have appeared to his friend, and should have been more objective. In the last scene all the actors forgot art for a moment and began to feel the action as themselves—lost all objectivity. It is a very interesting picture as a whole and one worth while.

Strong feeling, in moments of stress, is apt to kill the effect. We, ourselves, saw a tragedy the other morning. What we observed would have been ridiculous on the stage or in a picture; it wouldn't have been believed. It didn't move us to pity; it stunned us. A curly-headed tot was run over by a trolley car and its mother saw it happen. There was no expression in her face; it was blue like lead and her eyes were dry; they didn't seem to see anything. Men had picked up the little inert bundle and she grabbed it from them and started to run away from the place crazily. Her limbs acted like the wooden legs of a jumping-jack. Tragedy, feeling, pity, resentment at the motorman, etc., came only as the slum crowd gather and after the mother and child had been led in the house. Art doesn't copy life exactly. It works with a purpose which it never forgets; it seems to copy life.

"QUEEN OF THE KITCHEN" (Kalem), Sept. 25.—A rather slight farce. It gives Ruth Roland a chance to make comedy while she spoils a dinner in the cooking. The role doesn't fit her so well as many others she has played; but there are some funny situations.

"ALONG THE RIVER NILE" (Kalem), Sept. 25.—Fills not quite half the film and gives a very interesting set of intimate views of ordinary things, sugar came reaping, house building, etc., as they are in Egypt. It is not a picture of tombs or temples, but of common people.

"A LITTLE LOUDER, PLEASE" (Essanay), Sept. 26.—There is fine quality and freshness in this farce comedy and it is a sure success; but the primary assumption is far fetched. It is a much better offering than its first part promises and, where we saw it, a large audience was clearly pleased with it. Essanay players (Missimer, Cassinelli, Branscombe, Stepling and others) are delightful in pictures like this, that depend on character. It is a good offering.

"THE BEACHCOMBERS" (Melies), Sept. 26.—There's a pleasing wholesomeness in this picture of Santa Catalina. It is set mostly along the sandy beach, broken by boulders, and deals with humble people, the beachcombers, who make their living from what they gather of driftwood, etc., on the sand. The story is not very convincing, but has something of the quality that people like.

"GLACIER NATIONAL PARK" (Pathe), Sept. 26.—We heartily commend the Pathe Company's apparent purpose of making a series of "See America First" pictures. This offering shows some home-made Alpine scenery that is very beautiful. Of course, there is no dawn or sunset color on these glaciers. The traveler must go to them to get that. Everything that clearness can give seems to be in the picture.

"THE ANDREU" (Pathe), Sept. 26.—On the same reel, a picture of acrobats. The whole is a good offering.

"THE CUCKOO CLOCK" (Reliance), Sept. 28.—A simple, but vital and dramatic picture of substantial merit. It reveals two lowly human hearts, an old fisherman and his wife, with sincerest sympathy for their little foibles and almost ridiculous pleasure in small things. The things that the picture's story deals with are ordinary and seemingly insignificant, and yet, because they are so truthful, are very effective. This sets the picture among works of art. It is insight that makes it what it is. If these child-like things that it pictures had occurred to the average hack scenario writer, they would probably have been discarded at once as childish; but they never become so in this picture. The scenario maker may have had a touch of genius; but the interpretation that it gets (T. T. Sullivan and Mrs. Hurley play the two leads) helps it greatly. It is a most desirable release.

"THE MUSKETEER'S CONSCIENCE" (C. G. P. C.), Sept. 27.—A not very dramatic picture in courtly costume whose object is to create a feeling of dread. It fails of being very effective, because of its artificiality. The backgrounds and sets have unusual interest. It probably was photographed near some fine old chateau with its gardens.

"THE APACHE RENEGADE" (Kalem), Sept. 28.—Indians attack a long wagon train and are dispersed by cowboys. Wm. West plays a white renegade who incites the Apaches to come out against the train. Carlyle Blackwell plays a young Westerner who loves the usual girl, played by Kate Winston. Knute Rahmn plays an Apache and C. Rhys Pryce the train captain. The construction of the story is fairly dramatic and the backgrounds, a wild mountain country, the real Apache land, are extremely good. It is a fair offering, with plenty of smoke.

"WHY JIM REFORMED" (Selig), Oct. 1.—A situation that offers a chance to build dramatically and one used a number of times his in this picture, a new interpretation. Jim, stupid from drink, lies down beside a man he accidentally shot and in the morning thinks that it was he who has killed him. He doesn't fly from justice, as usual when this situation is taken, and the picture's chief concern is to show the man's fear and horror. It is a good, well-acted picture, but doesn't rank with the best. William Duncan is both author and producer. He also plays Jim, the leading role. Supporting him are Myrtle Stedman, as his wife, with C. E. Reeves, Rex de Rosselli and Lester Cunio.

"THE IRONY OF FATE" (Vitagraph), Sept. 28.—There is a widely-known poem telling of two who were made for each other and who came very near meeting, but never did. It is extremely sentimental and furnishes the idea used in this picture. Florence Turner plays the lead and the picture's quality comes not from the idea, which, after all, is not very deep or true, but from the handling. It was a poor choice of subject, for its very essence is a negation of action and, at every change in the situation, the action is quickly completed and ended. What is more, we don't believe that fatalism will appeal strongly to action-loving Americans. That it is finely acted and has well-made scenes is certain, but it is not dramatic. It was written by Hettie Gray Baker and produced by Albert W. Hale. Beside Florence Turner, E. K. Lincoln, Roger Lytton, James Young and Clara Kimball Young are in the cast.

"AN INDIAN SUNBEAM" (Essanay), Sept. 27.—A white girl brought up from infancy by Indians has been named Sunbeam. The climax of the picture comes when the tribe, jealous of her love for a cowboy, straps her on the back of a wild horse and sends her out, Mazeppa like, to die on the prairie waste. A well-conducted story and wide views of a billowy land, with the white horse and its human burden seen against the skyline, are found in this picture. The action never rises to emotional heights, but its interest doesn't drag, and it will be widely acceptable.

"THE COUNTS" (Vitagraph), Sept. 27.—Almost a dozen of 'em and a very pretty girl make a dandy little farce, a sure winner. The one real count (Jack Braun) writes to the parents (E. R. Phillips and Rose Tapley) of Gladys (Dorothy Kelly) that he has seen their daughter and fallen in love with her. Gladys's pretty nose goes way up in the air and her beau (Harry T. Morey) is in despair until his friends dress up as Counts. The atmosphere of a nightmare in which the situation is worked out is very funny. Ralph Ince is both author and producer.

"WEARY STARTS THINGS IN PUMPKINVILLE" (Vitagraph), Sept. 27.—A tame elephant who does just what the producer wants him to, gives a very convincing atmosphere to this rural laugh maker. The two on one reel make a very desirable offering.

"THE HEART OF JOHN GRIMM" (Essanay), Sept. 27.—A picture with some remarkably beautiful scenes. Its idea is excellent, but the working out has too many unconvincing moments, and it never gets a very strong hold on the spectators. Ralph Mitchell plays a hard farmer who dislikes children. His wife (played by Hazel Mason) has had no children herself, but tender hearted, she adopts, surreptitiously, a little girl (Adelaide Laurence) whom she hides from her husband. The child finds a way to the heart of the farmer. It is a good offering, but we believe the situation was worthy of more thought and pains; it shows hurry.

"A DISAPPOINTED MAMMA" (Biograph), Sept. 26.—A very farcical situation played in a lively way that compels laughter. It is well acted as a whole, but Mamma, who is disappointed in the bogus count, is delightful.

"A MIXED AFFAIR" (Biograph), Sept. 26.—A set of false teeth for wifey, a new gold buckle for the stenographer's birthday present and a bracelet; the last is bought by a cop for his best girl. For one moment all three lie on the jeweler's counter and then the mix-up begins. It doesn't drag even for a minute and a large audience found it very funny. Dell Henderson and others have good roles in it. The two on one reel make an excellent offering.

"SO NEAR, YET SO FAR" (Biograph), Sept. 30.—A comedy love story that is exciting, amusing and full of Biograph atmosphere; it has also some Biograph peculiarities, one of which is the two crooks who come to the house as delivery boys to steal. These pictures by this maker, good and bad, too, show imagination, more imagination than other makes of pictures show. It seems, at times, just a kind of audacity. Take, for instance, an incident in this picture. There was nothing startling in making the girl (Little Mary) hook the "frat" pin the boy had dropped. She hadn't met him; she stole it only because she wanted to meet him. Yet who would think, of making her do such a thing merely for that reason, that is who would until after he had seen her do it. We have a sure proof that imagination suggested it and not observation nor fancy. It is this: neither the producer, nor you, nor I would give just the same explanation of her motive. Better still, the girl herself never could have explained it. It grew out of the mystery of personality and is of those things, never mechanically understood, of which imagination alone can deal. The picture is a good offering.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 40" (Sept. 30).—The topical this week is well balanced. Its best item, perhaps, is a good view of Bonar Law, the English Unionist leader, addressing an immense gathering.

"HER CHOICE" (Vitagraph), Sept. 30.—A pleasant picture, giving a modified interpretation of Cinderella and set in a modern boarding school for girls. It is a fairy tale, not a picture of life; but it gives a chance for human acting and many pretty scenes. Zena Kiefe plays a poor girl who helps all she can and makes the best of everything. Anne Stewart, her cousin, is also at the school and also poor; but is outrageously selfish and snobbish. Julia Swayne Gordon is the aunt of both, is rich and is watching them to choose her heiress. Mrs. Mary Maurice and Rose Tapley play the two mothers. It is a light but commendable offering, written by Mrs. Breuil and produced by Ralph Ince.

"HARVESTING ALFALFA IN NEW MEXICO" (Selig), Sept. 27.—An interesting industrial, in which is included a picture of many mountain goats.

"THE BORROWED UMBRELLA" (Selig), Sept. 27.—This is a comedy based on the supposed inclination on the part of mankind generally to "borrow" umbrellas and forget to return them. The picture is on the same reel as the foregoing. There are some laughs.

"GLUED" (Lubin), Sept. 27.—The poet in desperation drinks a bottle of glue. It does not kill him, but he discovers that he has what perhaps may be described as a sticky breath. He therefore travels around the neighborhood sticking people up—not in the sense in which that term may be interpreted by some, but gluing them to walls and to pavements.

"THE WATER WAGON" (Lubin), Sept. 27.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this picture which opens with a young man whose head is wrapped in a towel, suggestive of the night before. He goes on the water wagon literally, and like so many who have figuratively ascended that more or less imaginary vehicle he falls off—and gets wet during the process, inside and out. Also he wets up several others, including the man who invited him to have "just one."

"MARY IN STAGELAND" (Edison), Sept. 27.—This is the third of the series of "What Happened to Mary," and it is in keeping with the high standard established by its predecessors. In this picture Mary, through the illness of her roommate, appears for two nights on the stage and makes a success. We leave her working in a public stenographer's office, her short stage career having been sufficiently long. Miss Bliss Milford has the part of the roommate. Miss Fuller is most interesting as the stage girl, and there is every reason to believe that she would have made good in the reality.

"'OSTLER JOE" (Edison), Sept. 28.—Laura Sawyer and James Gordon, assisted by Benjamin Wilson, give a most sympathetic portrayal of the well-known poem by George R. Sims. The picture will renew to memory a dramatic work made famous by the recital of Mrs. James Brown Potter a quarter century ago, which scandalized some and highly entertained more; it will also effectually serve to bring to the attention of the younger generation this wholesome lesson. The beauty of the poem may be said to be enhanced by the careful treatment of the Edison forces.

"THE PHYSICIAN OF SILVER GULCH" (Lubin), Oct. 3.—This is fine western stuff. It is a strong drama and there is a new twist given to the combination of the doctor, the sheriff and the sheriff's sick child. The scene wherein the doctor tries to break through the door of the room containing the gold, unaware that the sheriff is in the room, is unusually strong. The picture makes a first class release.

"AN AMATEUR ICEMAN" (Lubin), Oct. 1.—Arthur Johnson departs from the drama and, assisted by Lottie Briscoe, gives us a full reel of sparkling comedy. It is a reminder of earlier Johnson days in that we see him in the garb of an iceman and not in the conventional raiment of the man of fashion. To be sure, there is one scene in which he appears in evening dress. This is where he is shown as the "midnight son," and he is very much under the weather. The unfolding of the story, where his father in wrath puts him at work on one of the paternal ice-wagons; his meeting with Miss Baxter, portrayed by Lottie Briscoe; the falling in love and the elopment on the ice-wagon pursued by the two fathers in an automobile will make many laughs. It is all well done.

"THE FILIBUSTER'S SHIP" (Pathe), Sept. 28.—This is a story of the sea—an explosion and rescue. The gallery will enjoy it.

"A WELL WASHED HOUSE" (C. G. P. C.), Oct. 1.—A good picture of a kind well known. People seem to like a cascade down the front stairs. This seemed to please.

"EVOLUTION AND LIFE OF A SILK WORM" (C. G. P. C.), Oct. 1.—A very valuable educational film made in Cambodia.

"REUBEN AND THE BOYS" (Cines), Sept. 28.—An Italian countryman comes to town and meets two slick crooks. It is well acted and makes laughter. The only trouble with it is that neither the countryman nor the police gets back at the crooks; but it is very funny.

"BREAD UPON THE WATERS" (Selig), Sept. 30.—An ex-convict story of hard luck. Starving, the ex-convict is given a loaf of bread and finds a ring in it. After a struggle, he returns the ring, and because of this gets a job. It takes a rather hard, reckless situation, but there is very little that is sentimental in it. It is not a love story. It makes a very fair offering without being a convincing or very strong one. J. Edward Hungerford is the author. Oscar Eagle produces it. The ex-convict is played by W. P. Foote; his wife, by Vera Hamilton. The detective is M. M. Barnes. Also in the cast are L. S. McKee, Lillian Leighton, Francis Asman, Lawrice Woodburn, Timby Sheehan, Julia Griffin, Julius Frankenburg and Walter Roberts.

"OLYMPIC GAMES, PITTSBURG Y. M. C. A." (Edison), Oct. 2.—A very well photographed, interesting offering.

"THE GREEN-EYED MONSTER" (Edison), Oct. 2.—A farcical laugh-maker with a slight situation. Wm. West and Edward O'Connor play two tramps who make use of the jealousy of a young married couple (Wm. Bechtel and Louise Crolius) to get both out of the home so that they can help themselves from the larder. Wm. L. Gaylord is the author.

Independent

"THE FUGITIVE" (Solax), Sept. 27.—This is the second "Fugitive" we have seen this month, the N. Y. M. P. Co. having also had a reel by this name. Among so many releases it is perhaps not possible to keep from duplicating titles, but it is somewhat confusing, none the less. As for this picture, the story is clearly told, but is not new nor is it one of those convincing, human stories that can be used again and again and still keep fresh. The acting is as good as the situation permitted. Miss Blanche Cornwall plays the heroine; Darwin Karr, the hero who, not very fortunately for the picture, is also a fugitive from the just law.

"FOR THE LOVE OF THE FLAG" (Solax), Sept. 25.—A melodrama whose object is to picture the struggle in a man's heart between love for his country and love for his wife and children. To bring this out, he is first shown as discharged, unjustly, from the drafting room of a government fort and then, while he is out of work and his family starving, according, in his desperation, money from a foreign spy to draw plans of the new fort. Patriotism wins in the end and he is made happy. The early scenes are very well acted indeed, and are fine; but the later scenes, in which the man's little boy comes in with the flag, are artificial; they show lack of thought. Darwin Karr plays the draftsman; Lee Beggs, the foreign agent; Blanche Cornwall is the wife, and the Solax Kid is the boy. As a whole, it makes an acceptable offering.

"THE RENEGADE" (American), Oct. 2.—Pictures with a sheriff have one great advantage; there is one character who is always easy to recognize. In this case, the story is clear enough as to its main drift; but it suffers a good deal in its early scenes from confusion due to the number of characters. This is partly due to poor photography; although some of the scenes are so well pictured and so natural that they seem almost intimate. There is nothing in the story that will make it take high rank among pictures; but it has freshness enough to interest and makes a fair offering.

"JACK OF DIAMONDS" (American), Oct. 7.—It is interesting, but some will question the advisability of making a villain out of Kerrigan. If he had done it poorly, it would have been another matter; but here the matinee idol has fallen and is as villainous as even Richardson. The latter is also in the picture, but he doesn't do any heroic work. If we could see him do some soft, moonlight swinging on the farm gate now, that would be worth while. The story is much slighter than usual with Flying A pictures, but what there is of it is well acted and gets over. It makes a very fair offering.

"INTERNATIONAL AVIATION MEET" (Gaumont), Sept. 28.—Excellent photography and interesting scenes mark this offering. It was taken at Chicago recently and includes views of several peculiar types of aeroplanes.

"LIFE IN THE MOUNTAINS OF CAUCASIA" (Gaumont), Sept. 28.—A short, but interesting offering. It is well photographed, but is better as an educational than as a scenic.

"A GARRISON JOKE" (Majestic), Sept. 29.—The story behind this picture is of the slightest; it is the kind one might tell another while chatting on a corner. It deals with an April fool letter and shows how it was received. Herbert Prior and Mabel Trunnelle play the leads and some good views of a garrison (Ft. Slocum, N. Y.) are included.

"BELLIGERENT BENJAMIN" (Majestic), Sept. 29.—On the same reel, but slighter than the first. There is almost no story at all to it. Mr. Scardon and Anna Lehr play the leads and there is a fine bulldog in it. The photography is poor. The two make an offering that is very slight indeed.

"QUAINT SEATS IN SARDINIA" (Cines), Sept. 28.—A partly hand-colored travelog, only fairly well photographed. It gives quaint costumes, old buildings and streets and some grand views.

"EARLY'S AWAKENING" (Powers), Oct. 2.—A story of children and perhaps for children. In it is featured a precocious child.

"NEW YORK FIRE FIGHTERS" (Powers), Oct. 2.—On the same reel as the foregoing are some stirring scenes picturing the fire drill at headquarters in Sixty-seventh Street. Exhibitions are given on the scaling ladder, shooting the life rope and descending, and other daring feats of the firemen. The picture might well have been extended.

"HE HAD BUT FIFTY CENTS" (Imp), Oct. 5.—This is a rattling good comedy.

"A DAY IN AN INFANT ASYLUM" (Imp), Oct. 5.—On the same reel are many interesting pictures of children in a large institution. It is well photographed and will make a strong appeal to human sympathies.

"AN ALPINE TRAGEDY" (Milano), Oct. 5.—Strong drama. The scenes are laid above the snow line in the mountains. There are good situations and they are competently handled.

"A COUNTRY GIRL" (Imp), Oct. 3.—A weirdly conceived story of a country girl lured from her neighborhood sweetheart by a devil-man or man-devil from the city. The picture is well put on and will hold the interest.

"TWO WOMEN" (Powers), Oct. 4.—Florence Barker has the role of a widow struggling to support a child and Fritzi Brunette that of a woman with a husband and accepting attentions from another man. The work of both is good; that of the latter once or twice inclines to the melodramatic. Still, it is an emotional part and the question may easily be a matter of opinion.

"BOB'S DECEPTION" (Rex), Oct. 3.—A story that grows on you as the reel unwinds. It is carefully thought out and intelligently executed.

"ZIGOTO TO THE RESCUE" (Gaumont), Oct. 3.—Fantastic comedy and amusing. It is a burlesque on a well-known sleuth of modern fiction.

"THE WARNING" (Thanhouser), Oct. 4.—A pretty story, in which the chief characters are a father and son, the latter of whom is portrayed by the Thanhouser kid. There is a fishing scene in which a fish drawn from the water by the youngster seems to be hardly "animated." There is one particularly effective picture, however, where the father, dreaming, sees on the dark face of the water the figure of his son and his wife. It is a fine bit of brief double exposure.

"A SIX-CYLINDER ELOPEMENT" (Thanhouser), Oct. 6.—Good comedy. Riley Chamberlain has the part of the daddy who interrupts the elopement, only to be beaten out in an ingenious situation.

"LOVE WILL FIND A WAY" (Comet), Oct. 5.—While the settings were carefully arranged and the photography is good, the plot is not strong; it is hackneyed. The work of the mother of the young man was good.

"THE LAUNCHING OF THE IMPERATOR" (Gaumont), Oct. 5.—As the title indicates, these pictures were taken at the time of the launching of the greatest ship in the world. There are supplementary scenes showing stages of construction. It all will interest.

"TIME AVENGES" (Reliance), Oct. 5.—There is nothing particularly new in this story either in plot or situation. The only feature that will attract attention is a launching of the lifeboat, but the crew of this were so unconscionably slow in getting it away that the villain might well have drowned.

"THE CRUEL STEPMOTHER" (Imp.), Sept. 30.—Two little children, playing the principal roles in this sentimental drama, are excited by reading a fairy story of a cruel stepmother and run away when they hear that such a person is coming into their home. But in the end they find out that their stepmother is not at all like the one in the book. The story is clearly set forth and has a particularly strong appeal for women.

"THE CONVICT'S RETURN" (Gem), Oct. 1.—The convict in this pleasing drama makes an attempt to take vengeance on a faithless pal when the latter's child interferes at the critical moment. The story has a good dramatic quality, is quick to catch the attention from vigorous action at the beginning and the interest is uniformly sustained. The characters are clear cut and the acting is good throughout.

"WHEN UNCLE SAM WAS YOUNG" (101-Bison, N. Y. M. P. Co.), Oct. 5.—This two-reel drama of the Revolution, covering the period from the protest against "taxation without representation" to the signing of the Declaration of Independence, affords an intensely interesting succession of brilliant scenes, including the Indian troubles of the time, the universal protest against English oppression, the drilling of the Minute Men, the Boston Tea Party, the Battle of Bunker Hill, the signing of the Declaration of Independence and the making and unfurling of the first American flag. In this background is woven an exciting story of a British officer's double dealing with a loyal Colonial girl and an Indian maid. The destruction of the tea in Boston harbor is particularly well done, as is the Battle of Bunker Hill. Much care has obviously been exercised to make all settings true in their details and the effort has had praiseworthy results. There is no doubt that the film will have a cordial reception in any playhouse.

"THE LUCKY LOSER" (Eclair), Oct. 3.—Some amusing situations in this domestic comedy grow out of a girl's whim in promising that the one of her lovers who wins a certain race will win "a wife." The "lucky loser," losing the race through the foul play of one of the rivals, nevertheless wins the girl. Lovers of the quiet smile will enjoy this film.

"HER WHOLE DUTY" (Champion), Sept. 30.—A girl reporter's father, an ex-judge, is, in this drama, locked up for drunkenness and her city editor unwittingly compels her to get the story of her father's disgrace. The girl's struggle between a desire to shield her father and her duty to the paper is well depicted. Docks on the Hudson at New York give an added touch of interest to the film.

"HEARTS AND SKIRTS" (Nestor), Oct. 4.—This is a good comedy of two young people who, to begin with, have no desire whatever to comply with the conditions of a will by marrying. The ruses of each to cure the other of the notion of marriage bring about several genuinely funny situations. The humor is broad and will be widely appreciated. The scenes in which Billy, a cowpuncher, the pal of the reluctant bridegroom, appears disguised as the latter's wife, are extremely laughable and deserve special commendation. The story begins in a drawing room in New York and winds up on a ranch in the West.

"THE BOOMERANG" (Nestor), Oct. 2.—Howard Davies, as the employer of an outfit of cowboys whom he starves on bread and water while he himself eats like an epicure, is well rendered and the theme of this comedy which he sustains is very refreshing in that it proves the gunmen of the West to be eating as well as fighting human beings. The boss comes to grief through his meanness in trying to get rid of some guests by feigning smallpox. Out of this ruse grow a succession of laughable incidents.

"LOVE AND SCIENCE" (Eclair), Sept. 29.—This presents a strictly motion picture story, dealing with a scientist whose interest in perfecting a seeing telephone grows so great that he neglects his sweetheart. He succeeds, but while receiving his first call his girl plays a trick on him, which, innocent though it is, unseats his mind. In order to restore it the scene of the prank must be reproduced and for this purpose the services of a motion picture company are employed. The novelty of the plot and the mechanical properties used in this film recommend it highly.

"THE HIDDEN BONDS" (Rex), Sept. 29.—In this melodrama, through some clever manipulations in Wall Street, a girl's guardian is compelled to deliver up some bonds which he has hidden in order to prove that her lover has stolen them. The unmasking of the rascally guardian and the exoneration of the hero are finally accomplished. The acting does much to compensate for a none too strong plot.

"THE OLD PROSPECTOR" (Nestor), Sept. 30.—This drama portrays the character of an old prospector who, in a fit of gold-madness, murders a young friend. The pal of the murdered man is convicted of the crime on circumstantial evidence and is about to be hanged when the old man confesses. He plays a difficult part and plays it well. The settings are very picturesque and the suspense at the finish is well sustained.

"THE CALL OF THE BLOOD" (Majestic), Oct. 1.—Herbert Prior as John Ford, a civil engineer, and Annie Lehr as a gypsy, his wife, play the leading parts in this well-acted drama. The gypsy wife, after some years of married life, leaves her husband to resume her wanderings with her people, and though she appears secretly in her home to see her sick child, she finally returns to her own people. Her wavering between the "call of the blood" and her duty to her husband is admirably depicted. Scenes of the gypsy camp are interesting and interest in the story is well sustained.

"THE MEDALLION" (Lux), Oct. 4.—This drama has for its theme the overshadowing love of a son for his mother. She is a very old lady and an invalid and her one pleasure in life consists in contemplating a very valuable medallion. The son losing a sum of money by accident is threatened with arrest and is tempted to pawn his mother's keepsake to save himself. But he decides to face prison rather than cause her sorrow. Meanwhile the money is found. This story is clearly and interestingly presented and the interest is maintained to the last.

"LETTERS OF A LIFETIME" (Thanhouser), Oct. 1.—In this drama an old man, with only a month of life promised by his doctors, rereads a number of letters and they remind him of his wasted years. The scenes which depict his retrospections have been well chosen and show the most dramatic incidents of his life. People of a reflective turn of mind will like this film.

"BROTHERS UNDER THE SKIN" (Reliance), Oct. 2.—Hector Dion handles the leading male part in this drama to good effect. It serves to prove the truth that, when all is said and done, the capitalist and the laboring man are "brothers under the skin." The action proceeds vigorously with some admirable touches of pathos and tense feeling. The scenes in which Adams, a starving striker, seeks revenge on his one-time employer are particularly commendable.

"THE WORTH WHILE WEDDING" (Comet), Sept. 30.—A spirited comedy in which three hoboes rob a bridegroom of his clothes, thereby compelling him to get married in a barrel. This will be viewed with a smile.

"THE EIGHTH WONDER OF THE WORLD" (Comet), Sept. 30.—On the same film as the above appear these views of Waldorf Miller, who has been living for the last two years with a broken neck. He was injured while diving at New Rochelle, N. Y. We found the picture very interesting.

"RILEY AND SCHULTZ" (Keystone), Sept. 30.—This is a short, laughable farce comedy of three policemen and an escaped convict. The film is intended for friends of the burlesque.

"THE NEW NEIGHBOR" (Keystone), Sept. 30.—Following the above on the same film is this comedy of errors in which a young husband is obsessed with much groundless jealousy of his wife and comes to amusing grief for his folly. The fun is extremely lively.

"FOR THE HONOR OF THE 7TH" (Broncho), Oct. 2.—This drama of Indian troubles on the frontier gives two well-presented battles between a stockade garrison and the red skins. The story is that of two officers, rivals in love and honor, and both officers of the Seventh, which boasts a high record for honor. The action is vigorous and occurs in a picturesque mountain country. Considerable care has been taken to make the fighting convincing and the film lacks nothing in that respect. As the whole, the production is highly commendable.

"I'M GOING OUT FOR A SHAVE" (Great Northern), Oct. 5.—Five or six men go on a spree together and do many things that will make people laugh in spite of themselves. It is well done and, for this sort thing, is astonishingly funny.

INQUIRIES.

NOTE—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of studio addresses, kept up-to-date, will be sent if a stamped and addressed return envelope accompanies the request.

A. D.—The question of theft of another's idea is too delicate to be broadly decided. If you take the main plot it is a theft. If you take some situation and make another and entirely different story it is not. If you get a suggestion from the work of another it is not dishonest. If you get a plot it is.

B. C. W.—Biograph and Keystone films have no business connection. When the Biograph company came east last summer most of the comedy company remained in Los Angeles. They went to the Bison and now appear in Keystone brand films. Biograph photography is so clear because they have their laboratory force so well organized. We do not know what their idea is in trying to run one foot scenes. "The Fatal Chocolate" was released February nineteenth of this year. The Biograph players are still in New York.

W. I. G.—Several companies have made "Uncle Tom's Cabin," but you probably have reference to the Vitagraph production of about three years ago. Republic released "A New Lease On Life" last Spring. We cannot search for a play the story of which is given. It might take an entire day to locate it.

J. S. N.—If you cannot get your stories back or get any reply from the companies, notify them by registered letter that you withdraw the script, copy the carbon and send it out again. This does not apply to the story you sold, but which has not yet been paid for. To save trouble send only to those companies having an outlet for their releases.

A. W.—We have not the names of the characters in that Biograph, but Edwin August and Miss Blanche Sweet had the leads in "The Lesser Evil." In Nestor's "When the Heart Calls," Lee Moran was the city man, Russell Bassett the rancher, Miss Louise Glaum was his daughter and Miss Victoria Forde Lee's fiancee.

HIC JACET.—Wilfred Lucas was Great Brother in "A Pueblo Legend." Gladys Egan was the child in "The Child's Remorse" and "In the North Woods," Edna Foster was Bobby in "As In a Looking Glass." Solax does not give names and the Reliance did not cast that Bedella. That script should be under the new dispensation. Look for a local letter.

J. H. R.—Irving White had the lead in Lubin's "Betty of the Roses." The daughter in Essanay's "The Ranchman's Trust" is not known to the company; that is to the home office. Pathe released on July 31st "Max's Divorce Case" and "Elephant Hunting in Victoria Nyanza." "An Indian's Pride" was the release for July 6th. Pathe's Weekly was right as you have it. The wife in "Two Daughters of Eve" was identified last week. The player of the actress was Miss Geneva. It was her only part.

M. B.—The Bison player is not an Indian. They have no Indian stars.

J. T. P.—Carlyle Blackwell is with the Kalem Glendale section and playing each week. Some players send autographs and some do not. We do not know which are which.

BARBARA.—If you'll send a stamped and addressed envelope to the Lubin company they will let you have a form sheet that tells of photoplay form. If you want more information send to this paper for Technique of the Photoplay, which is sent postpaid for one dollar. John Halliday had the lead with Miss Ormi Hawley in Lubin's "The Shepherd's Flute."

N. A. M.—Your American question is too broadly framed. Be specific. Who plays the father, mother and villain in what play? They have two companies. We have no cast for the play you ask for.

G. M.—Whether you get the paper more quickly through the mail than on the stand depends entirely upon the postoffice. Millions of pieces of second class matter are dumped into the office Thursday and Friday of each week. If we get an early handling you get the paper earlier by mail, when we are not so fortunate we do not get around until Monday. Charles Malles was the father in "The Sands o' Dee." Willis Secord and Sydney Booth are not the same. We have not seen "Tom Moore" cast lately.

M. E. H.—William Bauman was Bertie Cecil's brother in Thanhouser's "Under Two Flags." It isn't too much trouble to answer questions or we would not have this department.

HELEN H.—Make complaint to the postoffice inspectors through your local office. If the money order was cashed there should be no difficulty in getting action.

J. H.—We don't think that Arthur Johnson would turn to comedies just because you wrote and asked him to, but if the company received a whole lot of similar letters, and there seem to be hundreds who feel as you do about it, they might ask him to increase the number of comedies he makes, though he does appear in comedy frequently.

M. L. P.—Mrs. Julia Swayne Gordon was the star actress in Vitagraph's "The Diamond Brooch."

T. B.—Our data does not give the name of the girl in "Willie Becomes An Artist." It is doubtful if you could get hold of "The Resurrection" again. It is an old film and probably worn out.

MARBLEHEAD.—It is understood that Nat Goodwin has a financial interest in his pictured "Oliver Twist." He has also appeared in "Nathan Hale." Billy Quirk was Fra Diavolo in the Solax production of that opera. It is not the province of this department to say that one film is better than another. There is not a sufficient demand for colored films to warrant the American companies taking up this end. It is left almost wholly to C. G. P. C. and Gaumont. The Eclair company was never licensed and no other company ever used its trademark. You both seem to be wrong. Edison and Pathe made "Great Train Robbery" pictures and there were others (more than four), but we do not place them just now. The Edison of that title was practically the first of the real photoplays.

A. J.—Wilfred Lucas was the lead in "The Primal Call." Edwin August was the father in "A Child's Remorse."

A. R. H.—See answer above for Betty. Robert Tabor was Miss Ormi Hawley's opposite in Lubin's "When Father Had His Way." Earle Williams was the Prince in Vitagraph's "The Prince and the Pumps."

B. G. U.—We are on the trail of the player and hope to answer next week. Don't know that Tom Powers ever was in stock in your town. Why not ask him. No information on the Lubin.

D. M.—We do not give addresses in this column and we do not list companies not having an outlet for their production. The Plot of the Short Story may be had of the publishers of this paper for one dollar, postpaid.

ANXIOUS.—Read the news columns for information as to the ball. We publish all the facts as they develop.

H. M. S.—Miss Clair McDowell was the wife in "Two Daughters of Eve." The actress was a tryout and her name is given above. Eddie Dillon was the faithful suitor in "Blind Love."

Situation in Sacramento.

Sacramento, Cal.,

Editor Moving Picture World.

Dear Sir:—Sacramento is the most prosperous little city in the West, for the motion picture business. In five years of my ownership of moving picture theaters I find the business of the same has been improving each year.

Five years ago I owned the Empire Theater which was at 423 K Street, at that time there were only three motion picture theaters here. Now I am owner of the Lyric Theater, and there are nine motion picture theaters in this city and we are all doing well. I can say better than any city in the West.

Of the nine houses there are five of them using Trust Films and the other four are using Independent Films. I can not tell you the difference in the business which the houses are doing as they are all doing well.

I am now having a new house built which will be in the heart of Sacramento, located at 918 K Street, and will seat 550 people. This will be one of the best ventilated and equipped houses here in Sacramento. It will cost about $25,000.

In giving the place a name, I gave a name contest and the one sending the best name would win a prize of $25.00. Each person was entitled to two names, and out of over 2,000 names the one selected was Actograph, sent by Mrs. C. W. L. Ennis, of San Francisco. This name was selected by a committee of three citizens who acted as judges.

The Actograph will open on or about August 20th, and I will use the Independent pictures.

Yours respectfully,

J. W. Di Stasio,
Gen. Mgr., Lyric and Actograph Theaters.

Points for Directors.

2836 W. Pico Street, Los Angeles, Cal.,

Editor Moving Picture World, New York.

Dear Sir:—Will you allow me to make a suggestion for the benefit of moving picture directors? I am a British officer of many years African and Indian service, and have lately been passing a vacation in Southern California. Whilst here I have attended many motion picture theaters, and have been very pleased with the many pictures exhibited referring to your Civil War. Occasionally, however, pictures have been exhibited supposed to represent the British in Egypt, South Africa, etc., and I am sorry to say that I cannot commend them at all.

For instance, last night I witnessed a picture entitled "Lad Battles." The actors did their part well enough, but the uniforms, tactics, weapons, etc., even the scenery, were entirely incorrect. I will mention a few discrepancies. In the first place, the British were represented using a Gatling gun, a weapon which has been obsolete in their service since 1885. They use the Maxim and Vickars Maxim machine guns.

The officers were dressed in khaki, or olive drab uniforms which were realistic enough, but were armed with bright scabbarded swords. Our officers on active service use scabbards made of brown leather which does not glitter in the sun. Then again the pictured officers wore U. S. A. sword-belts.

The scenery was of a lightly treed forest, whereas it should have been a sandy plain, well bespattered with rocks, with rocky hills in the background. The men were shown in square formation, which is used in European warfare to receive cavalry; all South African warfare takes place in very extended order, taking all the cover possible. The Boers were shown as wearing military uniforms (they fought in their ordinary clothes) and charging in military style up to the trenches. As a matter of fact, the only part of a Boer seen in warfare, is the little spatter of flame that comes from a modern rifle using smokeless cartridges, rising from behind a rock or ant heap. Last, but not least, a flag was used, which would be the last thing in modern warfare, showing the enemy the exact location of the troops, and being a great help to them in locating the range.

I am not writing this in a critical spirit, but merely to show these glaring discrepancies. The war pictures of '65 are so splendid, that it seems a pity to portray such wrong ideas of a friendly nation at the present day.

I believe it was a "Vitagraph" picture, and perhaps you would be so kind as to convey my suggestions to them: I do not know their address personally.

I expect to take a party for Mr. W. N. Selig from the Cape to Cairo in the near future, and when these films are released, you will see that my statements above are correct.

Yours faithfully,

S. L. P. Cammeron Palaeologus (Major).

EDWIN AUGUST.

Judging from the questions received there seems to be some confusion as to what company Edwin August is now playing with, for he may be seen in the releases of the Biograph, Powers and Lubin companies and the sudden shifts tend to confuse those who know that the same player cannot be with two Licensed and one Independent companies at the same time. As a matter of record Mr. August is with the Lubin company and has been located at the Philadelphia studios for some time. When the Biograph company returned from Los Angeles last June Mr. August arranged to transfer his services from that company to the Powers establishment and he appeared in several photoplays in company with Miss Florence Barker, but the Lubin company seemed to offer a wider field and the same advantage of advertisement and so Mr. August made a second change of location and found himself in Philadelphia where he now appears in a weekly Lubin release, although there are a number of recent Biographs that also show the player as well as several Powers photoplays. Originally Mr. August was an Edison player and a couple of years ago won popularity under the circled "E," but he was released to Biograph and remained with them for a year and a half, making a change when he decided that it would be advanatgeous to be advertised in connection with his work, which is contrary to the Biograph rule. He is a clean cut, forceful actor with a strong film personality and the rare ability to "get over" from the screen. He has scored particular success in the Biograph costume plays and may be seen in similar Lubin productions.

Edwin August.

A CORRECTION.

In our issue dated September 28th, under "New England Notes," we stated that Mr. G. A. Goldthrop, 49 Pleasant Street, Newburyport, Mass., was contemplating building a moving picture and vaudeville house in Ipswich, Mass. This is an error as Mr. Goldthrop started to build his house quite some time ago, and he now expects to open it by the 7th of October.

"Man About Town" Slapped on the Wrist.

ON page 439, August 3rd issue, our "Man About Town" makes certain remarks concerning the operator particularly as to his ability to judge the popularity or non-popularity of a film with the audience. His conclusion is that the managers are in a much better position to judge of what pleases the audience or displeases them, than is the operator, and this conclusion is, I believe, entirely correct. Several of the department writers have mentioned this article and have been displeased with it, but I think they have misunderstood the meaning of "Man About Town," and have construed his words as a criticism of the operator. Man About Town was perhaps a little bit unfortunate in the wording of one or two sentences, and it is this which has given rise to the idea that he was condemning operators, when in reality he was not.

In dealing with this matter I shall take as my text this sentence from his article:

> He admitted paying for the service (film service) almost a third less than he pays his operator.

Also:

> This, in effect, was that an operator was not the show, and few of them can qualify as good managers. He is an essential part of a good show so long as he is qualified and sticks to his end of the business. No matter how good a man may be in that respect, he cannot pull a show through single handed. No good operator will say he can do so. Such men will invariably say: "You give me the goods and I will be responsible for the rest." The selection of the film service is up to the manager. He is the one closer to the patrons than is the operator, and if he gives his end of the business attention, he can readily learn what his patrons want and what he should give them to hold the trade. Too much reliance and responsibility should not be placed upon the "man behind the machine." Many of them are intelligent fellows with sound judgment, and many are not. Most of them are solely adapted for the mechanical end, and many of them have more time on their hands than is required to keep their outfit in proper condition and be ready at all times to do their part in giving a good show.

This matter involves several very important propositions. In the first place the remark is made that the manager was paying almost a third less for his film service than he was for his operator. This might or might not mean something. In the city it is quite possible to secure, let us say, three reels of film, changed every other day, for one-half of the salary a good operator should command, and to have it of excellent quality too. To put this into figures I will say that it is possible for the city manager to get three reels of film, changed every other day, the service to be of very good quality, for $17.50 a week, whereas a good operator (I am talking about high class, really competent men), should have a salary of $35.00 per week. Now, I want to draw this comparison, and it is the right comparison too: "Man About Town" says that the operator cannot put on a good show single handed. By this he undoubtedly means that no operator can put on a good show without having good films and good equipment to do it with, and in this he is absolutely correct. But let me say right here that the high class, thoroughly competent operator can take poor equipment and poor films and put on as good or a better show than can the incompetent operator with good equipment and good films. I don't, of course, mean by this that even the best operator in the world could transform a "rain storm" into a creditable result on the screen. After films have become badly scratched, and the scratches are filled with dirt, no operator on earth can better that condition, but the competent operator can so handle his light that the field will be absolutely even and clear at all times. He can so adjust his machine that the picture will be practically, perfectly steady on the screen, except that he has poor perforations to contend with, and he can so gauge his speed that the play will be properly enacted and be neither a jumping jack performance or a float-along farce.

To put the matter in a different way, it is possible to have a very creditable show with a high class operator and comparatively poor film service; whereas it is practically impossible to have a good show with the best of film service and an incompetent operator; or, rather, an operator who is not thoroughly competent.

As to the statement that but very few operators would make successful managers, I believe, that Man About Town made a statement which he cannot back up with proof. There are, of course, a great many operators who would not make successful managers because they have not the business ability, just as there are a great many managers who would never make successful operators because they have not the peculiar ability mechanical and otherwise, required. However, it may be conceded that Man About Town had, in support of his statement, the fact that the man of natural executive ability would be more apt to gravitate towards the managerial end of things in the first place. The statement that many operators are intelligent men (he puts it fellows) with sound judgment and that many are not, is, of course, correct; but the same statement could be applied with equal truth to the managers, taking them as a class. I heartily agree that the selection of film service should be left entirely to the manager. It is no part of the operators' duty and Man About Town is, in my judgment, perfectly correct when he says that the manager is in a better position to judge as to the taste of his audience than is the operator. The operator has his proper field of activity and so has the manager; but let me shoot this wad at Man About Town: A good show could be put on with a poor manager or no manager at all, but a good show could not be put on without a good operator. Them 'ere's my sentiments, Mr. Man About Town.

The Other Side.

Jacob Cohen, Liberty, N. Y., writes:

> I was honestly surprised to read your views and to see your endorsement of the so-called reorganization of New York operators, in September 7th issue. That a man with your experience in the labor movement, your experience with the New York operators, and mainly your experience as a member of the Arbitration Committee, representing the former Auxiliary should express such views and endorse this so-called branch No. 2 of Local 35, compels me to wonder whether you have been humbugged and led to believe such a plan of reorganization would help and benefit the moving picture operator, or whether you have put into print an endorsement before you have viewed the question at stake and the position the moving picture operators will occupy in branch No. 2 of Local 35. You have said that the Auxiliary meetings were a riot, but you have neglected to say why and what caused them to be a riot. Hardly do I remember any riots at the Auxiliary meetings except when the question of independent charter was brought to the surface (and that meant the opening of an old wound), and those excitable (what you term riots) meetings came after waiting for years for what was promised and justly due the operators of New York (an independent charter) by the Executive Board of Local 35 at the time they reorganized the Auxiliary. Do you remember the time when the delegates, elected by Local 35 to represent them and the Auxiliary at the Springfield Convention, went to the convention with intention, as one of the delegates explained to the members of the Auxiliary, to bring back a separate charter for the Auxiliary? Do you remember his statement on his return from the convention in regard to a separate charter for the Auxiliary? If my memory does not fail me it was: "We had all the trouble in the world to hold our own charter," meaning 35's, and then, later on, it was discovered that they never brought the subject of an independent charter for the Auxiliary before the convention. There are other numerous instances showing unfairness on the part of Local 35 to the Auxiliary and it is a safe bet that Local 35 will never consent to grant the moving picture operators of New York a separate charter and the sooner the entire matter is brought before the A. F. of L. the better it will be for all parties concerned. I, for one, see no hope of betterment or protection for the operators in this so-called branch No. 2 of Local 35 and I certainly congratulate the operators who had the courage to maintain the independent organization now known as the Moving Picture Operators' Union No. 1. You, Mr. Richardson, who are an American, with, no doubt, the spirit of "'76" flowing in your veins, believe that for taxation we should have full representation, and this is what the New York operator wants and needs. A man of your position should help the operators instead of working against them. I trust you will not think I have taken up too much space in your valuable department.

I have given the foregoing letter space for two reasons, viz.: (a) the writer has set forth his views frankly and fairly without resorting to abuse or vilification. He has presented his argument cleanly and clearly and has put matters just as he sees them. (b) He has raised certain questions which I desire to answer openly, to the end that all may understand my views on this very important subject.

In the first place let me take up the matter of the disorderly meetings. I said the meetings of the old Auxiliary were a riot. This, perhaps, was too strong a term to apply to all the meetings, but in all the time I was a member of the Auxiliary I did not see one meeting which could, by any stretch of the imagination, be termed orderly throughout the session. The meetings were of such nature (so disorderly) that it was a practical impossibility to properly conduct the business of the organization, and very frequently it was practically impossible to transact any business at all, nor was this disorderliness by any manner of means confined to the times when the independent charter question was before the house. The independent charter I did not regard as of any large value since if the Auxiliary could not conduct its affairs decently and in order, or at least could not hold an orderly business meeting, then could it be expected to succeed merely through the fact that independence from Local Union No. 35 was secured? However, unless the present arrangement is carried out fairly and Branch No. 2 is allowed to conduct its own business, without undue interference by Branch No. 1 of Local Union No. 35, then I shall, before the next convention comes, set that fact forth openly, so that every operator in the United States may know the conditions and insist, at the next convention, on fair treatment for the New York men. I am not in favor of an independent New York union, for the reason that it cuts them off from all affiliation with the operators of the United States, and renders their cards of no value whatever outside of the city of New York. President Goldblatt, of the independent organization has requested me to place two important questions before the department No. 2 of Local Union No. 35, and this I intend to do, and will communicate the answer to your President. If the answers are favorable, then I believe the last objection to the present arrangement is removed. It would hardly, I think, be fair to publish the questions before they had been presented to the organization. I have taken the position I have, simply because I have had a wide experience in the labor movement, and that experience prompted me to side with the new organization. And now let me tell you, brother, that I have no other desire than to accomplish the greatest good for New York operators as a whole. I believe the stand I have taken in this matter is the right stand, and that the operators all over the country have the right to know what my views are, since I am right here on the ground and am presumed to be informed. My present understanding is, and it will be confirmed or not confirmed by the two questions to be asked, that branch No. 1 and branch No. 2 now constitute Local Union No. 35, and that each branch has equal authority and the right to govern its own affairs, absolutely. If this is true, then in my judgment, all objection to the present arrangement is removed.

And now, just a word regarding one or two sentences of your letter: You say the Executive Board of Local No. 35 promised you an independent charter. My dear sir if you were well posted in the methods of organized labor you would know that the Executive Board of Local 35 could not possibly keep such a promise if they made it; this by reason of the fact that such matters are entirely out of their jurisdiction, and in the hands of the International officers. As to bringing this matter before the A. F. of L., you plainly are not very well acquainted with the methods of procedure followed by that body. You would have just about as much show of accomplishing your end by taking this matter directly to the A. F. of L., as an aeroplainist would have of flying to Heaven. The A. F. of L. might listen to you—in fact it probably would do that. It might even make a recommendation to the International; but after that recommendation was made the International would do just exactly as it pleased, nor, from the practical standpoint, could the A. F. of L. compel the International to do otherwise. The only thing the A. F. of L. could do to enforce its recommendation would be to revoke the International charter, and you have got a poor chance of anything of that kind being done.

I was amused at a bundle of "advice to operators" published in a certain publication recently. Its writer displayed such dense ignorance of the power of the A. F. of L., and the methods pursued by it, that it was really laughable. The A. F. of L., is of large value as an organizing body. It also wields a very considerable moral influence in the settlement of strikes, etc., and acts as a sort of financial clearing house between the various organizations under certain conditions, but its power in matters of this kind amounts to practically nothing at all. As I told friend Goldblatt, I regard the taking of such a matter to the A. F. of L., as to all intents and purposes, a waste of labor. More than a year ago the matter of a separate operators' international was taken up in this department and was recommended to the serious consideration of the operators. Whether or not this will ever come about remains to be seen, though personally I believe it will. However, the time does not seem yet to be ripe for such action. Such a thing could only be accomplished by the calling of a convention, the organizing of an international, and the demanding, by the new body, of recognition by the A. F. of L., which would most likely only be accomplished after a strenuous fight.

And now, so far as this department is concerned, this ends the matter. Controversies of this kind are unfortunate, to say the least, and I do not see any benefit in keeping the matter in print. I will inform Mr. Goldblatt of the reply to the questions by mail. It is hardly a matter to be made public property.

Effect of Condenser Discoloration.

The cheaper grades of condenser lenses placed on the market of late, contain about every fault in the catalogue. In many instances they are exceedingly rough and their surface contains lines, hollows and ridges galore. Aside from these various mechanical flaws, however, there is a great deal of discoloration, some of which is present in the lens when it reaches the operator, and some of which only shows up after use. The prevalent colors are green amber and purple. The green is not ordinarily produced in the process of use, but is present in the lens when it is made. This also is largely true of the amber, but the purple is a fault developed by use and is caused by an excess of some ingredient contained in the glass.

The claim has been made, both by manufacturers and by supposed-to-be experts, that these colors have little or no effect on screen illumination. One man, who claims to be an optician of standing and an authority on projection lenses, recently made the flat statement that green in condensers did not injure the illumination in any way, but was, in fact, advantageous. This statement brought the matter finally to a crisis, and experiments were instituted to determine the truth or falsity of his claim. Two halves of broken condensers, one of pure, white glass and the other a green tint, were mounted in front in a condenser cell and the light projected to the screen. The amount of difference was astonishing. The light in the lower right-hand half of the screen came through the green condenser and was many shades darker and more dirty looking than the light upon the other half, which was projected through the white condenser.

It is unnecessary for me to proceed further with this argument, since it is a matter easily susceptible of experiment by the operator. You can break two lenses, one a white and one a tinted lens, or you can use portions of lenses already broken, projecting through the stereopticon lens. Focus the light sharply on the screen and note the difference in the illumination on the two halves of the screen. But in order to make such an experiment you should have one of the half lenses absolutely clear white; in other words, an optically perfect glass so far as color is concerned.

All-Night Theater.

Chicago, Ill., writes:

> As one of the department readers, I would like to ask a little help. I have a 1910 Motiograph. My trouble is excessive noise. I keep the mechanism well oiled, using one-drop oil, and tried bees wax as you suggested to one brother a few weeks ago. Another difficulty I experience is that the vaseline runs out of my intermittent casing. In three days time there is not a drop left. This forces me to fill the oil well every two days, which is very disagreeable, since the vaseline flies all over the intermittent sprocket and I have to wipe it off after each reel. I think it will be of interest to you to know that there is now a theater, the Lyric, on State and Van Buren Streets, which keeps open all night. They employ three shifts, but the shift from twelve to eight A. M. consists of only the operator and cashier, the latter also acting as door man. In addition there are two porters who clear up. The report is that this theater makes all of its expenses for the day at night, so that everything taken in during the day is clear profit, and this must be very large as the theater occupies one of the liveliest corners in the city. I am patiently waiting for that new hand-book.

The trouble with your Motiograph mechanism is probably due to the fact that connecting rod 055 plate 6, page 143, July 13th issue, has become worn; also the intermittent casing bushing, which carries the cam shaft, is most likely worn so badly that the vaseline works out around the shaft. You will probably need a new connecting shaft, 055, page 6, a new geneva shaft and socket 056, page 4, a new socket for the other end of the connecting shaft and a new bushing in the intermittent casing. I would suggest that you remove the mechanism from its stand, take it to the Enterprise Optical Co., 564 West Randolph St., Chicago, Ill., and secure the loan of another mechanism while these parts are being installed. Neither yourself nor your manager must expect that moving picture mechanism parts will last forever. You must understand that the Motiograph connecting rod and sockets must be renewed when they become worn, since the worn part will develop considerable noise. The all night theater is interesting, and I would be glad to know the amount of patronage such a house enjoys between the hours of mid-night and nine A. M. The corner at State and Van Buren Streets is a lively one all right still I would suppose there would not be any patronage to speak of from two A. M. until pretty well along in the morning. I very much doubt if this house would make all of its expenses at night. The rental must be enormous, and run into the thousands of dollars per month. If I recollect right, the Orpheum pays approximately $4,000 a month rental, and I should not suppose the same amount of space could be had at State and Van Buren Streets for any less money. I would suggest that you cease using patent oils and get a pint of good grade of light dynamo oil from some reliable oil dealer. The hand-book is being rushed as fast as possible.

Light Trouble.

Rochester, N. Y., writes:

> I am in receipt of the Worlds from January, 1912, except March 2nd issue. They are certainly chock full of everything that is good. I am using a Standard machine and 40 amperes of 110 volt a. c., through a rheostat. Have two 6½ condensers and a bluish spot in the center of the screen, which changes to a yellow cast on both sides. The spot reaches nearly from top to bottom. I have tried two 7½ lenses and while the screen looks clear there is not a strong light. The picture is dim. One 6½ and one 7½ is not as good as my two 6½s. Have tried them with the 7½ in front and behind. Have also adjusted carbons all ways; ½ Electra. Don't you think the power has something to do with the dim or cloudy pictures at times? Sometimes they almost jump at me and then again they are hazy. Perhaps it is in the film. If the brothers will buy a china painter's pencil (ten cents) such as they mark china with, they can write on plain glass and make a quick temporary slide. My picture is 12 feet, throw 56 feet.

Inasmuch as you have tried the various lens combinations without result, presumably your trouble doesn't lie in the condenser. You have said nothing about moving your lamphouse, and I would suggest that you move it backward and forward, watching the result. Your 12 foot picture at 56 feet would mean about a 4½ e. f. objective lens, and this should call for either one 6½, or one 7½ or two 7½ condensers. I believe with your lamphouse properly located, one of these combinations would eliminate the trouble. There would, of course, be a big difference in the screen illumination when a dense film and a film of less density is used, but surely this would not account for your light trouble. I would suggest that you get the light company to test your line voltage. Very likely the street mains which feed your house are over-loaded, thus causing a drop in voltage at certain times when a great many lamps are being used in that section. Many thanks for the china painter's brush hint. The same thing can be accomplished with a pen and white ink. But why monkey with those things when a typewriter and gelatine makes a much better slide?

Salt Brine Again.

Claude E. Linstruth, Hippodrome Theater, Carthage, N. Y., writes as follows:

> I wish to add my bit to the department in regards to the brine treated carbons. I think I must have gone after my carbons the way a woman puts down her pickles, as I got results similar to Manhattan, Kan., in issue of Sept. 21. The following is precisely what I did: I made a brine, using ordinary table salt. First I put about six quarts of water in a kettle on the stove (I did this at home), and as it came up to boiling I stirred in the salt. Kept adding same and stirring until an egg would float on it with half its surface above water. I used five pounds of salt. I noticed this amount of water would not hold all of the salt in solution, but as it held up the egg properly I poured the brine in a pan hot and put in a half dozen carbons, ½ Electra six inches; set pan in the cellar. When they had soaked four days I took out two and baked them in the oven five hours, then scraped them to get good contact, put one in top holder and struck the arc. It smoked a little (carbon was hot when put in holder), burned quietly; spot orange red, and had no definite outline. Seemed to spread all over the gate nearly; light soft but not brilliant; arc sputtered. carbons penciled or needled. Put this carbon in bottom holder with new, soaked carbon in the top; results the same. Then used soaked carbons in top and bottom with same results. After soaking the other four carbons twelve days, made same tests with same results. These last four I baked three days, as I figured that the arc sputtering was little particles of carbon chipping off as the carbon was wet or damp in near the core. Arc travel was a great deal more than when using untreated carbons. The lamphouse was rusted some. The rust spots were small as though the particles of carbon from the arc struck the walls and made a mark about the size of a pea. There were more than one hundred of these rust spots. I got them nearly all off by using kerosene. Carbon contacts were corroded. Now I wish that some brother who has been successful with the brine would set forth in detail just how the trick is done. I might add that I use Power's No. Six machine on 60 cycle, 110 volts, through a Hallberg Economizer. In making tests I tried the three different amperages the economizer will give. I expect my card from the new branch No. 2, of No. 35, and hope to see much good come from the new order of things. This is my first outburst of ignorance in the department since it has been opened to us, not because I know it all, but because I have personally bought or selected all the apparatus I have used since the opening of the department, and we older ones seem to know what to use to avoid trouble. I wish that, nine years ago, when I started in the game, I could have had a reference library such as the department. We sure did need it then. The new men entering the field of optical projection should take every advantage of it. We older ones do not have to be told to do so, as we can fully appreciate its value. I also wish to say that I didn't like the way "The Man About Town" treated the subject found on page 439, issue of August 3rd. He cited a few instances wherein the operator failed to make good, and concludes by putting us all in the same category. Now those of us, and there are many that can, and are making good, get but little satisfaction out of the article in question. I have watched the issues since the August 3rd number thinking someone would take issue, or at least add something in defence of the under-dog, without finding it, and I wish to say that, in a very friendly way, I will advance an argument that will just knock the horns off the theory advanced if you will give it space. I had rather you would use my name than not, as I don't approve of this hidden identity business. I shall be pleased when all concerned in the department will use their name and address. No harm will come of it and we might get better acquainted.

This is the first report of this kind I have had, although one other brother reported damage to his lamphouse and carbon arms. Of all the hundreds who have tried the salt brine stunt, you two are the only ones who have reported any kind of damage, and no one else has reported an experience similar to yours; therefore a question immediately arises as to the why and wherefore. Has anyone else had a similar trouble? If so let them stand forth and be heard. I thoroughly and heartily agree with you that it would be much better if I could publish the names of the various correspondents. There are, of course, times when a brother is perfectly justified in asking that his name be suppressed. Those requests very frequently come from managers who don't wish to let rival houses know of a trouble they are having, and for this I can not blame them. But it does seem as though the "please suppress my name" proposition is carried to unnecessary lengths. As to what the "Man About Town" said you will find it answered in another part of the department this week. I shall be glad to have the argument you mention and look it over. If it appears good, I will certainly give it space.

Towanda Answered.

Texas writes:

I notice in the department Towanda has trouble which corresponds with one I had several years ago, and for which I discovered the remedy. His carbon clamp screws burn off, and I will side with you that he is using more than the forty amperes he claims to be using. I took the contact screws out and with a smooth file (I call it a smooth file because that is what such files are called by metal pattern makers, which was my former trade), but to be more explicit, it is a very fine file. With this tool I smoothed the sharp edge off the contact screw threads, and then with a small three corner file, also fine, I ran it around in the thread itself to take the burr off. I then covered the screws with graphite and put them back in, and my, how much nicer they do work. I did this every once in a while, and instead of burning off they lasted for a long time. I cleaned the points of the screw every day with a file. Let Towanda follow this plan and I think he will have no more trouble. Now this little stunt not only applies to Edison lamps but to all others as well, and it is better to do it when you put screws in new. I am sorry to hear you would not answer that wall shutter stunt of yours. I was going to ask you for it myself as I will have my operating room in our new theater all finished long before the new "Bible" is ready and would like to fix things your way. But if there is no difference in the drop shutter itself, but only in the fastening of them up, then I guess I can wait for the book. I have a drop shutter designed by myself which is there with the goods, and when they are cut loose, believe me they come down. Now if I can fasten them so as to cut away as per your instructions afterward—all well and good. I don't blame you for not putting it all in the department. But I sure want one of those new books. I would not take a five dollar bill for my copy of the first edition, now that they are all gone.

Many thanks for your answer to Towanda, Texas. What you did simply amounts to thoroughly cleaning the screw so that it made better electrical contact with the lamp arm. Also you greased it with graphite, as I have time and again advised, so that it works easily at all times, and will clamp the wire down perfectly tight. As to the shutter proposition, the whole thing consists of the method of fastening the shutters up, but in order to give the shutter matter any value, you must also have a vent flue of ample size to the open air. I would not care to publish so important a part of the hand-book in the department when the book is so nearly ready for the press. In fact it is all in type and the galley proofs have been read. That would not be fair either to myself or to the publishers. I think no one can complain in this respect, as I published the machine instructions in the department in full, though they are an important part of the new book. What I meant was that I would send these instructions by mail to any one wanting them, but the response was so prompt and so exceedingly large that I was obliged to renig on that proposition. Any one who is in a hurry for these shutter instructions may have the same by remitting one dollar, but it will all be in the new book and I would rather you wait for it. You asked me to suppress not only your name but the name of the town as well. Now old man what in thunder is there in this letter which would call for the suppression not only of your name but of the name of the town also? Your name has been published in the department before and I believe you lived through it all right. Why so bashful all of a sudden?

Isolated Plant.

Mr. D. M. Sachter, Mgr., Utopian Theatorium, Sheffield, Pa., contributes the following data concerning his electric light plant:

In responding to the call for information in regards to isolated plants, I first wish to say that as a manager I am as much interested in projection as any live-wire operator, and can do a creditable job when our operator needs relief. Now as to the isolated plant: The principal objections to isolated plants are the complicated devices which necessitate the services of an engineer. This makes it almost prohibitive to install such a plant, no matter how much more desirable the isolated may be. We installed an eighteen h.p. gas engine, and a 10¾ k.w. generator; not of choice but of necessity, since there was no light company then furnishing power. To-day the local light company is furnishing 25 cycle current and you can be sure that we are glad we own our own plant, both from an economic as well as better service point of view. Our plant averages about four hours use daily, except Sundays, running four fans, about sixty lights and the arc, and we have loads of power for more. Enclosed gas bill will show that we have used, during the current month, 24,000 cubic feet of gas at twenty-eight cents per thousand, costing us about six cents per hour, and that could be considerably reduced by putting on a spark plug instead of a hot tube, and the cutting out of the gas light which is constantly used in the auditorium for emergency lights. Our engine oil bill is $1.25 for every four months. Our outfit requires no attention. Once started she is on the go until we are ready to shut down. Our light is steady and we can assure you that the screen shows the results. I have asked the manufacturers of our outfit to submit some data of their different sizes and makes to the Projection Department, and have interested them sufficiently to cause them to use the advertising columns of the Moving Picture World. This has been probably a long letter, but if you need any further information about our outfit I will gladly furnish same.

Many thanks for your appreciation of our work, neighbor Sachter. You say the principal objection to isolated plants is the complicated devices which necessitate the services of an engineer. We should like to have a statement of just exactly what your comment refers to. If some of the manufacturers are putting out the complicated devices which require the service of an expert to run them, then we would all like to be informed of that fact, because such devices are not practical from the theater point of view. The data you supply is very complete. It seems almost impossible that you could generate current for your entire theater at six cents per hour. But this is due to the fact that you are only paying thirty cents per 1,000 cubic feet of gas. In Brooklyn, it would cost you three and a third times that sum for gas, and in New York City, proper, it would cost you two and two-thirds times that amount, but even then the cost of operation would be quite reasonable. We shall be glad to receive data from the manufacturers in question, but up to date it has not been supplied. Why did you not tell us what kind of an outfit yours is?

Los Angeles Conditions.

Los Angeles contributes the following remarks concerning the situation in that city:

I just received my last World and after reading the article entitled "Los Angeles" in the Projection Department will say that whoever the responsible parties are they certainly set forth the truth as regards Los Angeles operators, and the conditions in the city electrician's office, so far as they pertain to examination and licensing of operators. I believe these parties, whoever they are, deserve great credit for finally waking up and letting you know of the disgraceful state of affairs as pertains to the examination of operators here. For this condition, however, no one is to blame but the Los Angeles operators themselves. It is entirely their fault that such a disgraceful farce has been allowed to exist for so long a time, the practical result being to reduce their own salaries, and to fill the city up with incompetents. There are altogether too many operators in this city who were doormen or janitors, and after spending a few hours in the operating room went to the city hall to "see" somebody, slip in their five dollars and get a license, after which they promptly secured a position as "operator" at ten dollars a week, working twelve hours a day. If the good men were to quit, or go on a strike, you can imagine how effective it would be if, out of the five hundred licensed operators, probably fifty per cent. will work ten and twelve hours a day, seven days a week, for ten dollars. You therefore see that the really good men are afraid to make a kick for fear of losing their jobs or getting their salaries cut. The union scale is twenty-one dollars per week, with thirty-seven and a half cents per hour for relief, but I only know personally of three men getting the scale, and as for the thirty-seven and a half cents an hour for relief—why it is a joke. My opinion is that the Los Angeles Union could frame up a good strong complaint as regards the slipshod methods of examining operators, the same to be presented to the city council or mayor with a petition asking relief, even if they have to pay for a machine and equipment and make the city a present of it. It seems to me it would be a good investment, provided Mr. City Electrician Monahan can be compelled to, or will of his own volition, arrange for a really effective, legitimate examination, granting license only to really competent operators. We would then have good positions, good hours, good pay and a decent city for operators to work in. I myself would cheerfully donate five dollars to the city for the purchase of a machine, and will send the money promptly at any time there is enough subscribed to get an outfit; or if Local Union 150 wants the five dollars as a starter, should they write to Mr. Jack Davis, care of the Projection Department, I will at once send the money to Local 150. Jack Davis is not my name, but I don't care to be known in the matter. The license certificate now has a space printed for the operator's signature.

I would not by any manner of means approve of Los Angeles operators presenting a machine to the city. It is a sufficient outrage to be held up five dollars for an examination. I have no criticism to make on a city exacting an examination fee sufficient to cover the actual expenses of examination, but anything beyond that is simply taking something for nothing. The city has the undoubted right to determine the competency of moving picture operators, but it has no right to tax any man for the privelege of earning his daily bread by following his chosen calling. Chicago at one time charged, if I recollect rightly, ten dollars for a license. Chicago might as well have sent its chief of police out with a gun to hold up every operator in the city for a ten dollar bill. It was nothing more or less than highway robbery under another name. If the conditions in Los Angeles are as set forth, they most emphatically do not reflect credit on the theater managers of that beautiful city. Certainly no man of intelligence can expect to put on a creditable show with a ten dollar a week operator. It is indeed a strange thing that any man will invest money in a theater, the income of which depends wholly upon from what comes from the operating room, and then put a ten dollar a week man, or even a fifteen dollar a week man in charge of projection. The intimation in the letters is that this man "Monahan" is pursuing very questionable methods in the examination of operators—in fact is willing to pass anybody who has the necessary five dollars. Surely Los Angeles cannot officially countenance any such little cheap skin game as this. Such a proposition would be about as respectable as our old friend, the "Shell Game" or as the "Three Card Monte," except that with those games only the victim gets bitten; whereas the licensing of incompetents injures everybody, the patrons in Los Angeles theater included. "Jack Davis" sends his real name. He is not a new man in Los Angeles and he undoubtedly knows the conditions in that city.

More Light Trouble.

Princeton, Ill., writes:

> Have 110 volts, 60 cycle current here. Project a 13 foot picture at 94 feet, on gold fibre screen. Have two machines hitched to one compensarc (Ft. Wayne). Now on my old exhibition model one pin Edison machine, I use a Gundlach half size moving picture lens, but on the Motiograph I use the lens furnished with the machine and stamped Enterprise Optical Co. Both lenses are marked 6½ e. f., yet I cannot interchange them, as they will not focus; for obvious reasons I cannot change the position of the machines. There is no comparison of results. The Edison with the Gundlach lens gives a much better picture, but I cannot make myself believe it all lies in the lens. I use only 7½ and one 9¼ condenser with the 9¼ in front. There is very little, if any ghost. I cannot imagine why my Motiograph machine gives such a dark picture, and the other such a bright one. The condensers and lenses are cleaned daily and lugs changed often; connections O. K. It is up to you; as it has gotten my goat. Both machines have inside shutters.

I don't quite understand what you mean by not being able to "exchange lenses, as they will not focus," and that it is obviously impossible to change the position of the machines. Why should you wish to do either one of these things? Like yourself, I don't know why the condition you describe is present, since the Motiograph inside shutter cuts a somewhat less percentage of light than does the Edison Exhibition Model shutter. You can readily test this matter by removing both lenses and the front plate of the Motiograph machine. Open the machine gate and, without any film in, hold first one lens and then the other in position with your hand, so that the light is focused sharply on the screen. You can thus determine whether the half size lens is or is not giving you more light than the Motiograph quarter size. If you find there really is a perceptible difference, I would surely like to be informed of that fact, but I think you will not. It is possible that the asbestos leads to your Motiograph machine are old, or are No. 8, the Edison leads being No. 6, or in better condition. This would account for a considerable cutting down of the light. It is also possible that the carbons of your Motiograph lamp are not making good electrical contact with the metal, both lenses being 6½, clean and in good condition. I see no other reason for such a condition, except possibly differences in the quality of condensers. You might have perfectly clear white condenser lenses on the Edison, and a badly discolored lens (green, amber or purple) in the Motiograph, which would account for a considerable difference in light effect. I assume that the Motiograph has the regulation Motiograph inside shutter. A wider shutter would cut more light.

CINES AND ECLIPSE PHOTOPLAYS.

George Kleine's schedule of releases this week makes a program of interesting and pleasing variety. Two absorbing dramas of widely divergent theme and character and both splendidly staged and grippingly portrayed.

The first, "A Roman's Conversion," by the Eclipse Company, as the title suggests, is laid in the period of the early days of Christianity and depicts with vividness and realism the sufferings of the early martyrs and their oppression by the luxurious pleasure-loving and mythological god-worshipping Romans.

The second, "Trailing the Counterfeiters," by the Cines Company, is in the nature of a melodrama and is replete with exciting scenes and thrilling situations with Anthony Novelli and Miss Cattaneo in the leading roles, supported by a specially selected company of Cines players.

A comedy is also on the list and in the Cines farce, "The Wonder Powders," the Cines funny man, George Gambard, as Mr. Stout, unfortunate papa of Leah, the lazy girl, portrays in highly laughable fashion the hard luck which befalls a loving father, who vainly attempts to cure his willful daughter of laziness.

An industrial subject by Cines and two scenics round out a very complete and admirable program to select from. "Artistic Glass Work" shows us clearly and very entertainingly the processes involved in blowing glass into the various delicate and beautiful vases and objects of art with which we delight to ornament our homes.

Magnificent panoramic views of Palermo, Sicily, its bay and surroundings as seen from the top of Mount Pellegrino, are shown in the Cines travel subject, "A Glimpse of Sicily."

Eclipse also shows on the same reel with "A Roman's Conversion," a picturesque and delightful series of views, typical of English rural life and of what may be seen on a jaunt through the romantic and historic "Derbyshire Dales" of England.

DO YOU KNOW THESE MEN?

The Silver-Voiced Tenor

The Famous Cartoonist

FRED WALLACE AND DOUGLAS ARTHUR

Monarchs of Refined Comedy

Address: NEW YORK CLIPPER.

The above cut is a reproduction of a "professional card" that antedates the motion picture business by a couple of years. It was still the Edison Kinetoscope, the nickel-in-the-slot machine, when the promising young team of Wallace and Douglas was formed up. Wallace thought he could sing and Douglas knew he could do as good cartoon work as some of the others who later on got into the motion picture game and went clear to the top. It looked like an easy proposition. Wallace would chant the dulcet lay while Douglas would make quick charcoal sketches and at the end of the week a sizable piece of coin would result. At that time the best houses were paying as high as "$75 double" and that meant $37.50 apiece less the agent's commission and railroad expenses. Then the team split. Douglas got a chance to manage one of the new touring moving picture shows, The Eidoloscope, and Wallace decided to turn to musical comedy. He found those who were willing to aid and abet him, and in due course he got his name in large letters on the show bills and established a name for himself as a comedian.

Now they are at opposite ends of the continent and they are both in pictures. Douglas is doing comedy direction for Lubin and Wallace is directing comedies for the Keystone. But in order to know them rightly you must add their "real" names to their stage cognomens. On the left, Fred Wallace Mace, of Keystone and Los Angeles. On the right Arthur Douglas Hotaling, of Lubin's and Philadelphia. "Both members of this club."

SPANUTH SECURES JAPANESE PICTURES.

H. A. Spanuth, of the General Film Publicity and Sales Company, has secured the American agency for the Mikado and Y-O pictures made by the famous Japanese Film Company. These pictures are made in Japan with Japanese actors playing the parts in plays written by Japanese photoplaywrights. The first picture to be shown will, in all probability, be the picturesque ceremonial funeral of the late Mikado.

Mr. Spanuth has also secured for his company the American agency for Aquilla, Welt, Empire and B. & C. pictures. Release dates for these pictures will be announced later.

CORBETT DOUBLES UP.

Bernard M. Corbett, traveling salesman for the Edison machine, announces that he has become tired of a bachelor's life of single blessedness and will take unto himself a wife. October 30 is the date set for the wedding and Barney is correspondingly happy. The young woman who has condescended to accept Mr. Corbett for better or worse is Miss Violet Chapman, of Rowley, Mass., who has been connected with the General Film Company since the Boston Branch was installed. She is well known and highly respected by everyone connected with the picture trade in New England.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD extends congratulations to Mr. Corbett upon his wise decision and joins his many friends in hoping that nothing may happen to thwart his plans between now and October 30.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

CHILDREN Society agents were spending money again on picture shows in Brooklyn the past week and arrests were made at three different places on charges of admitting children ranging from eleven to fourteen years of age. The owners of two places paid a fine of $50 each and a young woman who sold tickets at the third place was fined $25. In the same court the proprietor of a bowling alley was fined $10 for allowing small boys to play in his place. From this it would seem the court considered the picture exhibitors guilty of the graver offense and gave them the worst end of the penalizing. It is gratifying to know, however, that the sentiments against the pictures which formerly aroused so many justifiable protests on the part of those engaged in the picture business are rapidly diminishing and also that arrests of proprietors and employes of the houses are less frequent. For the interest of the business in general the exhibitors should abide strictly with all regulations made by the authorities. It must be conceded that in some cases the theater managers become unconscious offenders by reason of connivance of adults on the outside, but it is also true that, for the sake of getting a few stray dimes or half dimes, some exhibitors will take a chance. They get away with it quite frequently, too, but not often enough to counterbalance a fine of twenty-five or fifty dollars.

An exhibitor who was penalized recently complained bitterly of what he thought was a great injustice, because when he admitted the children involved in his case they were accompanied by guardians who subsequently left the children in the theater. He declared that his questions to the accompanying adults as to guardianship were answered in the affirmative and he had upheld the law. Under such circumstances it does seem a hardship, but responsibility does not end when the children enter the place. Vigilance is required on the inside as well. I have heard many exhibitors say it is impossible to keep track of the children after they get inside. Nevertheless, it appears that in the majority of cases the officers making arrests pick up the unaccompanied children in the theaters. It is the duty of the ushers and other inside employes to watch for such cases and if they fail the proprietors must take the consequences when society agents walk in and find violations.

* * *

The appeal to exhibitors to try and make arrests a thing of the past is not a new one, nor is it as necessary as it has been, but it should nevertheless receive strict attention in order that ammunition for argument may be taken from the inveterate enemies of the picture business who are ever on the alert for material to renew their harangues about the pictures being a menace to the morality of children. Most of these people have never been in a picture theater and are so narrow minded that they cannot be induced to enter one. They are immovable in their views and will neither admit nor concede anything. Every period of a few months they go over the public records and prepare a list of statistics showing the number of arrests made and use them to bolster their arguments in newspaper articles and addresses before their respective organizations. If they were just and honest in these operations complaint could not be made. They are not. They ingeniously take some isolated case in which a grave charge has been made and present their arguments in such a manner as to convey to the public mind an impression that children are unsafe in picture shows. The arguments being general they naturally and most unjustly reflect on the motion picture business as a whole.

So, Mr. Exhibitor, steer clear of arrests, no matter how trivial the character of the complaint, and do not make your fellow exhibitors innocent victims of these adroit falsifiers.

In a small town not many miles from this city, one day last week, a church worker accosted a member of his congregation and, in effect, took her to task for having taken her children to a picture theater the night before. He intimated that the parent could do better by inculcating upon the minds of the children the thought of how much better it would be to give the nickel or dime to church work than wasting it on worldly entertainment. The woman had some decided opinions on the matter and it was agreed by those who heard the argument that she more than held her own. The writer was one of the listeners. Her argument, briefly, was that, her husband being a railroader, she was left alone at nights with the children. Her domestic duties kept her busy during the day, but at night there were hours of lonesomeness and she selected the pictures to relieve herself and her children of the monotony. "You get our regular contributions," she said to the church man," so the shows do not deprive you of them, and you have no complaint on that score. I find the entertainments clean and wholesome, and I cannot be rightfully censured for taking my children there. Now, why do you chide me? I sincerely hope you do not wish I should give all my spare money to your work, even to depriving the children and myself of the pleasure I get from the innocent pastime for an insignificant outlay. I cannot frequently visit friends, nor can they always visit me. Our town is small and affords but few attractions to help take away the awful sting in the realization of being alone. I admire you and your work; but at the same time I must say that the moving pictures have brought both pleasure and instruction to me and mine, so you will please consider the question decided between us, for the present at least."

It has often been said that even in places where motion picture shows are numerous there were many people who had never seen an exhibition of the pictures. The assertion was more than well founded up to a few years ago, since which time thousands of the better class of people have become enthusiastic converts to the popular entertainment. This conversion has become so pronounced one is disposed to doubt that the assertion still holds good, but it does, nevertheless. A striking confirmation was found the other day. A salesman in a large house in this city was selling goods to a man whom he knew was engaged in the moving picture business, and to the astonishment of the latter the salesman asked, "What are these moving pictures, anyway?" The customer answered the question. "Well," said the salesman, "would you believe it? I have never seen an exhibition. I have never seen one picture, although I have lived here since they first came out. Why not? I'll tell you. I never bothered reading about them and have always had the notion that they were simply the old style of stationary picture looked at through magnifying glasses fixed in a cabinet, only on a very large scale. I must take a look at them and be in the swim."

So, Mr. Pictureman, you were mistaken when you thought that only those who will not go to see your exhibitions had been enrolled as enthusiastic patrons. There are thousands outside the box office awaiting education, as it were. They have never become interested. False ideas as to what the pictures are have made them indifferent. Some still think that picture shows are only for children and the only reason adults attend them is to escort the little one. An old man was heard saying the other day that he wouldn't see anything new in them because he saw the same thing years ago. "Yes," he said, "I know what they are. Pictures on a canvas—moving pictures. Yes, I know. Why, bless your soul, they're as old as the hills. They used to have the great Chicago fire like that. We used to call it a panorama." Get away, Mr. Exhibitor, there are many outside the fence. Advertise and gather in the dimes that await information and a coaxing.

HOMESTEAD MILLS IN ECLAIR PICTURE.

The two reel feature habit can well be said to have arrived. For the Eclair Company announce another for October 17th entitled "Caprices of Fortune." This is another fruit of Mr. Arnaud's extended trip with the Eclair stock company and contains many scenes from various parts of the East. The steel mills of Homestead play an important part in the development of the story. Variety of locale is abundant for the story moves throughout the entire United States and into Mexico with a suggestion of Honduras by way of a prize winning lottery ticket. More will be told in later issue.

AMERICAN FILM COMPANY INSTALLS LIGHTING SYSTEM.

The laboratories and studios of the American Film Company are being equipped with what is known as the best light equipment extant. The studio has a series of lights furnishing an aggregate of one hundred thousand candle power. This is particularly designed to enable them to produce special lighting effects, which will be noticed in some of the forthcoming releases. They employ a large motor generator to convert the alternating current into a direct current and the feed terminals outside of the building together with the accoutrements inside the premises give the appearance of quite a power plant. The laboratories are equipped with lighting system for general requirements, of course, but in addition the printing room is furnished with a series of storage batteries furnishing a steady and unwavering light that is largely accountable for the even lighting so noticeable in their work. These storage batteries are automatically recharged so that no time is lost nor the regular process of work interfered with.

"The Bridal Room" (Imp).

By G. F. Blaisdell.

IN this strong drama King Baggot has great opportunity. He accepts it. Violet Horner lends efficient support. There are demands aplenty for emotional acting on the part of both these leaders of the Imp forces. The manner in which they acquit themselves will gratify the many friends they now possess and will create for them new ones. A half-dozen characters compose the cast of "The Bridal Room." There is in this limited number a distinct advantage in so far that it tends to the avoidance of confusion and fastens the interest of the spectator on a small group.

As the writer saw this picture thrown on the screen the thought occurred to him how easily the film could have been extended to a double reel. Speaking of this later to William Robert Daly, the producer, he was informed that 650 feet of good stuff had been cut out of the picture to keep it within the orthodox length. Mr. Daly has a role in this drama—a short one—that of a teamster, but nevertheless he lends "ginger" to the action and contributes realism to the piece. James Kirkwood has the unpopular role of the successful rival who becomes the dissolute husband. The mother of Tom Walsh, the character taken by Mr. Baggot, is Mrs. Ellen Walker. The work of the entire cast is uniformly excellent.

Tom Walsh is in love with Violet, a girl employed in an office. As the story opens Tom meets her and escorts her to her home. At the gate he puts a ring on the engagement finger, and seals the compact with a kiss. Tom goes home and, with his mother, takes up the work the two have been secretly pursuing—the preparation of two rooms against the day when the bride shall be brought to her new home. The living room is ornamented with statuary, with pictures, and with new furniture. The bridal room adjoining also is decorated. One of the chief features is a large portrait of Tom's fiancee, conspicuously placed. A friend calls on Tom and notes the changes in the household arrangements. Tom produces a bottle of wine, the friend is informed of the impending event, and the three drink to the happiness of the couple.

Tom, unknown, has a rival. The rival is better situated in a worldly way. Violet is impressed and perhaps dazzled by the possibilities of luxury in a union with James. Following an automobile ride she writes a note to Tom. James has won.

A messenger brings Tom a letter. He recognizes the writing of Violet and nervously opens the envelope. In horror he hands the note to his mother, who with the visiting friend, makes feeble efforts at consolation. As the latter depaits the grief of Tom turns to rage. He seizes a chair and swings it on the statuary. He smashes the centre table and chairs. He takes from the wall the photograph of Violet and is about to break it when his mother is at last able to stop him. He is bent on destroying the furniture in the bridal room, but finally relents. Instead he takes the photograph and hangs it on the wall of the chamber no longer the bride's. Then he declares he will not open the room until Violet returns to him. He falls on the bed and sobs. Relieved, he goes to the window and closes the shutters. He locks the window and then the room, and places the key over the door.

Five years elapse. James has not prospered. He has gone down hill fast—and now is at the foot. We see him as he empties a flask. His wife is bending over a washtub. The bloom of youth is gone. Violet understands the significance of the empty bottle and goes to the shelf, takes her few pennies and puts them in her waist. The husband in a rage goes out.

As the fortunes of James have declined those of Tom have increased. He is a prosperous quarryman. He still lives in the old homestead. Walking through his quarry, he detects a teamster abusing a horse. He reprimands the man, and an argument ensues. The employe is discharged. The teamster draws a knife and assails Tom, who grapples with him and takes away the knife.

Violet, standing in the doorway of a tumbledown tenement, sees the teamster enter. The wrath plainly indicated in his face causes her to follow him. She sees the discharged employe borrow from her husband a pistol and overhears him threatening the life of Tom. As the teamster goes out Violet slips out after him. She goes straight to the old homestead. Weakened by privation, she cannot move fast. Several times she nearly falls, but struggles on. As she nears the gate she sees Tom just about to enter. A flash shows the teamster hiding in the bushes back of Tom's home. Tom hears a shot and turns to see Violet fall. He picks her up and carries her into the house. As he lays her down he recognizes her in spite of the great change. He is horrified and shocked at the transformation and by the surrounding circumstances. He sends for a doctor and leans over Violet and pats her hands.

Slowly Tom rises to his feet and goes to the door of the bridal room. He reaches up and takes down the key and unlocks the door. Violet has returned at last. Tom goes to the window and throws back the shutters. He takes the great framed photograph of Violet from the wall and props it against the footboard of the bed. He shakes from the shams and spread the accumulated dust of five years. Tenderly he lifts Violet and brings her into the bridal room and places her on the bed. The death pallor is on Violet's face. Tom stands by the side of the bed and gazes in dumb, mystified fashion at the woman who had so cruelly jilted him.

Scene from "The Bridal Room" (Imp).

He betrays no feeling of anger. He is all pity for the unfortunate woman who chose so unwisely. Violet shows signs of consciousness. Tom kneels by the bed and takes her head in his arms. He talks to her. She recognizes him and for a moment faintly responds. The mother is standing by, weeping. Violet passes away.

The murderer is arrested.

GEORGE NICHOLLS LEAVES GEM CO.

Producer George Nicholls has tendered his resignation to the Gem Moving Picture Company, of New York. Mr. Nicholls has been connected with the motion picture business for the past five years. He began with the original Biograph stock company as an actor. Two years ago he went to the Thanhouser Co., as producer, where he continued until the spring of this year, when he was engaged by the Gem Company. Mr. Nicholl's specialty is military pictures on a large scale. For the Thanhouser Company he produced a number of two and three-reel pictures, including "She," "David Copperfield," "Nicholas Nickelby," "East Lynne," etc. "Under Two Flags," recently done by the Gem Company, was also produced by him. At the present time there are several large picture-making firms flirting with George for his services.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"WHEN UNCLE SAM WAS YOUNG" (Universal Bison).

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company will release on October 5, a two reel Bison that will rank with its immediate predecessor—"At Old Fort Dearborn"—in the series of historical pictures being produced by Frank E. Montgomery. There is one scene alone that for dramatic quality, for vividness and for realism will easily carry the picture. The film, however, has many good scenes, some of them big ones. The really great picture is the representation of the Boston tea party, the incident prior to the Revolution that so inflamed the partisans of George III, and so roused the spirit of rebellion in the Colonists. One of the notable features of this scene is the employment of Indians for the looting of the ship. As a matter of historical fact, the destruction of the tea was accomplished by Colonists disguised as Mohawk Indians. We have seen on the screen only too many times the use of white men thinly disguised as original Americans. It is a peculiarly appropriate turning of the tables that here the genuine son of the forest should be employed to represent the disguised white men who on that December night of 1773 started a tempest, but certainly not in a small teapot.

Scene from "When Uncle Sam Was Young" (Universal-Bison).

A great ship, one of the fast fading type of full-riggers, is employed, and the representation of the raid is made from three angles. One is from the wharf, where the assault begins with the Indians climbing aboard. Another is on the deck of the great vessel, showing the confusion and turmoil as the invaders wrought destruction on the cargo. The third and notable is of the broadside of the ship, showing the boxes coming over the side and the crew diving to the waters of the harbor from the high freeboard.

Another picture that is as unique as it is effective is where Virginia Chester, as Constance Delemere, watches through a telescope the Battle of Bunker Hill. The field of the glass covers but a small part of the battleground, but the illusion is well carried out.

Mona Darkfeather has much to do in the role of Osano, the wife of a British spy. The little Indian woman brings to the portrayal of her part the high intelligence she displays in all of her work. She has a keen dramatic instinct. Undoubtedly the knowledge that she really is what she portrays—the Indian—greatly heightens interest in watching her.

There are many fine scenes and incidents in the two reels and some excellent outdoor photography. One of the historical events that perhaps will make strong appeal to an audience is the presentation of Betsy Ross making the first American flag. Another is the announcement that the Declaration of Independence has been signed.

"MAX FIGHTS A DUEL" (C. G. P. C.).

When the name Max appears on the screen the audience gives a sigh of delight, expecting something good. They will not be disappointed in "Max Fights a Duel," the C. G. P. C. release of October 15th, for the celebrated comedian is at his best in a story of this kind. Calling upon his bride-to-be one day, Max is staggered by her demand that he prove his bravery by fighting a duel. Max starts, rather fearfully, on a quest for an opponent. Of course, he wants one whom he can defeat, as it would not do for him to meet an adversary more accomplished with the foils. His adventures are side-splitting for the persons he meets whom he has reason to believe he can defeat refuses to be insulted. Finally he secures a match and his intended bride and her family are on the ground to witness the encounter. Max easily vanquishes his opponent to the delight of the witnesses and receives a kiss from his fiancee. His popularity is short lived, however, for the defeated contestant insists that Max keep to his contract and pay him the regular rate for a fencing master's lesson.

On the same reel, "The Valley of Chevreuse and the Vaux de Cerney." A tastefully colored travel film showing the charming scenes in one of the environs of Paris.

MORE LIGHT ON NEW YORK-UNIVERSAL FIGHT.

Considerable publicity has been turned loose on the exhibitor on the strength of the decision by Justice Delany, dismissing a petition for an injunction presented by the New York Motion Picture Company asking that the Universal Film Manufacturing Company be restrained from obstructing the business of the petitioner. Concerning the case the New York Motion Picture Company makes this explanation:

"An injunction has been in force against the Universal Company for upwards of six weeks, and the decision of the court was to the effect that it did not feel reasonably certain that the New York Motion Picture Company had asked for the proper relief in that action, and could not continue the injunction BEFORE THE FINAL HEARING. This decision constitutes the opinion of one judge, and the New York Motion Picture Company will promptly appeal to the Appellate Division, where it will seek to have the higher court reverse the decision of the lower court.

"This action has no direct bearing upon the general merits of the question whether or not the Universal Company can interfere with the business of the New York Motion Picture Company, but only whether or not the New York Motion Picture Company can restrain the Universal Company from commencing any further law suits."

CAPRICES OF FORTUNE (Eclair).

A two-reel feature picture with the above title is for release by the Eclair people on October 17. It is a dramatic love story of East and West, and full of good action. It deals with the adventures of a young Easterner in search of fortune and love. He finds both, but not as he expected. Mr. Lamar Johnstone plays the lead with his usual imagination and intelligence, and is ably supported by Miss Goodstadt. Her face is new to the writer, but her work in this picture makes him want to see more of it. The story is clear and interesting throughout. The sets, photography and all the mechanical work are of very high order.

Scene from "Caprices of Fortune" (Eclair).

The first episode opens on a piazza of wealthy people in the East. Mrs. Stewart plays the mother; Barbara Tennant, the daughter; Mr. Johnstone, the daughter's lover, and Miss Goodstadt, the mother's paid companion, secretly in love with the young man. The characters are quickly moved so as to state the situation and we watch the man, starting out to seek his fortune. He still hopes to win the girl, but we, the spectators, know that he wont. A series of fine, interesting scenes follow. The first are in Pittsburg, where the hero applies for work, and is refused. He is soon in the same status with tramps and is bound for the Southwest, where he becomes a luckless gold-seeker. His experience is not without its temptations and the influences of the girl, who doesn't love him, is cleverly suggested by a very well-made substitution. For an instant, she stands in place of the Mexican dance hall girl, whom he had just kissed. We then follow him through the exciting scenes of an Indian raid to his homecoming. This is brought about dramatically, directly through the love of the other girl, who has found a lottery ticket left by the man and has merely written to notify him of his fortune. The coming together of these two human hearts make the picture's climax and happy ending in a beautiful scene.

As artistic pictures, several of the scenes stand out from the others, even though all are above the average. Perhaps the most notable is the Mexican cabaret scene, in which we find several graceful and very pleasing dances. In this scene, appear a number of especially engaged dancers, led by Mlle. Lilly Lenore, the famous European premiere.

"'ALKALI' IKE STUNG" (Essanay).

This is one of the greatest [illegible] famous Western comedy series, with Augustus Carney in his ever popular role of "Alkali" Ike. The story is—well [illegible] is! Judge for yourself.

This time "Alkali" Ike is dissatisfied with his boarding house, and, when the buxom Soffie, a two hundred pound widow, arrives in town, buys out Tony's place, and nails up cards announcing that it will be opened on the following Tuesday as a first-class boarding house, "Alkali" is the first to see it, rushes back and begins to lay plans for switching at once. The following Tuesday morning "Alkali" is found hard at work stuffing everything he possesses into a big barrel. Clothes, chaps, old boots, the flour bin, bottles of good booze and other things too numerous to mention are piled into the barrel while the dust flies in clouds. Meanwhile, all the other boys in town, with their belongings on their backs, meet before the door of the new boarding house and clamor for admission. One by one Soffie admits them, and, when "Alkali" finally takes leave of his irate landlady and arrives at the new place, he finds the rooms all gone and is refused shelter for the night. Mad as a hornet he hangs around and, after supper, sees Soffie and the boys in the parlor singing and having a hilarious time. Determined to win her with music, "Alkali" secures his trusty banjo and serenades outside her window, but gets a pail of water deluged over him for his pains. Wet and mad he tramps back to his old place, but is met by his former landlady who throws him out bodily and deposits his belongings in the water barrel. Realizing that the world is [illegible] Alkali retreats to the sanctity of the stable and, with his saddle for a pillow and a prayer in his heart that the horse won't tramp on him, finds rest at last.

Bully, isn't it? And the manner in which it is portrayed throughout leaves nothing to be desired in the way of good old-fashioned laughs. Margaret Joslin, in her popular role of the buxom Soffie, is funnier than ever, and of course Augustus Carney will make you hold your aching ribs while the tears of merriment course down your cheeks. Forget not the release date—Tuesday, October 8th.

WORLD'S STARS IN FEATURE PICTURES.

In the past two years exhibitors and the public have been taught to demand feature films of exceptional merit—features that would have more than extra length to their credit. To supply this demand is the purpose of the Famous Players' Film Co., who, in the short time that they have been in existence, have established an enviable reputation with their initial release of "Queen Elizabeth," with Sarah Bernhardt in the leading role.

This wonderful production, which was reviewed in a previous issue of the Moving Picture World, has met with unprecedented success wherever it has been exhibited. However, one picture is not sufficient to satisfy the cravings of the public for extraordinary films, therefore the Famous Players' Film Co., of which Mr. Daniel Frohman is the managing director, has made arrangements to produce in their spacious modern studio, located on 7th Avenue, in the heart of the theatrical district, some of the largest subjects ever attempted in motion pictures, with the world's greatest stars portraying the leading roles. These subjects will be handled on the state right plan. The people who buy territory for the Bernhardt "Queen Elizabeth" films shall have first call on the future productions of this company.

"ALKALI IKE" IN CHICAGO.

A lone, diminutive figure, garbed in Western "chaps," a Western sombrero and general Western air, was standing on Michigan Avenue, Chicago, gazing with puzzled face at the enormous skyscrapers towering above him.

"Jumpin' ring-tailed galoots!" muttered the lone figure, "but this air town has sure changed marvelous since I was here last. Gosh, look at that shack! Must be mor'n uh mile high!"

Yes, you've guessed the identity of the lone figure. It was Augustus Carney, famous the world over for his character of "Alkali Ike" in the popular Western comedies of the Essanay Western Stock Company. "Alkali" had come back to

"Alkali Ike" Meets an Old Friend in Chicago.

Chicago, after an absence of three years, and his amazement at the growth of the city was genuine. His experiences began the moment he got aboard the train away out in California. Hardly had he found a comfortable seat to enjoy a quiet smoke and magazine when a heavy hand fell upon his shoulder and a deep, jovial voice boomed out: "Well, well, well! If it isn't 'Alkali Ike!'" A San Francisco business man and photoplay fan had recognized his favorite comedian.

With the girls "Alkali" was a real "hit." Scores of them through the train recognized him. He was kept busy with introductions, and was forced to eat so much sweet stuff with them that a doctor was necessary. "Alkali" found that he even could not stretch his cramped pedal extremities at various stops. Invariably he was discovered by some film bug and had to escape back to his compartment to avoid being surrounded and overwhelmed.

Arriving in Chicago he was making his way through the crowded entrance of the immense station when an old friend, accompanied by her daughter, rushed up and gave him a royal welcome. Admiring throngs followed him up State Street. Arriving at the Orpheum Theater, one of the biggest photoplay houses in Chicago, "Alkali" held a public reception. Doffing his sombrero to the big framed lithographed posters of G. M. Anderson, world famous as "Broncho Billy," and his director in the Essanay Western Company, "Alkali" mounted a stand and addressed the cheering crowd. Men, women, and children, who had watched him on the screen so long, fought for a chance to wring his hand and express their admiration. Down under the elevated structure on Lake Street, "Alkali" stood bewildered by the thundering roar overhead and the surge of traffic around him. Three years in the wilds, surrounded by the quiet of the rolling plains and rugged hills, caused a wave of amazement, almost fear, to sweep over him at the riot of sound and noise all about. At State and Madison Streets, "Alkali" found a staunch friend and admirer in one of Chicago's "finest," a mounted policeman, who saw that he was well taken care of. Messenger boys, merchants and people of all trades knew and welcomed him. Aboard one of the big sight-seeing autos "Alkali" viewed the growth of the Windy City, and made new friends all along the route.

Picked up at last by Essanay's touring car "Alkali" was conveyed out to the big studio on Argyle Street, where he is now being featured in a series of comedies that are funny—we need say no more. 'Nuff sed! "Alkali" in a picture guarantees its worth in real humor.

THANHOUSER'S FIRST CHARLES READE STORY.

Edwin Thanhouser and C. J. Hite announce that they have viewed a satisfactory first print of "Put Yourself in His Place," their first Charles Reade story, and that the subject, which is in two reels, will be released Tuesday, October 29th. In the cast are William Garwood as Henry Little, Marguerite Snow as Grace Garden, William Russell as Squire Raby, Jean Darnell as Edith, the squire's sister, and David Thompson, as the villainous Coventry. The film is reported to closely follow the story, which mainly dealt with the efforts of Coventry to cheat Henry Little of Grace Garden's love. Coventry adopts various devious means to accomplish this, including the intercepting of letters from Henry to his sweetheart, but Grace, Henry and Dan Cupid slowly but surely put them to rout. While his plans prove successful, though he complicates the love affair so effectively that the film is always interesting—and Coventry always well hated.

There are some scenes in the subject that reach the high tide mark in human interest. There is the storm episode—and the storm is well taken—wherein Grace and Coventry are driven to seek refuge in Henry's forge in the woods. This forge is in a deserted church and is Henry's chiefest secret—as he is plying his trade in defiance of a union whose members harassed him. Were they to know his hiding place, they would demolish it—and Coventry knows this. And as you watch his features, you know he will tell the workingmen everything. So instinctively you fear for Henry. And then the jealous workmen come. They break down the door and proceed to "rush" the old church. But Henry, single-handed, is equal to the emergency. He flings the red-hot forge coals at the invaders and holds them off until help arrives.

But Henry is not always on the defensive, striving hard to ward off Coventry's attacks. He plays "in hard luck" just long enough to give zest to the story and great strength to the "twist" that comes in it later. After aforesaid twist, Henry and Grace win handily and the audience goes home happy.

O'SULLIVAN AGAIN PRODUCING "BEDELIA."

Director Anthony O'Sullivan has again taken up the "Bedelia" series of comedies, which were very popular among the Reliance Company's list of regular releases. When Mr. O'Sullivan was made a director he was obliged to drop "Bedelia" to attend to the regular dramatic productions. He has now made arrangements to revive the former comedy series, both directing the production and appearing in them in his original character of "Bedelia." Tony is one of the best portrayers of Irish servant girl characters in America. For years he toured the United States and Great Britain, playing the name part in the musical comedy, "Mrs. B. O'Shaughnessey." He later scored heavily in "The Doings of Mrs. Dooley." The first installment of the new "Bedelia" series will be a scream entitled "Bedelia and the Newlyweds."

PAPIERS BUILDING HANDSOME THEATER.

The new George Street Theater at George and Patterson Streets, New Brunswick, N. J., which is being built by Messrs. Papier Brothers, of Trenton, N. J., is nearing completion. It is said that this house will be the finest exclusive moving picture theater in the state of New Jersey. Messrs. Papier Brothers are also the managers and proprietors of six other moving picture theaters throughout the state of New Jersey.

CORRESPONDENCE

NEW ENGLAND.

A NEW theater is to be erected on Moody Street, Waltham, Mass. The house will have a seating capacity of about 1,000, and will be devoted to vaudeville and pictures.

Manager Greenburg opened his Gem Theater, East Boston, Mass., on September 2d. Mutual service and vaudeville will form the bills at the Gem, which is a cosy little theater.

The New Washington Theater, Boston, is now a 5-cent house, having reduced its admission fee from ten cents. There is nothing the matter with the theater, except that the location, on Washington Street, is just a wee bit off of the beaten path. This fact coupled with the strong opposition offered by Gordon's Olympia and the Globe Theater, tells the story.

Labor Day saw the opening of the Royal Theater of Worcester, Mass. The Royal is the new S. Z. Poli Theater, and is playing to vaudeville and pictures. The Royal has been called the second largest theater in New England. Mr. Poli has appointed Mr. J. C. Criddle as manager of his new house.

Work is now well under way at the new Bijou Theater, Springfield, Mass., which is being built for Mr. George A. Whitney. The new Bijou is being erected on the site now occupied by the old Bijou, but it also takes in the adjoining property. The new house is being built for the very good reason that the present theater loses money—because it cannot accommodate the crowds! Manager Knight has certainly proved himself a manager worthy of the name, and has forced the owners to enlarge once before. The present seating capacity of the Bijou is 950, although it originally held only 250. The new theater, which is to be a model house in every way, will easily handle 3,000 people.

After a season devoted to stock company attractions, the Keith Theater, Providence, R. I., returned to the old policy of vaudeville and pictures on Labor Day. A big audience turned out to greet this change of program.

The Empire Theater of Providence, R. I., has changed its policy, and is now giving stock company attractions. Should the change not prove a money-maker, the Empire will revert to vaudeville and pictures.

A professional matinee of the Durbar in Kinemacolor was given on Thursday, September 5, to accommodate the many professional players in Boston who have asked to see the wonders of moving pictures in natural colors. Tremont Temple was crowded on that afternoon, and the pictures were received with much enthusiasm. The Kinemacolor pictures are breaking all records for motography in the Hub, and business is as good at this writing as it was several months ago, at the first performance.

Mr. Walter Nickerson, manager of Ocean Hall Theater, Harwichport, Mass., was in Boston recently, looking things over. Mr. Nickerson has connected with the Universal service, which seems to please his patrons mightily.

Colonel Charles Corson, manager of the City Opera House, Dover, N. H., is back again at his duties, after a trip to Denver, Colo., where he attended the meeting of the Supreme Lodge, K. of P.

Mr. Charles Sheafe, owner and manager of the Scenic Theater, Revere Beach, Mass., closed his house on Sunday, September 8. "A very good season" was Mr. Sheafe's answer to the question as to how business had been.

The People's Theater Company, a new corporation in New Haven, Conn., states that a string of theaters, to be devoted to vaudeville and pictures, will soon be built in and near New Haven.

The Bijou Theater, Ware, Mass., opened for the season on Labor Day. The Bijou will be handled by R. F. Cook, a well known theatrical man. Three shows will be given daily, with vaudeville and pictures as the program.

Labor Day saw the opening of the Plaza Theater, Northampton, Mass., with a large program of vaudeville and pictures. The Plaza is owned by the Goldstein Bros. Amusement Company, and the house is managed by Mr. F. E. Blawchean. Two shows daily are given.

Poli's Theater, New Haven, Conn., is now in charge of Manager Ollie Edwards, who had formerly been in charge of the Poli house in Hartford, Conn. Mr. L. D. Garvey, who formerly managed the Poli house in New Haven, has resigned to accept a position in New York.

Poli's Theater at New Haven, Conn., is now giving moving pictures and vaudeville instead of stock company attractions.

The best proof that the Film Supply Company's service is doing very well indeed in the New England territory, is to relate an experience of Manager Appleby's of the Star Theater, Boston. Mr. Appleby was one of the first New England houses to connect with the Mutual Corporation, and for the first few weeks, found the exhibition room of the exchange almost empty, when he was watching the pictures, to choose his programs. This is changed now-a-days, and seats at the Mutual's exhibition room are at a premium. Besides the regular customers, there are many exhibitors from the licensed camp looking over the new pictures.

The Scenic Temple, of Paragon Park, Nantasket, Mass., closed for its season on September 15. Manager "Billy" Wolf reports that he had a good run of trade, and that his programs of licensed service and illustrated songs made good with his audiences. The management of the Scenic Temple has decided to build a new theater in Allerton, Mass., which will be devoted to vaudeville and pictures. This will be a year around theater, and is to be first-class in every way.

Manager John Giblin of the Congress Hall Theater, South Boston, Mass., opened his house on Labor Day, and reports that his opening performances were entirely satisfactory. This house is showing pictures from the Boston office of the General Film Company, and vaudeville from the Variety Amusement Company of the same city.

Mr. Jack Donovan of the Variety Amusement Company, Tremont Street, Boston, reports that he has opened a new operating school. New booths and new machines have been installed. Last year a number of efficient operators were turned out by Mr. Donovan, all of whom were passed by the State Board. Special attention is to be given this year to motor-driven machines, as the State Board requires a thorough knowledge of this work.

"Hearts of Old New England" proved that illustrated songs are far from being dead, provided the song and the singer are of good quality. This song made a big hit at the Star Theater, Boston, recently. Manager Appleby had his singer dressed in a George Washington costume, and several encores were regularly demanded. Slides were made by De Witt C. Wheeler, Inc.

The Dreamland Theater, Lynn, Mass., is now receiving the personal attention of Mr. Samuel Grant, manager of the various "Gordon" theaters. The house opened for the new season on August 28, and business is reported as good.

The Gaiety Theater, Springfield, Mass., is now being operated by L. Michael & Company. This house is located on State Street, and plays a straight program of pictures.

Mr. A. A. Kellmann of the Victoria Theater, Lawrence, Mass., is to open an office in Boston, where he will rent feature film productions. Mr. Kellmann owns the state rights to several features and has done very well with them.

Mr. M. H. Goodhue opened his Bijou Theater, Fall River, Mass., on Labor Day, and is offering programs of vaudeville and pictures.

The German Theater, Floating Bridge Park, near Lynn, Mass., has a new manager in the person of Mr. M. Donohue, president of the Lynn Lodge of the Theatrical Mechanics' Association.

The New Pavilion Theater, Portland, Me., had its initial opening recently. This house is situated at Federal and Temple Streets, in the Whitney Building. James W. Greeley is the manager, and the house plays to pictures, with no vaudeville.

Mr. S. Z. Poli has secured Mr. G. W. Donalds to manage his new Royal Theater in Worcester, Mass. Manager Donalds comes with the best of records behind him, having managed a house in Norfolk, Va., with good results.

A new theater, to be devoted to vaudeville and pictures, is promised shortly for Bridgeport, Conn., as Mr. A. B. Jelliff has had plans made for a new theater.

Mr. A. H. Sawyer, well known to the trade through his connection with the Kinemacolor Co., has been visiting the New England states, with a view to introducing his product in that section. Mr. Sawyer spent quite some time in Boston, and declared himself as satisfied with the results of his trip.

Messrs. McCarthy and Hayes intend to build a moving picture theater in Greenfield, Mass., and have chosen Chapman Street as the location. A first class theater is to be erected.

Manager Harry Rosendorf will reopen the Somersworth Theater, Somersworth, N. H., as soon as some needed improvements are made.

HENRY.

LOUISVILLE.

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER, general manager of the Industrial Moving Picture Company of Chicago, was painfully injured near Louisville recently, when a buggy in which he was riding overturned. Mr. Rothacker was badly bruised, while his ankle also was twisted. Alfred V. Oldman, who accompanied the moving picture manager, also was injured. The pair at once made a raid on a cane establishment and managed to hobble around, very painfully, however. Mr. Rothacker, who was in Louisville for the purpose of attending to the initial presentation of the pictures of the recent parade of the American Federation of Catholic Societies in Louisville, made by his company, cut his visit short, returning to Chicago to recuperate.

The films of the parade of the American Federation of Catholic Societies was given its first presentation at the Orpheum Theater, Louisville, recently, before an audience composed of exhibitors and others directly interested. The pictures showed up remarkably well and have been pronounced to be far above the average by experts. So clear are they that faces in the crowd were recognized without the slightest difficulty. One of the prominent characters portrayed in the two reels is Charlie Whitemoon, "the cowboy herbalist," and one of Louisville's best known characters. Whitemoon, or rather C. W. Bunce, lent his aid to making the affair a success, a striking coincidence occurring in this connection. Just as Whitemoon flashed across the screen in the picture, on a handsomely caparisoned steed, and making a picturesque figure in his cowboy attire, a tragedy in which he was the central figure took place at his residence on West Broadway, Louisville. Whitemoon, overcome by the intense heat, fell down a flight of stairs, dying almost instantly. The little audience, knowing nothing of the real play which was being staged a mile away, applauded Whitemoon spontaneously. The pictures of the parade will be shown in Louisville for a week at the Orpheum Theater, under the auspices of the Princess Amusement Company. They were made by the Industrial Moving Picture Company of Chicago. One copy will be retained by the Federation, and will be sent to the Pope, while the other will be shown at various cities through the country. Alfred V. Oldham has the exclusive rights to the film.

Keith's Theater, opening in Louisville for the season of 1912-13, found itself short of two vaudeville acts in the initial performance and called on moving pictures to fill out the afternoon. Allen Kinney, of the Princess Amusement Company, came to the rescue with some emergency films, and the Keith audience manifested entire satisfaction over the substitution.

The East Broadway Theater, conducted by the Broadway Amusement Company, will use two vaudeville acts weekly throughout the cold weather season. They will be split with those utilized at the new Ideal Theater, operated by the same company. An $8,000 Wurlitzer organ, ordered some time ago, has been installed in the East Broadway and is filling the musical needs of audiences at that house with success.

The Consolidated Theaters Company has begun work on the erection of a new house at Central City, Ky. The theater will cost about $6,000 and have a seating capacity of about 400. It will be ready for business this month. The theater of this company at Shellyville, Ky., is progressing nicely and also will be opened shortly, according to present plans.

Manager Schrader, of the Central Film Exchange of Indianapolis, spent a few days with Louisville exhibitors recently. He is covering the Southern field for his concern.

Alf. V. Oldham of Louisville, has secured from the Mammoth Cave estate moving picture rights on the natural wonder, covering the next two years. Mr. Oldham will in the near future make arrangements to photograph the cave and show the pictures through the country. The lighting arrangements present difficulties of some importance, but these may be overcome, it is believed.

Plans providing for the erection of a two-story building, with a spacious dance-hall above, are now being made by a syndicate which holds a long lease on property at Fourth Street and Broadway, Louisville. This proposal replaces one to build a one-story arcade building. Louisville moving picture men are much interested in the project, and Louis J. Dittmar of the Majestic Theater, is said to be anxious to secure a lease on the dance-hall, which will be used only for select social affairs. The property at Fourth and Broadway is one of the most valuable spots in Louisville, being in the heart of the city. A new theater, now being erected in Lexington, Ky., will be ready for the public not later than February 1, according to a recent announcement by C. H. Berryman, representative of James B. Haggin, the New York millionaire, who is largely interested. The work has been delayed because of difficulties in blasting out a heavy stratum of rock. Construction will now be pushed rapidly. The theater will be one of the handsomest in Kentucky, expense being ignored in its erection. A feature will be a gallery for negroes exclusively. The theater will occupy an entire block.

Milwain's Red Moon Theater, at Bardwell, Ky., has been equipped with a lighting plant, which will provide exceptionally good illumination for the theater. Matinees will be features of the house in the future. Night performances have been the only ones rendered in the past.

Anderson, Ind., has followed the lead of Nashville, Tenn., and Superintendent Pearcy, of the public schools of that city, has announced that during the coming school term one of the innovations will be moving pictures for the high school classes. The films will be used to supplement the regular course of instruction and are expected to prove a valuable addition to the usual methods.

The Airdome Theater has been opened at Fulton, Ky., by the Temple Brothers. The house has a seating capacity of 250 persons and will operate only at night. The usual prices of ten cents for adults and half that amount for children will be in force.

The Novelty Theater, Louisville, has hit upon the truly novel plan of giving away five small lots near Knoxville, Tenn., daily. A chance on the land is given with each admission ticket, announcement of the winning numbers being made the day following. Each of the lost is worth $50. However, the winner is forced to pay $7.50 to cover certain transfer expenses, and this fact has been responsible for a little complaint from patrons. The plan, however, has affected attendance at the Novelty favorably.

The Ideal Theater, Louisville's new $75,000 moving picture house, is now using the Gomes vaudeville, two acts being shown daily, with a twice a week change. The East Broadway, Crown and Preston theaters, which heretofore have given patrons straight moving pictures, will in the future add vaudeville.

L. L. Sanders, of Crab Orchard, Ky., has leased the Gem Theater, in Stanford, Ky., and will open the house shortly. Associated in the management will be A. T. Sanders and C. L. Smith. Daily changes in pictures will be made, with an admission price of five and ten cents.

Otto Brown, owner of the Amuzu Theater at Middlesboro, Ky., has extended his interests by opening a new house in Corbin, Ky.

Edgar W. Rule, formerly an advertising man on the staff of the Nashville, Tenn., Democrat, has resigned to enter the moving picture business. Mr. Rule will manage the Bonita Theater, in that city. The Bonita is in the heart of the shopping district and is one of the most popular in the Tennessee capital.

The management of the Hippodrome Theater, Louisville, is contemplating the addition of a balcony to that house. The extreme height of the Hippodrome will allow the proposed gallery without difficulty. The cost will be about $3,000, it is estimated. The Hippodrome now has a seating capacity of 450, and the gallery, if installed, will increase this by 200.

The Executive Committee of the Kentucky Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will meet at Louisville on October 12-15, according to an announcement by Vice-President Louis J. Dittmar. Mr. Dittmar has all arrangements in hand and will provide extensive entertainment for the executive body. The meetings will be held at the Seelbach Hotel. The Louisville Photoplay Association also will entertain the visitors.

The Kentucky Electric Company of Louisville, now uses moving pictures as a stimulant for its business. Beginning on October 1, the top floor of the company's plant was converted into a picture theater. Views of various plants around the country which are using electricity in preference to other power were shown, and the company hopes by this method to greatly increase its business. The concern is one of many which in the past year have taken up moving pictures as a commercial proposition.

W. A. Moore, who a year ago was the darling of many feminine hearts in Louisville as ticket-taker at the Novelty Theater, has returned to that house after a long absence. Moore has been resting up on the farm and returned to work a little overweight, but asserts that a little work will suffice to get him down to weight. Moore's partner, A. J. Wagner, who is nearly seven feet tall, will return shortly, according to the little fellow, who is exactly four feet tall. G. D. CRAIN.

SAN FRANCISCO.

MR. B. MICHLES has just returned home after a hurried trip to New York and other Eastern points following the National Convention. He attended the Chicago Convention as the delegate of the California State Branch, and Officiated at the San Francisco Convention held Sept. 17-18-19. Mr. Michles reports fair motion picture business throughout the East, where he has found the admission prices to be much higher than those charged in California.

The Jackson Theater was opened at Madera by the owner and manager, Mr. Jas. A. Jackson, on Sunday, Sept. 8th, with Independent service. Four reels of Universal releases with a daily change, is supplied by the California Film Exchange, which concern also supplies a Power's 6-A and a spot light. It is understood that a singing act will occasionally vary the pictorial program.

President Rothchild, Secretary Cory and five other League members made up a committee who visited the exhibitors located in Ookland, Berkeley, Alameda and other Alameda county cities for the purpose of arousing the non-members and inducing them to join the League before the convention date. This visit was made on the 11th, and since then they have received the promise of eighteen of the managers to make application in time to form an Alameda County Local sometime during the convention. This will be known as Local No. 3, the others being San Francisco and Los Angeles, numbers one and two respectively.

Citizens, improvement clubs and daily papers have been prosecuting a "City Beautiful" campaign in this city for the past few weeks, one of the more prominent newspapers having offered prizes in that connection. One of the progressive improvement associations, The Golden Gate Valley Improvement Club, has been making use of the motion picture as a means of arousing interest among their neighbors. From all reports they have found that method the best of several they tried in their efforts to bring out a large attendance at the meetings. Films made specially for the purpose have been used, although a few scenic releases have also been shown; but the reels were carefully chosen with the idea in mind that they were to be used for instruction and education, instead of merely to amuse. The second occasion when moving pictures were used, brought out even a larger attendance than the first, as films were shown which were taken right in the heart of the district. These were views of the Bay-front at the foot of Van Ness Avenue, which ground it has been expected the city would buy for the purpose of establishing a municipal aquatic park to be used by several yacht clubs and rented by them from the city government, instead of those clubs having to go across the bay to secure suitable quarters. It is understood that the Improvement Club has received a very considerable amount of aid houses where it has been shown comment favorably upon it.

The Garden Theater, San Jose, which was showing pictures exclusively, closed Sept. 10th for the summer season.

Mr. Ed. H. Kemp is enlarging his floor space to accommodate his increasing Motiograph business, and will soon have available about double the room he formerly occupied. He recently installed two Motiographs and a double stereopticon in the beautiful Cory Theater, and also installed two Motiographs in the Peerless Theater. The Hawiian Promotion Committee instructed their Mr. Walter Gifferd Smith to procure the very best motion picture and stereopticon equipment possible, and he made a trip to the States for that purpose. Mr. Smith secured from Mr. Kemp a Motiograph complete with all current control devices, etc., and an elaborate stero outfit. This equipment will be used by the Promotion Committee in their advertising campaign and in conjunction with films and slides made specially for them. Mr. Kemp will have a full line of projection equipment on display at the State Convention. He expects to entertain the visiting exhibitors, who will also have the opportunity of meeting General Manager A. L. Woodward of the Enterprise Optical Company, manufacturers of the Motiographs.

Turner & Dahnken signed a contract recently with a local supply house for 3,004 opera chairs, to be upholstered with "Pan Plush," and will be, beyond doubt the most expensive chairs placed in any photoplay theater in the United States. These chairs will be about evenly divided between their "New Alameda" and "San Jose" theaters, which houses are located in the towns bearing their names. The "New Alameda" will be under the management of C. L. Langley, while the "San Jose" will be looked after by Mr. Krueline. Both houses will be opened before January 1st, 1913.

The Golden Gate Film Exchange has added an auto to their delivery system, and the reason for this addition can be appreciated by anyone knowing the number and size of their present shipments of Power's equipment. For instance, the Farrigate Theater at Vallejo, has just been opened by Mr. L. R. Greenfield, and two Power's 6-A machines were installed. Four reels of Film Supply of America service, with daily change wil be shown. The Market Street theater, showing licensed pictures at an admission price of ten cents, replaced its Power's 5 machines with two Power's 6-As. The Coast Theaters Company took its Power's 6 machines out of its Hayes Street Theater and installed those machines in its new Washington Square house, putting two new Power's 6 As in the Hayes. That company will also open its new $80,000 Modesto house about Oct 15th, but its Power's 6-As are already on the ground and will be ready before the balance of the house is finished. The Lyric, managed by Smith & Grow, at Marysville, seating 400 people, has just re-equipped their operating room with two Powers 6-As. Mr. Albert Kline, who is just opening a new house in one of the suburban districts of this city, has started with one Powers No. 6 machine.

Mr. Werner is just back from his Eastern trip, during which he demonstrated the Fotoplayer at the National Convention, where the instrument created quite a sensation. Besides placing several large orders direct with the Chicago exhibitors, Mr. Werner arranged for a permanent Chicago representative, and also placed agencies in several other Eastern cities. The San Francisco exhibitors who installed instruments when they were first placed on the market are satisfied with them.

Mr. B. Michles is having built by Kohler & Chase, an organ-piano, which when fitted with the proper keys, will be a very complete sound effect cabinet. The effects will be, however, at a distance from the organ proper, in fact, being mounted back of the screen entirely. With this musical instrument, Mr. Michles' presentation of the named drama will be even more perfect than it is at the present time.

IN THE SOUTHWEST.

W. D. Nevills, of Dallas, Tex., has secured a permit to build a $20,000 theater building at 1613-15 Elm Street in that city.

Moving pictures dealing with sanitation, home decoration, school yard planting and the physical examination of children were shown by the Department of Extension of the University of Texas, at the State Fair at Dallas.

The Metropolitan Theater, of Oklahoma City has been incorporated with a capital stock of $100,000. The incorporators are: Charles H. Garnett, M. E. Garnett and Joseph O. More, of Oklahoma City.

F. B. People, a banker, of McKenney, Texas, will erect a new opera house there.

The Joliet Theater, at Joliet, will run moving pictures when there are no other engagements, giving three reels for five cents.

Miss Laura Hoefer, who has been cashier at the Columbia Theater at Peoria, Ill., has gone to Denver, Col., where she will make her home.

Manager Frohsin has resumed the management of the Princess Theater, at Peoria, Ill., after successfully conducting Al Fresco Park in that city all summer.

Moving pictures of the county fair, the business and residence streets, and the Soldiers' Home at Marshalltown, Iowa, were taken and exhibited at the Lyric Theater, September 21.

Joseph Fansler has disposed of his interest in the Avenue Theater, at East St. Louis, Ill., to his partner, Mrs. Joseph Urbert.

THE MISSING LOCKET (Oct. 16).—As a birthday present Walter Perkins gives his wife a beautiful locket containing her picture, which Mrs. Perkins after admiring it in company with her little daughter Susie places in a drawer for safekeeping.

The child cannot get her mind off the locket, and the next morning takes it from the drawer, and carries it off to school. There she shows the jewel to Mary Burton, her chum, who possesses one also, and immediately proposes a trade.

When Mary returns home she shows the new locket to her mother, and the latter not being able to gain a satisfactory answer as to how it was obtained, confides the fact to her husband and gives the jewel into his keeping.

In the city the next morning the husband enters a cafe for a congenial glass with a friend, and incidentally shows him the locket. As fate would have it, Walter Perkins happens to be standing directly behind, and recognizing the locket demands an explanation, to which the owner jokingly replies that it belongs to his best girl. Mad with rage, Perkins hurries out of the room.

Puzzled at his behavior the two men consult the innkeeper, who looking at the picture exclaims, "Good Heavens! that is Perkins' wife." Realizing what might be the result of their fun, they hurry to the Perkins home, and arrive just in time to prevent a terrible crime.

CINES.

THE ADVENTURE OF THE SCARECROW (Oct. 15).—Farmer Martin is journeying homeward with a well-filled purse in his pocket when suddenly he is waylaid by a pair of rogues, who, after possessing themselves of the money, cast their victim into the river. Quickly scrambling out, he informs the police, who immediately start in pursuit of the men he has described, but the search is unsuccessful.

Wet and dispirited the farmer proceeds on his way, but soon meets a friend who, seeing him in this condition, offers him a coat from a scarecrow standing in a nearby field.

Placing his hands in the pockets of the coat what is his surprise when he discovers the missing wallet. Again he informs the police, who, believing that the thieves will return for their booty, make their plans accordingly.

Later, the ruffians cautiously approach the scarecrow, but suddenly the figure throws its arms tightly around one of the thieves, for the captain has taken the place of the dummy.

After witnessing the capture of the other rogue the farmer carefully replaces the coat upon the scarecrow and then goes on his way in high spirits.

AN ABBREVIATED HONEYMOON (Oct. 19).—A happy pair of newlyweds, Mr. Stout, leader of the Catawaukee Band, and his wife, arrive at the hotel, where they have planned to spend the happiest moments of their lives. During the day, the groom leaves his wife for "just a few minutes" to do an errand, loses his way, and after a series of adventures finds himself at the Opera House. It happens that the regular conductor of the orchestra is ill. Seeing the officials in great dismay, the genial professor presents his card, and is requested to assume the baton for the evening. He scores a triumph and receives a large ovation. After being highly congratulated by the manager upon his work he unfortunately receives possibly too much entertainment upon the way back to his hotel for he does not return until the following morning. When he reaches his room, he finds nothing but a note, which reads: "Sir: I am leaving you forever, to return to my parents!

"Your Ex Wife."

AMONG THE MOUNTAINS OF CALABRIA (Oct. 19).—A pleasing travelogue subject showing the life and customs of the people living among the mountains of Calabria. They are a quaint folk, breathing the pure air of the mountains, living to a good old age and whose only amusements are the native song and dance.

LUBIN.

THE UPRISING (Oct. 14).—An Indian uprising threatens Arizona Dells, where reside the Ryans—father, mother and three daughters. Mary Ryan asks Bob, her sweetheart, to go and save her married sister. A bloodthirsty horde of Apaches wound Bob, but he perseveres until he reaches the cabin of Mary's sister, where he finds her and her husband massacred. Bob snatches their baby from its cradle and starts homeward. Settlers, trappers and scouts surround Bob on his return and, hearing his story, determine to exterminate the redskins. This is done only with loss, but brings a victory to the whites. Bob is rewarded.

GENTLEMAN JOE (Oct. 15).—Tom Gordon, who has been spending some weeks as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Blake, parents of Alice, to whom he is engaged, is about to return home. Bidding Alice goodbye, he notices that her bracelet is not fastened, and she tells him the clasp is broken and asks him to take it to the city for repairs. The night of Tom's return, "Gentleman Joe," burglar of the Raffles type, starts upon an expedition and happens into Tom's apartments. Tom, hearing the noise, determines to investigate and, entering the room, confronts the burglar. Holding the latter at bay with a revolver, Tom starts to telephone for the police. Just as he gets the message through, "Gentleman Joe" hurls a large stein at Tom, which strikes him a stunning blow on the head. The two men clinch, when much to the burglar's surprise, Tom releases his hold and, with vacant stare, laughs. Joe is quick to realize that the blow upon Tom's head has affected his reason and loses no time in exchanging coats with him.

When the police rush into the room, Joe hands Tom over as the burglar while he coolly watches them take him away. Tom is locked in a cell to await trial, unable to explain who he is or where he came from. In the meantime, Alice concludes that Tom has proven false to her. A friend invites her to visit her in the city and Alice accepts. One night after her arrival, she meets "Gentleman Joe" who, as one of the invited guests, is looking for plunder. Joe is much impressed with the fair young woman and determines to give her a present. In looking over his miscellaneous plunder, he selects the bracelet he had secured the night of the fight. When he gives it to Alice, she recognizes at once the bracelet she had given to Tom and hurriedly leaving the burglar, she hastens to advise her friend of what has happened. A visit to the police station results in a clearance of the mystery. Tom's memory is restored to him and "Gentleman Joe" at last finds himself in the hands of the police.

RED SAUNDERS' SACRIFICE (Oct. 17).—Saunders is an outlaw, but he has a heart as tender as a woman's, and when he looked down from his mountain retreat and saw the burning cabin of the Warrens, he rushed to their rescue, and offered them his hut until they could obtain a better home. Mrs. Warren was very ill and a doctor must be gotten at once, so Mary told Saunders. Realizing that there is a price on his head, he hesitates before starting for the town, where the sheriff lives and the reward is posted, but the exigency of the trip urges him on. But before Saunders and the doctor reached Warren's home, Mrs. Warren died. Saunders was recognized while going through the town, and the sheriff struck out upon his trail. The returning doctor directed the sheriff to the outlaw's retreat, where he caught him and made him a prisoner. Mary pleaded for his liberty, but the sheriff was firm. Mary finally persuaded him to see her mother, the woman for whom Saunders risked his liberty. Glancing at the woman, the sheriff recognized one whom he had never ceased to love, the sweetheart of his boyhood days. Filled with emotion and gratitude for the prisoner he removes the handcuffs and tells him to go. He went, just to the door, where he hesitated. He thought of the girl he now loved. What would become of her alone in the world? Would she wait for him if he "took his medicine like a man?" Yes, she promised, only a year was the sentence he received. The sheriff looked after Mary while Saunders was away, and on his return she received him with open arms.

RUBE'S MISTAKE (Oct. 18).—Farmer Cy Pettingale is told by one of his boys that a tramp is loitering about the farm. Cy loads his bird gun with a moderate amount of powder and a liberal quantity of rock salt and starts for the fields. Presently he espies a form in the distance. Cy's eyesight is none too good, but the form prompts him to fire at the trespasser, who happens to be a city boy who is visiting at a farm close by. The salt besprinters the upper part of the city boy's trousers and, on explanation, farmer Pettingale realizes that he has made a mistake.

MEETING MAMIE'S MOTHER (Oct. 18).—Josh Bentham is married to a pretty little doll, but she is shrewish. Josh is henpecked and altogether his life is far from a happy one. No matter how attentive and kind he is, Mamie responds with every lack of appreciation. When Mamie informs Josh that her mother is coming on to visit for a while, he makes up his mind that life will be unbearable. Mamma arrives and much to the surprise of Bentham she is all right, alright. She quickly regulates her angel child and transforms the shrew into a consistent and well behaved little woman. Mamie is broken of her habit of nagging and meets her husband with due affection and appreciation. Having accomplished the beautiful change in the atmosphere of the home, Mamma prepares to leave the now happy couple. Josh nails her trunk to the floor in hopes that he can keep her there forever.

CAUGHT BLUFFING (Oct. 19).—Mr. Travers and his son Billy call on Mrs. Mortimer and her daughter, Dorothy. The young people, who are sweethearts, have a quarrel because Billy will not give up smoking cigarettes. The parents hear the quarrel and attempt to square matters. The young people drive them from the room. The parents feign insanity. The young people telephone to a specialist and, returning to the room, find the

HEAVY PENALTIES for INFRINGERS of COPYRIGHTS and SMUGGLERS of FILMS

The New York Sun, under date of September 11, 1912, publishes an account of the arrest by Federal Officers in New York City of six men charged with smuggling two Moving Picture Films into this country.

One of the films seized was an URBAN-ECLIPSE FEATURE.

After giving an account of this case of smuggling in which a number of the crew of the American Liner "New York" and a representative of a Philadelphia Motion Picture concern are alleged to have been the principals, the Sun says:

> "This is the second charge of smuggling brought against employees of the American Line within two years. Wm. Rind, formerly first officer on board the Steamship St. Paul, is now serving a year's sentence for smuggling."

The sequel is given in The Moving Picture News, of September 28, 1912, as follows:

> "George B. Graff, exchange man of Philadelphia; Sidney Reddington, chief steward of the American Liner New York; Burt Lainson, James Odell, Ernest Platt and James Crocker, members of the liner's crew, pleaded guilty September 23, 1912, before Judge Hough in the criminal branch of the Federal Court to conspiring to smuggle into this country two moving picture films. Graff and Reddington were sentenced to three months' imprisonment in the Blackwell's Island Penitentiary." . . .

I am the exclusive distributor of CINES and URBAN-ECLIPSE films within the United States, its dependencies and possessions, and Canada. I own and control American and Canadian copyrights on the URBAN-ECLIPSE and CINES product. Infringements and clandestine importations will be prosecuted to the full extent of the Law and immediate steps will be taken to seize all films that are infringements or that have been brought into this country through illicit agencies.

The following is existing Law in the matter of Copyright. From the Copyright Law in force July 1, 1909:

> SEC. 30. That the importation into the United States . . . of any piratical copies of any work copyrighted in the United States, is prohibited.
> SEC. 32. That any and all articles prohibited importation by this Act which are brought into the United States from any foreign country . . . shall be seized and forfeited by like proceedings as those provided by law for the seizure and condemnation of property imported into the United States in violation of the customs revenue laws. . . .

The United States Government imposes additional penalties for infringement of copyright in the United States, its territories, dependencies and possessions, including the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, the Philippine Islands, Guam, Tutuila Group-Samoa and the Isthmian Canal Zone, as follows:

Amended copyright law in force July 1, 1909:

patients forget about the joke. They meet the specialist and bribe him to take the parents to a sanitarium and put them among some nobbly insane people. The lovers watch them from the office. Directly they are pronounced sane and the young people take them home, where they vow never again to bluff.

THE SPORTING EDITOR (Oct. 19.).—The Evening Star, wishing to feature sporting news, engages Milton Burbank as its sporting editor. Milton finds that he cannot work to good advantage amid the noise and bustle of the reporter's room and tells the managing editor that he must have more quiet quarters. Gloria Thissell, editor of the Woman's Page, has a nice big room all to herself. The managing editor informs her that she must hereafter share the room with the sporting editor. Angry at having her comfortable room disarranged, Gloria proceeds to give vent to her feelings by being as disagreeable as possible to Milton. Although a very good natured fellow, Milton after vain attempts to be agreeable, at last comes back and there is open warfare between the sporting department and the woman's department. The managing editor, knowing the value of harmony in a newspaper office, seeks for some means of bringing Gloria and Milton to an amicable understanding.

One day Gloria received orders to go to the baseball game and write an account of it. She protested that she didn't know the game, but the editor said that was just why he wanted the article. It would be a novelty for the sporting page. So Gloria had to go, and worst of all, Milton had to be there beside her in the press box. Gloria began to vaguely understand that when Collins was on third base, if Baker slammed the ball over somebody's head, it would mean runs for the home team. The game waxed hot and hotter. Everybody was on their toes, including Gloria. When Baker cracked the fence with a three-bagger, Milton slapped Gloria on the back. Gloria squeezed Milton's arm. Long after the grandstand was emptied the sporting editor and the lady editor sat in the press box writing the story of the game, and as the shadows began to grow real dark, each realized that their own story was just commencing.

VITAGRAPH.

EVERY INCH A MAN (Oct. 14).—Robert Chapman, who works on his father's ranch, is perfectly at home. One day a desperado, pursued by the sheriff, steals one of Mr. Chapman's horses. Robert, with lasso in hand, loses no time in mounting his pony and giving chase. He soon has the fugitive within the loop of his rope and turns him over to the sheriff.

Robert tires of ranching it and decides to go to the city to become a detective. His father gives him a letter to an old friend, who is chief of a Detective Bureau, asking him to discourage Robert, if he can possibly do so, as his mother and himself cannot bear to have the boy away from them. The chief welcomes the boy, but does not let him know the contents of his father's letter. He then arranges with two of his detectives, who disguise themselves as burglars, to scare Robert out of his ambition and send him home.

He assigns Robert to the case. He goes forth with his lasso, feeling that in it he has a trusty friend. He discovers the two burglars about to break into a house. They give fight, but he quickly throws the rope over their heads and soon has them bound hand and foot, taking them back to headquarters in a wheelbarrow. When the identity of the prisoners is made known, Robert demands an explanation. The chief hands Robert the letter which he had brought from his parents. When he reads, "We can never be happy when Robert is away," tears come into the boy's eyes. He takes the first train home, where he receives a happy welcome.

MRS. LIRRIPER'S LODGERS (Oct. 15).—Mrs. Lirriper keeps a boarding house. Major Jackman, dissatisfied with Mrs. Wozenham's, further down the street, comes to live at Mrs. Lirriper's and becomes the "star" boarder. Mr. Edson and his young wife take rooms at Mrs. Lirriper's. They are a young couple, not long married, and appear to be devoted to each other, though the Major has a sort of half-defined prejudice against Edson. One day, in the midst of their happiness, Edson is called suddenly away on important business. He takes an affectionate farewell of his wife, but the days become weeks and the weks months, and nothing is heard from him. Mrs. Edson grows pale and anxious. At last one day a letter comes. The Major and Mrs. Lirriper, who have long suspected that something is wrong, leave the letter at her door, and she reads it. It tells her that she has been deceived and deserted; that her marriage was a sham one. She falls in a faint, and is revived by Mrs. Lirriper. That night, driven to despair, Mrs. Edson goes out and wanders down to the river, intending to drown herself. She is prevented by Mrs. Lirriper, who comforts her with motherly love. A baby boy is born to Mrs. Edson, but her strength has been overtaxed and she dies. With her last breath, she commends the child to Mrs. Lirriper and the Major, who take it from her as a sacred charge, and with a smile on her lips, she dies.

AN ELEPHANT ON THEIR HANDS (Oct. 16).—The circus gets out of town, with everything but its elephant, which is seized for debt by the town constable. To realize on the asset, it is auctioned off and purchased by Mr. Goodsport while he is intoxicated. He takes it home, something that he never could have done in his sober senses.

He takes it upstairs to bed with him. His wife and daughter, when they discover the presence of the beast, are frightened to death, and a little later when Goodsport wakes up to a realization of what he has done, he is almost frantic with terror. In his efforts to get rid of his purchased folly, the elephant takes possession of the kitchen, terrifies the cook, and makes a clean sweep of everything in it.

The constable and his assistant, who are called on for help, cannot budge the brute. Finally Goodsport is obliged to send word to the circus manager and pay him to take his elephant back and off his hands.

FATHER'S HOT TODDY (Oct. 17).—Tired of living alone with his two motherless daughters, Jones decides to take unto himself a wife. She is a charming woman and his daughters readily accept her as their stepmother. A few months later he is seized with a violent attack of grippe. He brings home a bottle of whiskey and asks his wife to prepare a hot toddy for him. She is a teetotaler and advises him to take chamomile tea and a foot bath. He does not want to make known his fondness for toddy and agrees to take her remedies. She makes the tea and gets ready the boiling water. His daughter, knowing his liking for his toddy, empties the tea out of the jug and fills it with whiskey. Their stepmother, not knowing what has been done, gives her husband a liberal potion, which he drinks with a great deal of relish, following it with one or two more. After a while, he feels quite hilarious and acts so funny his wife does not know what to make of it. The girls, to shield their daddy, say he is delirious. He is put to bed and is soon lost in slumberland.

Next day, he feels so much improved that he goes to business and in the evening on his return home, brings a beautiful bouquet of flowers for his wife and a box of candies for the girls, in appreciation for the kind services they have rendered and the cure they have effected.

EVENING PARADE AND BIG GUN PRACTICE AT FORT HAMILTON (Oct. 17).—A complete demonstration of how our coast defense would be carried out in case of war. This practice has become such an important part of our coast artillery work, a knowledge of the expert marksmanship of our military protectors inspires us with an assurance and confidence of security that we have nothing to fear in case of foreign attack. With such efficient service as our forts maintain, entrance to our harbors is impenetrable and almost impossible.

BUNNY ALL AT SEA (Oct. 19).—On his trip to Europe, Bunny is very much disturbed because he fails to make his usual impression with the ladies. He notices that the captain of the steamer is the real thing with the fair sex and decides it is the uniform that attracts them and that it is the only thing lacking to make him as popular in their estimation as the commander of the ship. He visits the captain's stateroom and borrows, without his knowledge, one of his uniforms. He swells around among the passengers, carries things with a high hand and authority, trying to impress everybody with a sense of his own importance.

The captain, learning of Bunny's doings, carries the joke a little further by putting one over on him. He orders his boatswain to arrest Bunny. At the suggestion of Bunny's friend, the captain sentences him to menial servitude, making him assist the cook, peeling onions and potatoes and doing all sorts of culinary work. Afterward he is set to work sweeping the lower deck, very much to the amusement of his friends, who view his humiliation from the upper deck. When the joke has been carried far enough, Bunny is pardoned and he resumes his place among his friends and they all have a jolly time talking it over. In the midst of the conversation, one after another is obliged to seek communion with the mighty deep, very much to the satisfaction of Bunny, who tells them that they are not good sailors. Laughing at their discomfiture, he is suddenly seized with a violent attack of headache, as those who have gone before, and he hastily seeks the side of the ship to relieve his inward feelings.

FOUR DAYS A WIDOW (Oct. 21).—"I will have to go to Chicago on business for a few days." This is what Jim Gaylor tells his wife, Marjorie. She has heard the same story before. Jim has trumped it up to have a good time with his old friend, Harry Morton, whose wife is in the country. After Jim has gone, Marjorie visits her friend Helen, in Springdale, leaving a note, telling Jim where she has gone. In Springdale, she arranges with Marjorie to introduce her as a young widow, determined to have a good time herself while her husband is "away." Jim goes to Harry's house, where they have everything their own way during Mrs. Morton's absence. Unexpectedly, Harry's wife returns home and Jim thinks it is about time to "return from Chicago." He goes home and finds his wife's note. He is greatly surprised and decides to go to Springdale to see her. Arriving there, he finds her attending a reception, which Helen is holding in honor of the "young widow," who is surrounded by a galaxy of young beaux anxious to win her smiles and get the privilege of the next dance. Jim approaches his wife. She ignores him, accepting the escort of a young swell, going into the conservatory, where she is again surrounded by several attentive young fellows. Jim follows and is amazed and almost paralyzed when he hears a couple of them propose to her.

In distress Jim begs Helen's assistance, and she, thinking that he has suffered quite enough for his little game, pleads with Marjorie in his behalf. She agrees to a reconciliation under one condition: that he will give up his "business trips" and pay more attention to her.

ESSANAY.

A MISTAKEN CALLING (Oct. 15).—Maggie, a cook, feels that she is born to write poetry and consults a phrenologist. Among the many knobs on Maggie's dome of intelligence he discovers one that reveals she will startle the world with her scribbling. Therefore Maggie resigns her job and starts into poetry. Also she casts off her policeman lover, Officer 444. One morning she invades the office of a publishing house and, in the course of a few moments, has the editor on the floor by the hair while she pours her slush into his tortured ear. Officer 444 is summoned to arrest her, and the recognition is mutual. He gets her out on the street to the patrol box, but Maggie soon puts him to sleep by reading her poetry and flees, leaving one of the verses attached to his uniform. Reduced to poverty and starvation, Maggie applies at an employment bureau and luckily is re-engaged by her former mistress on taking a pledge never to scribble again. On the way home Maggie runs across Professor Phreno, the bunk phrenologist who put her on the wrong track. What she does to him with her fists and umbrella is plenty, and is only subdued by the inevitable Officer 444, who sends her on her way. In closing we find "Phreno" humped over his chart, feeling the lump on his forehead and wondering over the fact that its location on the chart is signed "casualty."

THE GRASSVILLE GIRLS (Oct. 16).—After several years' absence Tom Carver, a city chap, returns to the little town of Grassville with a group of chums. He tells his friends of Rose, his old sweetheart, and, having met her and her chums, the boys now plan to fool them by writing letters to all, proposing marriage and signing Tom's name. It is not until the girls meet that Tom's perfidy is discovered and the girls plan revenge. Masquerading as simple country maids, they catch Tom in an awkward position at the river bank and give him a thorough ducking. He is rescued by his pals, who take him home. A few moments later a note is delivered to Tom from the girls, saying they decline his proposal and that ducking is a fine cure for deceit. In a huff Tom and his pals go fishing, but their lines are entangled by the girls, who pass in a rowboat and give them the laugh. A moment later their boat upsets and the girls are seen struggling in the water. Quickly the boys plunge in and bear them safely to shore. Out of gratitude the girls arrange a tea party at Rose's house, the romance of ten hearts begins. A few days later the village pastor makes the ten hearts five, and the happy couples are spooning contentedly when they suddenly discover a crowd of the town people coming for them with old shoes and rice. A hasty dash up the railroad track lands them on the observation platform of the train pulling out and, seeing they are cheated out of their fun, the Grassville folk give them a rousing send-off.

THE SNARE (Oct. 17).—Tom Ransom, a fugitive from justice, is pursued to the cottage of his aged mother and arrested. Pleading with his mother to believe in his innocence Ransom is led away. He manages to escape from his captors and the matter is laid before Dayton, captain of police. Among the articles taken from Ransom is a letter from his sweetheart saying she has never seen his mother, and a small photograph. Deciding on a plan Dayton send for Mary Clement, a clever girl detective, gives her the details of the case and orders her to trap Ransom by gaining access to his mother's cottage through posing as Tom's sweetheart. Mary does so, and is charmed with the sweet simplicity of the old lady, whom she learns to love dearly. Learning from a letter that Tom is expected that evening, Mary is disgusted with her trickery and resolves to give him a fair chance to escape. Before her plan is put in action Tom enters and discovers Mary's deception. Furiously he is denouncing her when his mother enters, and he is forced to keep the truth from her. A few moments later the station agent enters with a telegram for Mary. It is from Dayton, saying the real culprit has been captured and to drop the Ransom case. With a prayer of thanksgiving Mary explains she must return to the city at once on an urgent matter, kisses Tom's mother goodbye, gives her hand to him, he presses it with a look of deep understanding, then she fades from their lives forever.

THE WARNING HAND (Oct. 18).—Jack Wayne, a dissolute young fellow, staggers into his home one evening in a state of intoxication, to find his father on his death-bed. Before the aged man dies he warns Jack to beware of the hand of evil, and points to a shrouded painting on the wall depicting a jeweled hand holding a sword by a chain. Jack is dazed at the sight of the painting and hurries from the room. After the death of his father young Wayne loses heavily at cards and one evening is about to appropriate some funds from his mother's private safe when he is startled to see the shroud fade from the painting and the hand of evil points directly at him. Frightened, he watches the shroud return into place, then staggers from the room in a panic of fear. Several months afterward he calls one evening upon his sweetheart, Grace, only to discover his rival, Merrell, seated close beside her.

Five years later Wayne has married and is beset with business difficulties. He attempts to secure a loan from a banker, but his securities are worthless. Seizing upon an opportunity he takes a blank check from the banker's desk and that night is about to forge it when the warning hand again appears to him and drops ghostly handcuffs upon his wrists. The warning hand has proved his salvation.

THE OUTLAW'S SACRIFICE (Oct. 19).—Jim Barton is elected to the office of county sheriff, takes the oath of office, obtains his star and rides back to his shack highly elated. Later word reaches Barton that Bud Layton, the noted outlaw, has passed the boundary line into his country and to watch out. Securing a posse Barton starts out to trail Layton. Meanwhile Layton has camped near the Barton shack and, thinking his identity unknown, rides into town and secures groceries. He is recognized by a cowboy, however, and Barton is soon hot in pursuit with the posse. Barton's little baby girl, Audrey, now wanders off from the shack. A few moments later a cowardly Mexican peon finds Mrs. Barton alone and attempts to enter. She wounds him and, out of revenge, he fires the shack. Meanwhile, little Audrey is found by Layton, who, gun in hand, is fleeing from the posse. Picking the baby up in his arms he carries her with him and suddenly discovers the blazing shack, with the Mexican crouching nearby over the lighted straw. Whipping out his gun Layton kills the scoundrel, leaves Audrey on the ground, dashes through the flames and, after a terrible battle with the smoke and fire, rescues Mrs. Barton, who has fallen unconscious. Barton and his posse arrive just as Layton, terribly burned, has dragged Mrs. Barton to safety. "Too late, sheriff," he gasps, "I've paid my debt." A moment later he falls back dead. With uncovered heads the posse kneel beside the Western hero with the realization that he had not died in vain.

A SON'S EXAMPLE (Oct. 24).—John Miller is cashier of a bank and his son Ray a trusted employee. The latter is in love with Edith, the president's daughter. Miller loses heavily on the horse races, and not wishing to mortgage his home, fails to enter a deposit in the bank records, using the money for a final plunge on the races, hoping to recuperate all his former losses, but he loses again. Ray discovers the shortage and to spare his father and mother humiliation, leaves a note at the bank, saying that he took the money, and goes West. All believe Ray took the money excepting Edith, whose faith in him proves stronger than was expected. Knowing Mr. Miller to be a gambler, she suspects him, accuses him, and finally wrings from him a confession of the truth. Miller gives a mortgage on his home to cover the loss, and Edith starts West in search of her noble lover. In the West Ray has turned cowboy. A handsome reward is offered for the capture of a dangerous bandit. Ray gets on his trail and "covers" him just as the bandit is holding up the stage coach. On that coach is Edith. Ray gets his reward; then the happy lovers return, pay off the mortgage, and receive the blessings of all.

BIOGRAPH.

IN THE AISLES OF THE WORLD (Oct. 14).—A widower and his two daughters live in the wilds of the North woods. They form the acquaintance of two trappers, Bob Cole and Jim Watson, who hunt in the neighborhood. As fate will have it, both trappers love the same girl—the elder sister, but she loves Bob, while the younger girl is attracted by Jim. The elder girl, however, through a woman's whim, pays marked attention to Jim simply to arouse jealousy in Bob. He, in temper, cannot reason her motive and leaves, so through pique she accepts and marries Jim. Later Bob revisits the place, feeling that the girl loves him best, and tries to induce her to go away with him. He finally succeeds and, as you may imagine, fate brings about justice.

A LIMITED DIVORCE (Oct. 17).—Mr. and Mrs. Peck have cultivated the habit of quarreling incessantly, and during one of their quarrels Mrs. Peck's brother visits them. He realizes what the trouble is. It is simply a case of peevishness and so suggests a remedy—that is, to agree to a "time limit" divorce. This plan strikes them favorably. Hence they sign an agreement to an absolute separation for five weeks. Peck immediately starts in to enjoy his bachelorhood at a nearby seaside resort, but his "joys" are soon vanquished by the "glooms" for brother-in-law plays a trick which teaches Peck an indelible lesson.

LIKE THE CAT, THEY CAME BACK (Oct. 17).—The commissioner of Police discovers that some one has been helping himself to his cigars and, to catch the culprit, he places some loaded cigars in the box in lieu of the good ones. The maid, following her usual custom, gives a handful of the "smokes" to her sweetheart, the Copper. The Copper meets the Lieutenant, who takes the cigars from him but as neither of them has had a chance to try them, the nature of the "near Havanas" is still a secret. On the Lieutenant's arrival at the Police Station a meeting of the Police Board is in session. The Commissioner gives the Lieutenant a dollar and asks him to go out and get a dollar's worth of good cigars, and—but why tell more?

MONTE CRISTO (Oct. 14).—FIRST REEL.—The first reel opens with the departure of the ship Pharaon from Marseilles, with Dantes and Danglars, the man who later becomes his deadly rival, as supercargo. During the voyage the captain dies. At the moment of his death he gives the charge of the ship to Dantes, and also entrusts to him the secret message to Napoleon, with the imperial ring which will admit him to private audience with the illustrious exile.

Dantes succeeds in his mission to Napoleon, and sails back to France with a communication from Napoleon to Noirtier, who dispatched the original missive. On arrival at Marseilles, Danglars tries to get the command of the Pharaon away from Dantes, but Morrel, the shipowner, is well satisfied with Dantes, and gives him his captain's papers.

Dantes, after an affectionate reunion with his old father, visits his sweetheart, Mercedes. Fernand, a hery young fisherman, who has been trying to win her for himself, is much incensed at Dantes' return. He discovers Danglars' enmity for Dantes, and conspires with him and several habitues of the Reserve Inn to bring trumped up charges against Dantes. Their nefarious scheme succeeds so well that Dantes is torn from a jolly prenuptial feast by the magistrate's guards and hustled from the distracted Mercedes' side to a dungeon in the Chateau D'If, in Marseilles harbor.

SECOND REEL.—The second reel depicts the awful years spent in the dungeon by Dantes. He grows grizzled, ragged and unkempt in the solitude. He manages finally to get into communication, through a secret passage, with a fellow prisoner, an old Abbe, who is being persecuted by political and religious enemies. The Abbe is an eccentric person, whose one thought in life is the recovery of immense buried riches, the key to the finding of which he holds in the form of an old chart. Finally the Abbe comes to die, and entrusts the chart to Dantes.

After the discovery of the Abbe's corpse by the guards, and while the latter have gone out to fetch shots with which to weight the sack in which they have wrapped the Abbe preparatory to casting him into the sea, Dantes manages to drag the corpse into his own cell and substitute himself for the remains. He is cast from the parapet of the castle in the sack which is supposed to contain the dead body. He has supplied himself with a knife beforehand, and as the sack sinks Dantes rips it open and swims to an isolated rock, from the top of which he shouts, in his exultation over the escape: "The World is Mine!"

THIRD REEL.—The third reel opens with the rescue of Dantes from the rock by a smuggler's schooner. During the cruise of the schooner, Dantes induces the captain to put him ashore on the Isle of Monte Cristo, the spot named in the Abbe's chart as the depository of the hidden treasure. He discovers the exact cave and unearths the treasure. He makes his way to the mainland and lives in luxury among the Arabs, falling in love with the beautiful slave girl, Haidee. Captain Albert, of the French army, gets into difficulties during an attack upon his troops by the Arabs and Dantes, by his daring, saves his life. Albert, on taking his departure from Dantes' tent, thanks him profusely and invites him in Paris. Dantes, who has seen something familiar in the captain's face, starts when he reads his card, but promises, without comment, to attend the reception at Albert's.

Dantes, in disguise, and known as the Count of Monte Cristo, visits Paris with Haidee. There he comes face to face with his old sweetheart, Mercedes, who has married his enemy, Fernand. Mercedes informs him that the young captain, Albert, is his own son. The final scene is a desperate duel between Dantes and Fernand, in which Fernand is killed.

MY WIFE'S BONNET (Oct. 14).—Mrs. Topknot and her friends, Mrs. Cutwater and Mrs. Appleby, buy hats alike. Mrs. Topknot goes to the theater with her cousin, Alfred Jones, whom her husband has never seen. While preparing to watch the performance, she accidentally drops her hat from the box where she is sitting to the pit below. In glancing over the railing of the box she is astonished to see that the hat has fallen into the lap of her husband, whom she thought was busy at his office. She and Alfred, not wishing to be seen by Mr. Topknot, hurriedly leave the theater. Mr. Topknot recognizes his wife's hat and immediately causes an uproar in the theater, thinking that his spouse is spending the evening with another man. Mrs. Appleby, who chances to be in the theater and sees the hat drop into Mr. Topknot's lap, decides to help her friend. She hurries away from the theater and leaves her hat at Mrs. Topknot's apartment. Alfred Jones also borrows Mrs. Cutwater's hat, so when the indignant Mr. Topknot returns home he finds his wife in possession of two hats absolutely alike. The one he carries makes the third. After many humorous incidents Alfred is introduced to Mr. Topknot, the hat tangle is straightened out and all ends happily.

THE OPIUM SMUGGLERS (Oct. 15).—This film is a story dealing with the line riders of the Northwest. The line riders are a body of men whose duties are similar to those of the famous Texas rangers along the Mexican line. Their range is the wildest portion of the great Northwest country and they ride the imaginary line that separates the United States from the Dominion of Canada. In the discharge of their duties they are brought into active contact with the most desperate criminals. The particular incident upon which this story is based, deals with opium smuggling, and shows how Captain Bob MacDonald, after having run the smugglers down, falls a victim to a carefully laid plot to put him out of the way. He is accused by one of his captives of having deliberately murdered his partner Kitty Wells, a young homesteader, whom Bob is deeply interested in, sends for him with the intention of turning him over to the Canadian authorities. Bob comes to her and she relieves him of his gun. She, however, is convinced that Bob is not a cowardly murderer when he shows her the wounds that he had received in the gun fight. As she is about to return his gun, one of the smugglers who had escaped and had been following Bob, enters the room and tries to kill him. After a desperate struggle, Bob manages to disarm and arrest him. After a series of peculiar circumstances they discover that the evidence against Bob had been trumpted up by the dead smuggler. Kitty's confidence is restored and she gives Bob her hand in a good strong grip of friendship.

THE SHUTTLE OF FATE (Oct. 16).—Frank Keene, roughened by years spent in the Alaskan goldfields, is returning to San Francisco on a steamer that also carries the DeLongs and their little daughter, Lois. Keene's lonely heart is attracted to the child's sweet ways, and the tot takes a natural liking to him. One night the steamer meets with a disastrous collision, and terrible scenes ensue. As the vessel sinks the passengers and crew are seen fighting for vantage points. Gradually all are forced to leap overboard. Keene fights his way to Lois, grabs her in his arms, leaps into the ocean and swims. The child's parents are lost, but Keene and the child are saved.

Keene takes Lois inland with him. In the city he falls into gambling ways. Lois, in a very touching scene, invades the barroom in her nightgown and by her sweet innocence causes him to foreswear gambling and drinking forever. Keene buys a ranch and settles down to bring Lois up to the best of his ability. The child develops into a beautiful girl. Keene idolizes her and she is perfectly happy with him. One night, as they are sitting about the lamp together, Keene is struck dumb by an ad in the paper, asking for information concerning the DeLong child, supposedly lost in the wreck. Keene has a silent struggle with himself, but conquers his desire to keep Lois hidden from her past, and sends her to her aunt in the East. Thereafter Keene's life is one of pathetic loneliness. The love which he thought was only fatherly he recognizes now as more. In the East, Lois is loved by an ardent young admirer, but her heart has stayed on the Western ranch with Keene. Unable to bear the separation longer, she flees to the old home, and she and Keene are married.

WHERE LOVE IS, THERE GOD IS ALSO (Oct. 17).—This story is adapted from Tolstoi's story of Russian peasant life, the principal scenes of which are laid in the basement home of an old Russian shoemaker. Having recently lost his wife and child, he is wailing and cursing at God for having deprived him of his dear ones. His friend Ivan comes along and consoles him, telling him that it is all for the best and that wherever love is there God is also. When he leaves, Martuin, the shoemaker, is in a better state of mind and he thinks constantly of the lesson that his friend Ivan has taught him. He begins life anew and does good to everybody whom he meets. He has been told that some day "The Stranger" will visit him. He prepares for "The Stranger," little realizing that "The Stranger" means God, and that He will come not in the flesh but rather in the spirit. A poor exhausted street shoveler falls at his door and is brought in and fed on the meal that lies prepared for "The Stranger." So on for many years, this kind treatment to others is administered by the old shoemaker. Finally, one day, he hears a voice saying, "Put your house in order, for to-morrow I shall visit thee." He spends many nights thereafter waiting, watching, praying for the appearance of "The Stranger." Finally it dawns upon him that "The Stranger" is God, and that God comes not in the flesh but in the spirit. He falls on his knees and thanks God that at last he has seen the light and understands.

SUBTERFUGE (Oct. 18).—Frank Lang and Billy Snow are rivals for the hand of Ethel Gordon. One day, while the rivals are on a fishing trip near the summer resort at which they are guests, they come across Ethel busily engaged with paints and canvas at the edge of the stream. The rivals immediately forsake their fishing and propose to Ethel. Ethel is very much interested in the picture which she is painting and does not care to be bothered by the boys. Finally, after both boys have proposed to her, she hits on a scheme to rid herself of them. She tells them that she will marry the one that catches the largest fish by three o'clock. This works like magic on the boys, and both hurry away to fish. Evidently thinking that "All is fair in love and fishing," Frank goes to the State Fish Hatchery and buys a large fish from the keeper. Billy apparently reasons the same way for he buys a large fish from a boy whom he runs across on the stream. At three o'clock, Frank calls upon Ethel at her cottage and gives his fish to her. Billy comes in a moment later and also presents Ethel with a fish. Both boys hurry away to change their clothes, Ethel telling them to return a little later to see the fish weighed. Now it is very apparent that Frank's fish is the larger of the two, but Ethel, who really prefers Billy, decides that Billy shall win. The boys return, Frank's fish weighs 3½ pounds, and Billy's, which is much smaller, tips the scales at 3¾ pounds. Frank, however, is a game loser. He congratulates Billy on his success then makes his exit. Billy turns his fish over and over in his hands, wondering how it ever weighed so much. Then, when a handful of shot rolls out of the fish he understands. Ethel shyly confesses to her subterfuge and Billy takes her in his arms.

THE LASS OF GLOUSTER (Oct. 16).—With a parting kiss, Betty Lane, a fisherman's daughter, and John Monroe, promise to meet later in the day at their trysting place on the seashore. Betty returns to keep the appointment and is waiting but a moment when a wealthy young yachtsman comes ashore for provisions. He flirts with Betty and Betty's heart is lost. John arrives to find his sweetheart in the stranger's arms. Betty ignores John's protests and agrees to the newcomer's proposal that she pack her things, meet him in half an hour and elope. John hides and awaits their return. The yachtsman is the first to arrive. He has his provisions and has not forgotten a bottle of stimulant, most of which he has already consumed. John thrashes him for stealing his girl, throws him into his rowboat, and orders him to get aboard his yacht and not to return. On board the yacht the intoxicated yachtsman drops a match near the oil tank. Betty arrives on the scene in time to see the vessel in flames and the owner dive into the water. Betty looks appealingly at John. John takes to the water and with a few strong stokes reaches the drowning man. In the meantime, Betty has been doing some heavy thinking, it appears, and has come to the conclusion that a man as brave as John is, although poor, is better for her than a wealthy sailor who cannot swim.

THE STRIPED BATHING SUIT (Oct. 17).—After making his wife a present of a new striped bathing suit, Mr. Peters is astonished to see the suit in the sea in the arms of a strange gentleman. Peters, on the sand, storms and rages at the couple out in the water, but they do not seem to see him. The gentleman bestows a kiss and this is the last straw. Peters wades out in his best suit of clothes to get at the fellow. When the water reaches his chin the lady faces him and to Peters' surprise it is not his wife at all, but another young lady who has purchased a striped bathing suit at a department store.

A hollowed oak tree is a trading station for the moonshiners and Mannering, in order to secure evidence against them, sets a camera facing the tree in such a manner that when anyone looks into the hollow they will be photographed. The sheriff, when he finds the girl has no use for him, sends her an anonymous note asking her to go to the tree. Later he and Mannering develop the picture and to Joe's surprise the woman he loves is revealed. However, he has sworn to do his duty and he goes to her home to arrest her. When he and the sheriff reach there they find her father dying and with his last fleeting strength he confesses that he is the moonshiner. The girl shows Mannering the note, asking her to come to the tree and informs him that it was brought to her by the sheriff's servant. When Joe learns this he is with difficulty restrained from taking the sheriff's life.

OUTWITTING THE PROFESSOR (Oct. 14).—Dora and Frank are sweethearts, but they came very near having their dream of love shattered by the interference of an eccentric individual by the name of Professor Barton, who is also a suitor for Dora's hand. It seems that Professor Barton is a lifelong chum of Dora's father and he is therefore looked upon with favor by Mr. Winslow. Dora, however, does not care for him, and loves only her Frank, to whom she imparts her father's unreasonable wishes. The lovers then plan to get rid of the persistent old Barton.

They take the maid and butler into their confidence and when Professor Barton calls to pay his respects and renew his offer of marriage Dora seems more than cheerful and induces the professor to drink a glass of lemonade, into which the maid has previously put a sleeping powder. He soon succumbs to its influence and falls asleep. While in this condition the lovers bribe the maid to sit close to him, allowing the sleeping professor's head to rest on her shoulder. Dora then seeks her father and complains bitterly of the professor's inattentiveness to her and the seeming attraction the maid has for him.

Mr. Winslow hardly believes it, but goes to the conservatory to investigate, where to his surprise and horror, he finds the professor and maid in what appears to him a most compromising position. This so angers Mr. Winslow that he proceeds to handle the professor somewhat rudely. Poor drowsy old Barton in trying to explain only makes matters worse, as Mr. Winslow seems convinced that the man is intoxicated and forthwith has him ejected by the butler. With old Barton safely out of the way, Frank makes his appearance and succeeds in getting Mr. Winslow's consent to marry his daughter Dora.

GLIMPSES OF BERMUDA (Oct. 15).—First we catch a glimpse of Hamilton Harbor and here and there a man-of-war; then a glorious lily field, with thousands and thousands of Easter Lilies in bloom; a panorama of the three hundred and sixty-five islands that make up the land of the lily and the rose; then our attention is held by a deep sea diver coming out of the depths from under a sunken wreck. We also get a glimpse of the ocean bottom and some of the fish that live there.

THE WIDOW'S SECOND MARRIAGE (Oct. 15).—The wily deacon in this bucolic story is very much attracted by a charming widow. One morning as he is about to pay her a call, the village lawyer is there before him with a bad bit of news about her mortgage. The deacon overhears this and he is not so attentive a lover after his eavesdropping.

A few days later the deacon, while passing along the village street, sees a messenger boy drop a telegram and when he picks it up he finds to his surprise, that it is addressed to the widow. His curiosity is aroused and as the message is only partly sealed he cannot resist the temptation to open it and learn its contents. It bears good news to the widow—her financial straits are now over. Hurriedly the deacon seals the envelope and hastens after the boy who dropped the telegram. Then he takes advantage of the opportunity to admonish the lad for his carelessness. He hurries to the widow's home by a different route from that of the boy so as to get there and congratulate her after he hears the news from her. He is, however, too late. While he was changing his mind so many times another suitor won her hand.

THE COMBINATION OF THE SAFE (Oct. 14).—Smith Weston, a diamond importer, trusts implicitly in his companion and secretary, Atland Harrison, who has been in his employ for over twenty years. A large consignment of diamonds has just been received and is placed in a special safe, the combination of which is known only to Weston. Harrison having occasion to procure some papers from a private box of his employer, accidentally comes upon the combination of the special safe. he finds his fears are groundless, but realizes that in his room, but at the office he becomes uneasy. He finally feigns illness and hurries home to see if the combination is where he left it. Arriving home, he finds his fears are groundless, but realizes that he will never be able to trust the combination to a hiding place again. He therefore decides to memorize it. Having committed the combination to memory, he destroys all possible evidence of his knowledge and burns the slip.

At a late hour Harrison makes a trip downtown. He secures the diamonds with little difficulty and returns home. The following day consternation reigns in the office of Weston when it is discovered that the contents of the special safe are missing. Detectives are called in and a search is inaugurated.

A week later as Weston, prostrated from his loss, sits propped up in a chair his pet parrot repeats the combination of the special safe. Startled, Weston sends for the detectives. The detectives declare at once that the combination of the special safe has been repeated in the hearing of the parrot. Learning that Harrison occupies a room adjoining that of Weston, the detectives are convinced of the secretary's guilt. Harrison decides to leave the country, but the detectives follow by various clues and finally capture him aboard an ocean liner.

PAYING THE BOARD BILL (Oct. 16).—Bob, Wilbur, and Horace, a trio of embryo artists, are invited by their landlady to pay up or get out. To realize money the boys offer for sale a picture that really is a work of art and on which they realize only fifteen dollars, the amount of the board bill. Their good resolutions vanish, however, and the money is soon spent on three pretty girls whom they chance to meet. They are up against it now and decide to leave their boarding house via the fire-escape. The landlady learns of their daring plan and, calling in the police, has them arrested. While being marched off by the officers they are seen by the girls whom they have recently treated to a good dinner. The girls prove to be good sports when they hear the boys' hard luck story and quickly pay the landlady the fifteen dollars necessary to make the boys solid once more.

CENTRAL PARK, NEW YORK (Oct. 16).—This magnificent park, in the center of Manhattan Island, is the Mecca of all visitors to New York City. In our journey through the park we visit the world-famous Metropolitan Museum. Nearby we are attracted by Cleopatra's Needle, a gift from the Egyptian Government to New York City. We see the keepers feeding the hippopotami; children feeding the swans in the bautiful lake; the Columbus Monument at the Fifty-ninth Street and Eighth Avenue entrance; the Sherman Statue at the Fifty-ninth Street and Fifth Aenue entrance; the Casino; the picturesque lake; a lady visitor feeding the squirrels; the crowds on The Mall; Webster's Monument; the Cave; the Pilgrim Fathers' Monument; the Playground; McGown's Pass Tavern; the Old Stone Fort; the donkey ride; the trick elephant going through his paces under the instruction of a keeper; a Saturday concert; and many other interesting sights greet our eyes.

THE PLOT THAT FAILED (Oct. 18).—Jack completes his invention and takes the model to Craig, a wealthy manufacturer, who offers the young man an unreasonable low figure. Jack refuses to accept the offer and leaves, quite discouraged.

Craig, who recognizes the value of the invention, determines to secure possession of the model and calls on Jean, an adventuress, who is deeply in love with the manufacturer. He advises Jean of his plans and next day she enters Jack's house through a ruse, Jean locates the model, but being unable to get it out of the house, she goes to Craig and tells him of the situation. Craig plays upon the affection of the adventuress and tells her that he will marry her if she secures the model. He hands her his revolver to be used as a last resort and the couple is not aware that Jack's sweetheart, Bertha, has overheard the conference.

Bertha hastens to Jack's workshop and arrives before Jean. The girl hides behind the work bench and frustrates the plans of the adventuress.

When Jack learns of the plot to rob him of his invention he again takes the model to Craig and exclaims: "If you want this so badly, I will take $25,000 for it." Craig sees that he can do nothing else but accept Jack's proposition and he therefore draws his check for that amount.

THE RIVAL ENGINEERS (Oct. 19).—Fletcher and Thorn, two engineers on the M. & M. Railroad, admire the new engine recently purchased by the company and each applies to the superintendent for permission to run it. Fletcher is successful in securing the prize, which arouses the anger of Thorn.

Arriving home that night, Thorn finds Fletcher's son, Robert, standing at the gate talking with his daughter, Jenny. Thorn roughly orders Jenny into the house and, turning to Robert, forbids him to speak to Jenny again. An argument ensues and in the struggle Robert is thrown down.

Robert informs his father of the trouble with Thorn and Fletcher tells him to wait until morning when he will settle with Thorn at the railroad yard. The next day when the engineers meet a quarrel takes place and Fletcher gets very much the worst of it.

A few days later the engineers gather and discuss the question of a strike. Thorn makes a speech, begging the men to remain with the company. His speech is having its desired effect when Fletcher, who has shown all along his enmity toward Thorn, jumps up and induces the men to strike. Thorn refuses to follow the other men out.

Consternation reigns in the superintendent's office when he learns of the strike. Immediate delivery of valuable freight on a siding in the railroad yard is demanded by a consignee and a claim for large damages is imminent unless delivery is effected at once. The superintendent asks Thorn if he will move the freight. Thorn agrees, and a clerk is supplied him as a fireman. Fletcher discovers Thorn's intention and decides to thwart him. He tells a group of strikers of Thorn's plan and a mob starts to stone Thorn's engine as he passes. Being unable to stop Thorn, Fletcher leaves the crowd and, calling to a fireman, jumps on his own engine and starts on a parallel track to intercept Thorn. A wonderful race between the two engines takes place.

The mad race over the rails, the collision that finally occurs, the rescue of the engineers, and the final adjustment of all difficulties, makes this one of the most thrilling and interesting railroad stories.

The count has several letters of introduction to different clubs which the bug relieves him of; also changes clothes with him. The count is arrested as an escaped convict, while the bug takes advantage of the count's cards and letters and proceeds to enjoy himself until caught cheating at cards. He is thrown out the window. He wanders down the street and some mischievous boys place roller skates on his feet. The bug finds that he cannot control the skates, and the skates take him back to jail. He awakes to find it all was a dream.

ON ACCOUNT OF A HANDKERCHIEF (Oct. 16).—Jack and Kitty, newlyweds, take an apartment uptown. Soon after they meet in front of their house Miss Inwood, who is an old friend of Jack's. A day or two later Miss Inwood, putting her initials on her handkerchief by the window, leaves the room and the handkerchief blows out into the court and into Jack and Kitty's apartment. Kitty comes home and finds the handkerchief and, thinking her husband has had Miss Inwood in the apartment, starts trouble. Kitty accuses Jack and Miss Inwood, but everything is explained in the end by Nora, a servant girl, who saw the handkerchief blown out of one window into the other.

THANHOUSER.

DOTTY THE DANCER (Oct. 13).—A young singer in a musical comedy company attended a reception at a rich man's house as one of the "talent" and fell deeply in love with the daughter of the house. His affection was reciprocated, but the girl's father firmly opposed any alliance between his daughter and the actor.

The star of the young man's company, a celebrated dancer, was a creature of moods. She became violently angry when the young singer mimicked her steps, and left the theater in a rage just as the opening performance was about to begin. The manager was in despair, but the young man volunteered as a substitute and won approval by his excellent dancing and superb makeup.

Among those favorably impressed with his talent was the father of the girl he loved. He witnessed the performance from the orchestra and later sent his card to the dancer. The latter invited him to call, carried out the joke, assisted by several of his friends, and soon the foolish old man was convinced he was deeply in love.

So he wrote to the "Divine Cleo," saying, "I am determined that you must become a member of my family. May I hope?" To which the dancer coyly replied that she was willing to be married if the old man's daughter consented. When the father arrived with the minister and his daughter there was a wedding, but he only figured as spectator. He couldn't object, for he didn't dare to go back on his note.

WHEN MERCY TEMPERS JUSTICE (Oct. 15).—The judge had a long calendar, he was weary and inclined to be short in his answers to those who came before him. He brightened up for a moment when a well-known banker was brought before him. This man was an old clubmate, and the charge of crooked dealing, brought by some ragged depositors, seemed to the court ridiculous. He said so and fixed the bail at a trifling figure, and at that almost apologized to the dignified prisoner.

The next in line was a wretched-looking man who had stolen a bottle of milk from a dairy wagon. He did not deny his guilt, but stated that his wife and children were starving. Many times before had the judge heard that excuse, and it only wearied him now. Impatiently he ordered the wife to cease pleading for the man, and he sent the self-confessed thief to Blackwell's Island.

That night the judge sat in his well furnished dining-room, smoking a cigar after dinner. Idly his thoughts went to the courtroom, and he lightly remembered the statue of Justice which adorned the chamber.

"I wonder," he mused, "I wonder what that figure thinks of my decisions, and what it would do in my place."

Then it seemed that the courtroom was right there in front of him, and that the figure of Justice was alive. It came down from its pedestal, and in a moment was in the dining-room opposite him.

Justice did NOT like his court rulings. That was clear at once, and the judge found that Justice was a most unpleasant companion, who insisted on taking the jurist out to see the victims of his decisions.

It was a most uncomfortable night. The judge was not interested and politely hinted so. Then the anger of Justice was aroused and the unfortunate judge found himself alone in the streets, his fine clothing rags, and he himself as friendless as many of the unfortunates who had appeared before him. When he tried to re-enter his house he was urdely turned away. After wandering around for many hours the pangs of hunger assailed him, and he stole some rolls which he saw left at an areaway. He was promptly arrested, taken before a judge who looked and acted as he had done himself on the bench, and despite his pleas for mercy, was sent to Blackwell's Island.

In misfortune he learned humility, and found one friend, the poor man he had sent away for stealing for his starving family. Soon the judge realized that strict unswerving justice is sometimes as bad as injustice, and that only when justice is tempered with mercy can it be rightly entitled to that name. Then—he found himself back in his dining-room again, a kinder, better, less arrogant judge, one who had learned the lesson all judges should know. He secured a pardon for the man who had stolen food, and from that time was more careful in his decisions, more thoughtful of the unfortunates who came before him. That was why, in the course of years, he won the title of "The Poor Man's Judge," and bore it with honor during his career on the bench.

FOR THE MIKADO (Oct. 18).—A Japanese nobleman was highly honored by the Mikado by being sent on a secret mission to obtain information concerning the plans of a foreign foe. Accompanied by his pretty young wife, he went to the enemy's country, where he hired a residence, and expressed his intention of making his home there. The information he sought was to be secured from a soldier of the enemy, who for a large sum of money had agreed to furnish data and papers which the Mikado desired. The envoy met with unexpected success at the outset, and flushed with his victory, began to dissipate, despite the remonstrances of his meek little wife.

An appointment had been made for him to meet the traitor outside the fort at midnight, when the Japanese was to exchange a bag of gold for the papers. The Jap was not able to be there at the appointed time, being sodden with drink, and his wife, who found him helpless in the library of their home, realized that the Mikado's mission was in danger of becoming a failure at the last moment.

The woman, although usually meek and timid, determined to take his place. She disguised herself in a suit of her husband's clothes, and kept the appointment. Unfortunately for her they were discovered, and as she escaped, she was shot and mortally wounded by a sentry. The importance of her mission nerved her on, however, and she managed to elude her pursuers and reached her home.

There she aroused her drunken husband, told him she had been successful, but that the searchers were close on her track, and urged him to flee while she would remain and delay the enemy. The man, startled into sobriety, did as she suggested, while the woman, discarding her disguise, arrayed herself in her native garb, and calmly waited for the soldiers to appear.

They questioned her without result, although they knew the man they sought lived there, for the traitor had made full confession. She laughingly told them that her husband "was out," and she did not know when he would return. Finally, the officer in charge, enraged because a search of the house had revealed nothing, seized her roughly by the shoulder and threatened to lock her up. He felt something warm and sticky on his hand. He looked at it and saw it was blood. Then he realized that the person he sought stood before him.

The woman made no effort now to conceal the truth. She knew that death was only a matter of a few minutes, but she did not regret it. Her last moments were made happy by a realization that the mission had ben a success, and she died happy because she had been able to lay down her life for the Mikado.

THE GOLD BRICK (Oct. 16).—Snakey Snodgrass conceives a scheme with which to defraud the crooks of New York. He purchases enough gold to make a brick worth about fifteen thousand dollars. With this he comes to New York City, opens an office as a "Gold Expert" and sends out word to the crooks and swindlers that he has discovered a new metal which will pass as gold. He uses the real gold brick with which to make all the jeweler's tests, with chemicals, etc. Then he has an assistant in a different place gilding bricks and preparing them for sale to the swindlers. The police learn of his activity and they raid his office. He grabs up a brick, which he believes to be the one of pure gold, and is a victim of his trickery, leaving the real one lying on the floor. After Snakey leaves in the custody of the officers, his assistant looks with disgust at the bricks and starts dumping them out of the window. Small boys amuse themselves by throwing the bricks around. Then they decide to put one which happens to be the genuine one under a silk hat, leaving it on a pavement. Various people kick the hat, and hurt their toes, and then laugh when they see the gold brick.

At last a broken down, ragged looking swindler comes out of a saloon door and discovers the gold brick. He takes up a position on a street corner to wait for some greenhorn or rube. Silas Perkins, of Pumpkin Center, who has sold his farm for a thousand dollars comes into town to live with his daughter and her husband, who is a young chemist. Silas is accosted by the swindler, who eventually sells him the real gold brick for a thousand dollars. Silas proceeds to his daughter's house, where he tells them of his purchase. They are heart-broken, and when he learns that he has fallen victim to a simple fraud, the old man is so overcome by the loss of his money that he takes to his bed. His son-in-law calls the doctor, who orders them to tell him that the brick is real gold, in order to cheer him up and bring him back to health.

The son-in-law gets some of his chemicals, brings them to the table by the bedside and starts on his tests, planning to "jolly" the old man. His eyes bulge, and he discovers that it is real gold. The old fellow sits up and dons his clothes in a jiffy when he learns that it is true—and the son-in-law, the daughter and the old man hastily call a taxi-cab and hustle for the office of the U. S. metal assayer. There they sell the brick for its true value, and the last view is that of the old farmer telling the story of its purchase to the official chemist, while the son and daughter join them in merry laughter.

THE MAVERICK (Oct. 18).—Bessie Vale is a poor, homeless girl. She is about to be arrested for vagrancy when two confidence men step up and intercede for her, by telling the policeman that she is a sister of theirs. The confidence men take her to their boarding house and confide her to the mercy of a not over-scrupulous boarding-house mistress. The girl suspects nothing wrong until the two confidence men take her to a cabaret show, and then introduce her to Billy Taylor, a wealthy Western cattle man on a visit. Urged by the menacing glances of the confidence men, the girl encourages the Westerner, and in compliance with their silent urging invites him to her home. He is listening to her play the piano, when the two swindlers break into the room, waving revolvers. One of the men declares that the girl is his wife and he will have Bill arrested unless he pays a thousand dollars to him. Bessie begins to cry and Bill decides to give up his money to save her from publicity. He gives all he has. Bessie confesses that poverty had forced her into the trap of the rascals. He at first starts to call a policeman, then he relents and forgives. He asks where the men can be found, and she tells him at a saloon where the gang meets. She takes him there. Bill draws his revolver in triumph. Bill draws out his return ticket and then he has an idea. He turns to her, saying, "Little girl, you are a maverick, as I was. We're both in the wrong herd of cattle. Come out and share my ranch—in God's country."

MAJESTIC.

THE SIMPLE LIFE (Oct. 13).—To escape the snares of matchmaking mothers with marriageable daughters, Jack Vincent, a young millionaire, decides to "disappear" for a few weeks. For a few days he lives the life of a tramp. His wanderings bring him into the village of Bingtown, and on the road he comes upon "Cy" Smith, proprietor of the village grocery store, a victim of "speed mania." His wagon had just been upset, and his fresh market goods distributed along the road. Jack, seeing the old man's plight offers his aid. Together they set to work and when the task is completed, Smith, impressed by Jack's frank and engaging manner, offers him a position as clerk, $8.00 a week and board, Jack accepts the position.

Jack is introduced to Marie, Smith's daughter. She falls in love with Jack. Not only does she keep her love secret, but from her actions Jack decides she dislikes him. This pains him for he has come to love the village and its inhabitants. In a village such as Bingtown, "house parties" are considered quite the proper thing and two weeks after entering the employ of Smith, Jack receives an invitation to attend one. He tries to beg off saying he has no "party suit." His excuse is overheard by Marie and it troubles her. She wants him to attend the party.

While trying to devise ways and means to get Jack to the party, an advertisement catches her eye "Suits $10.00, will include shoes, hat, shirt, collar and tie." Marie hurries to her room and finds it will take every penny of her savings, but she does not hesitate. By a ruse she secures Jack's measurements and sends off for the suit. When it arrives she examines it eagerly and then joyfully places it on Jack's bed. When Jack discovers the "creation" he is almost overcome. He knows instinctively that Marie is the guilty party and rather than offend her he decides to attend the party arrayed in his new suit. He dons it and as he suspected, it is a glorious misfit.

While the merriment is at its height, it is discovered that Jack is the missing millionaire for whom his friends had instituted a thorough search. Marie is heartbroken but Jack convinces her that money is not everything in this little world of ours.

ALL FOR JIM (Oct. 15).—Jim Goodman is a hard working fireman in a factory. One day, the chief engineer is discharged for drunkeness and Jim applies to the boss for his position, telling him he has the strength. The boss replies it is brains, not muscle that is required. Jim goes home that night discouraged and tells his wife that he doesn't see any chance for an advancement as he hasn't an education. She hits upon an idea and plans for him to attend night school and learn a trade. So Jim starts to school and is progressing favorably, but Bess, his wife, finds the expense too heavy so decides, unknown to Jim, to take in sewing. She answers an "ad" and takes home shirts from a factory, working early and late to earn a little extra money for Jim.

In the meantime, Jim becomes infatuated with a silly, but pretty girl at the night school and as he comes home only to find Bess worn out, he naturally finds more pleasure in the other girl's society. At last Bess' eyes give out from overwork and she is brought home temporarily blind by the foreman. Jim enters unexpectedly, and seeing the strange man bending over his wife, rushes to strike him, when he sees his wife is blind. He opens her hand and sees the pay envelope, and realizes it has all been for him. He drops on his knees in shame, but Bess, woman-like, forgives him.

NOTICE To Importers of Feature Subjects, Dupers, and Otherwise, Infringers of U. S. Copyrighted Photoplays.

THE undersigned have secured from the foremost copyright law authority in this country a legal interpretation of the new copyright law, as pertains to motion picture plays, which was passed August 24, 1912.

He states, without a single qualification, that any importer of a feature which has been duly copyrighted in the United States under the provisions of the new law, is as guilty of violation and consequent conviction therefor, as though he had actually duped the copyrighted material.

There are no limitations as to where the film is made. It can only be made for sale or vended in the United States by the holders of the United States copyright.

So this new copyright law gives absolute protection to the holder thereof. There are no loopholes through which the foxily-inclined may crawl or profit. Quite the contrary, they assume a heavy and expensive risk.

Upon the basis of our legal advice we will immediately seize any and every reported or found infringement against our copyrights. This in a word means that only such purchases as are made from the American sales agency, "UNIVERSAL FEATURES," who hold all United States Copyrights, are secured against injunction or seizure.

After doing a good day's damage, Zigoto is finally confronted by the station master and the repentant employees, who then resume their labors, after having vented their anger upon Zigoto.

Elsie sticks to her lover and the father finally comes to see her and her beloved and tells her that his attitude was merely a test of her affection and that she will continue to be his heiress.

THE HOODOO LETTER (Oct. 15).—Weary Willie, noting the ease of a crippled street beggar in obtaining alms of passers-by, by the aid of a letter, decides that he too shall secure one of these "sesames" to fortune without work. He chances to pass an office window, where inside he sees a man busily writing. He enters the office and asks the man to write him a note, for Weary is what is called an illiterate. Now, the man at the desk is none other than the Health Officer of the town and a bit of an absent-minded man is he.

When Weary makes his strange request, he laughs and proceeds with his work at hand. This finished, he in his absent-mindedness hands it to Weary, though he had meant it for another person. Weary reaches the street, and in kenest anticipation of a silver shower, he hands his letter to the first passer-by. The man reads it, fear flashes into his face as he shoves the letter back into Weary's hand and runs down the street yelling for the police. As the cry of "police" has ever been the cue for Weary to disappear, he does.

Everyone he displays the letter to either runs from him or pounds him and chases him out of sight. All this is most mysterious to him till at last he is cornered by the village braves and driven ahead to the Village Pest House. The letter he had received read as follows: "Admit bearer to Pest House as smallpox suspect.

"Henry Saxe, M. D.,
"Dept. of Infectious Diseases."

ONE ON JONES (Oct. 15).—Here is another corking little comedy of snappy action which puts over a screaming story.

CAPRICES OF FORTUNE—2 Reels (Oct. 17).—Will Steadman, a hopeful but a mengerly endowed young man, was madly in love with his wealthy second cousin, Bertha Steadman. He has asked her mother for her hand and she reminds him that his present station forbids such a union. Thereupon he asks: "Auntie, if I make my fortune, may I hope to marry Bertha?" Auntie makes a very noncommittal reply but with that, Will starts out to seek his fortune.

Clara, a maid at the Steadman's, has long been secretly in love with Will. She is nearby and cannot help but hear Will as he asks for the hand of Bertha. Her hope of months turns to havoc in her heart, desire is mastered by fear till she hears the aunt reply.

Will is away now and Clara steals to the room which once was his, to fondle the things he had touched and gather little souvenirs he had left behind. It was thus she came to find a bit of a torn up portrait of Will and an old lottery ticket which he had forgotten.

Will goes first to Homestead in Pennsylvania, hoping to find something there where millionaires have been made in a day. But nothing of so fabulous a happening meets his arrival there. Quite to the contrary of his hopes, he meets an affable stranger who garners in every penny the poor fellow possesses. He leaves the land of steel and journeys South among the Knights of the Road. Then he heads West, where after one of his ejections from the freight he was riding, he meets with a crazy old prospector, who interests him with his talk of gold that is going to rot. But the truth is soon learned and visions of the girl he can't forget push him on into Mexico.

He turns cowboy and his adventures are many, till one day a letter is handed him from home. It is from Clara, telling him a lottery ticket which she had found in his room has won the capital prize. To Will this means he has now the fortune by which he can sue again for the hand of Bertha. But in his absence she has married.

He arrives back home eager to see his aunt and tell of his fortune. Then he is told that she now belongs to another. Then he comes to Clara to receive his lottery fortune and she unable to withhold her feelings, breaks down in tears. So Dan Cupid lifts the veil which had hung before his eyes, and shames him. Dame Fortune presents him with what she had already left at his door. One man takes one little true-hearted girl in his arms, nothing is said, but everything is realized. And the greatest little god and the funniest old dame go marching off to continue their eternal labors.

THE OLD PROFESSOR (Oct. 20).—George Dervil, a young medical student, rescues the granddaughter of an old professor of his college from the path of a runaway team. Being most modest, he does not wait to be congratulated or identified by any of the crowd which gathers around. A few days later he chances to meet the old professor in a book store. There is just one left of a certain book which each desires to buy and their rivalry ends in mean words.

The days of George's final examination are at hand and a friend gives him a letter to the professor, which asks that the old gentleman extend George such favors as he can. The old professor recognizes George as the young man with whom he had the altercation in the bookstore and answers that he may expect fairness, but no favors.

Dejectedly, the young fellow prepares to leave when the little granddaughter happens to enter the room and recognizes George as her rescuer. She tells her grandfather of his heroic act and the heart of the professor softens. The day of final examination arrives. George is seated before the old teacher, who assumes an air of severity which seems to signify to the student that hard impossible questions are ahead. Though discouraged he does not lose hope.

That evening the granddaughter and her governess visit him. He thinks they mean to thank him for his stopping the runaway, but the child hands him a letter, a notice that he passed his examination with honors. And then the old professor pays him a visit, to both thank and congratulate him.

She is treated like a queen, and is engaged at an enormous salary. She travels in a private pullman. The landlords, clerks, bellboys of the finest hotels bow down to her. She dines in her own private dining room with several waiters in attendance on her. They even refuse her tips. At the great theater she is playing at, her name is over the door. She has even her own private entrance, with her name on it. Then she awakens. She makes up her mind to go and answer the advertisement. She is shown into a dingy office and she signs a contract for $20 per week. She leaves her luxurious home and meets all the trials and tribulations of being a member of a "bum" repertoire show. They get no money. They are treated like dogs in the "tank towns." The manager of the show skips out and leaves them stranded. They start to walk the ties back to New York and Ruth is taken dangerously ill. The leading man of the company, who has fallen in love with Ruth, sends a message, through a doctor, to her parents. They arrive with their family physician and take Ruth home. There she convalesces, tears up her theatrical contract, and with a marriage with Hector looming in the near future, gives up all ideas of a theatrical career.

He and Mable's chum decide to play a joke on her by feigning that they are spooning. She takes the joke seriously and declares that she will have nothing more to do with him. The family sympathizes with him, when suddenly the father suggests that the young man disguise himself as an outcast and try to win her back. Complications ensue; Tom has an altercation with three hoboes and is getting decidedly the worst of it when the sheriff appears on the scene and arrests Tom, the hoboes having run from the scene. The sheriff takes him up to a nearby farm house when lo, his sweetheart Mable rushes out and throws herself into his arms. She then takes the handcuffs from the sheriff and herself puts them on her sweetheart, who is thus made her captive for life.

THE BRIDAL ROOM (Oct. 10).—Tom Walsh loves an office girl and is engaged to marry her. Unknown to her he furnishes two rooms in the old homestead, intending to surprise her after the marriage. But she jilts him, and on the day set for their wedding she runs away with another man, whom she marries. Tom is almost insane with rage and grief and in his terrible agony he demolishes the furnishings of one room and rushes into the bridal chamber to destroy that also, but his old mother calms him and he locks the room with a resolve that it shall never be opened unless his bride who was to be returns. Time passes and he becomes wealthy and she almost a beggar. Ruined in health she returns to her home town and by a strange freak of fate happens to overhear an Italian, whom Tom has discharged from one of the quarries which he now owns, threaten his life. Weary and in poor health she struggles to the scene of the attempted murder and saves her former sweetheart's life, but in so doing she is badly wounded. Tom carries her into his home, unlocks the bridal chamber which for five years had been closed. A reconciliation is effected and the oil of peace and joy has calmed the sea of their turbulent lives.

THE WRECKERS (Oct. 7).—The scene is laid in a little fishing village located on a rocky coast and just around a point from the lighthouse. For several years past a number of vessels have been wrecked in a mysterious manner between the village and the lighthouse. There were several well-known fishermen in the place, who could have told why if they wished, and could have told of the beacon fire on a ledge of rock, between the two projecting cliffs beyond the town, which stood at the edge of the sea and whose top commanded a view far and near. The fire was only visible from the ocean side of the cliffs. These men were secretly wreckers and one of them had a young and innocent daughter, who never dreamed of her father's business. She had two lovers, the favored one a young sailor; the other was a young man above the village people in birth and education, and was an assistant to the old doctor there. He and his rival had been the best of friends until the girl made choice between them, when a quarrel leading to blows, followed. They were reconciled, however, through the girl's efforts, and one day went up to the top of the big cliff to see if they could discover any trace of a strange light that a sailor swore he saw the night before when coming in from sea. The young doctor came back alone, greatly agitated, and said his friend had stumbled and fallen over the edge of the cliff, and that he had called him, and descended to the water and searched, but could find no trace of him. They organized a rescue party, but the result was the same, and they decided the body had been washed out to sea. The girl still refused to believe her lover dead; but in a day or two the doctor was arrested, charged with throwing him over the cliff. He protested his innocence in vain, and at the trial the girl's father swore he saw two men struggling on the cliff top the fatal afternoon. That evidence settled it, and he was convicted. He was sentenced to be hung in one week from that day. The county seat was 50 miles inland, and no railroad of course. At the very last moment he was saved by the arrival of the supposed dead man, whose fall had landed him in the secret cave of the wreckers, and from which he was rescued by means of a dream which came to his sweetheart twice in one night. He was to be killed, the girl's father reluctantly consenting, but he escaped in time to prevent legal murder.

A BAD TANGLE (Oct. 12).—At the end of a tennis game, George and Ben, tired with their exertions decide to go in bathing. The girls desire them to continue playing. They refuse and manage to steal away, secure their bathing costumes and off to the river. The girls discover them and for a lark, Jessie steals George's suit, dons it and substitutes her own clothes, which much to his discomfiture, George is obliged to wear. It happens that at the time the change of clothing is made, the police have BETTY'S NIGHTMARE (Oct. 11).—Betty is the maid for a farmer's family but she longs for the life of an actress. She has an ardent lover in the person of John the hired man, but while really fond of him, her histrionic aspirations prevent her from fully reciprocating his affections.

The Indian Cure-All Medicine Company visits the nearest town and John and Betty drive over and attend a performance. During the "entertainment," the manager of the show while going his rounds selling his medicine, sees Betty and John and taken by her pretty face, he gives her a bottle. Betty is strongly impressed by the striking personality of this "great" man and returns home filled with a strange wonder at her good fortune.

She tries to induce the family to take some of the "cure-all," but as they one and all refuse, she takes several large doses herself. Then sitting down to peel potatoes for the evening meal she falls asleep and dreams. All of the tales of romance, adventure and bloodshed she had ever read went flying through her brain and she lived the most exciting, dramatic and weird life an actress ever experienced, finishing up by seeing her faithful John hanging from a railroad bridge with a train rushing over his head at the same moment that she herself is driven to a watery grave by her fiendish pursuers.

She awakens to find John splashing water in her face from a bucket of fresh well water. When she realizes that it has all been a horrible dream, she loses no time in convincing John of her unconditional love for him and her complete hatred for all things theatrical.

TO ERR IS HUMAN (Oct. 7).—Mr. Howard, a planter, receives a letter from his son Ralph, who has journeyed to New Orleans on a business trip. The letter states that his son is about to return home. The father informs his neighbors, Mr. Blair and his daughter Dorothy, of his son's intended return. They welcome the news, specially Dorothy who is in love with Ralph. Ralph takes the Mississippi River Steamer and while aboard he makes the acquaintance of a professional gambler, James Ballard, who has all the appearance of a gentleman and soon persuades Ralph to join in a game of cards. Ralph is unlucky and loses all his money and is forced to give Ballard an I. O. U. for the money borrowed from him.

Ralph arrives home and is given a hearty welcome. He is so much taken up with his love affair with Dorothy that he forgets the time is drawing near when he must make good the payment of the I. O. U. given to Ballard. He receives a letter from Ballard, stating that he will pay Ralph a visit and at the same time collect the money due him. Ralph is at a loss as to what to do, he realizes that he dare not ask his father for the money.

Ballard arrives and Ralph is forced to be civil to him. Ballard gives him a little more time to get the money. Ballard is introduced to Dorothy and taken by her good looks proceeds at once to make a conquest. Of this Ralph disapproves which causes a quarrel. Ballard threatens Ralph, and declares that he will wait till evening for the money, if he don't get it he will inform Ralph's father and try to collect it from him.

Ralph who has seen his father get some money from a planter decides to take some of it and pay Ballard, that evening the announcement of the engagement between Dorothy and Ralph is about to take place. While the guests are in the reception room, Ralph goes to his father's desk and secures some of the money. He is seen by Remus, an old servant who realizes that Ralph is committing an act of theft. Ralph goes to his room, nervous and agitated; the old servant goes there to summon Ralph, at his father's wish, sees the money in the drawer of Ralph's bureau where Ralph has hastily placed it. After Ralph leaves the room the old servant, in order to save Ralph, takes the money with the intention of returning it to the library desk. Remus goes to the library and as he is about to place the money in the desk Mr. Howard enters the library. Remus surprised puts the money in his own pocket, intending to place it in the desk as soon as the opportunity prevails. Mr. Howard discovers the absence of the money and as suspicion points to Remus, he is questioned and fearing that his young master will be found out, takes the blame on himself, confesses in order to save Ralph, hands over the money to Mr. Howard who, shocked at his old servant's action is lenient with him, but tells Remus he will have to leave the house at once. Ralph learns of Remus' confession of guilt and feels remorseful. He confesses to his father who, learning of his son's motive for his act, forgives him. Mr. Howard pays his son's I. O. U. and Ballard is informed that his presence is not desired in the house. Both father and son appreciate Remus' generous act. The announcement of the engagement takes place.

EMPLOYER'S LIABILITY (Oct. 7).—Lawrence Hulbert is an ambitious young lawyer. An accident occurs at one of the mines of the rich Western Mines Development Company, and Lawrence is entrusted with the mission of securing the signature of the injured man, John Strand, to a document releasing the company from actions for damages.

Despite the poor wife's appeal, John, in his sickness signs the document and, leaving one copy of the precious document with Mrs. Strand, Lawrence takes the other to the President, who is delighted at his success and appoints him attorney for the company.

Lawrence advances rapidly, and John goes down correspondingly quickly. Driven to desperation, John resolves to take Lawrence's life and goes to his home at night to fulfill his intentions. He forces an entrance, and, while waiting for Lawrence to appear, he is faced by Mrs. Hulbert. She offers him money, which he refuses, and finally gets his tale from him. John details her husband's infamies and gives her a list of families Lawrence has helped to poverty and despair. Mrs. Hulbert is astounded and crushed and believes it all against her will.

Lawrence enters and Mrs. Hulbert prevents John from killing him. She forces her husband to acknowledge the truth. She tells him her love is dead and that her future will be devoted to those whose lives Lawrence has helped to make barren.

HIS ONLY SON (Oct. 9).—Bob Madden returns home slightly intoxicated and his father angrily commands him to leave the place and shift for himself. The next morning he goes, leaving his father a note: "Dear Dad:—I am going out West and try to make a man of myself. I hope some day you will be proud of me. Your son, Bob." His father relents and, after tracing him to the station, buys a ticket for the same place. In the meanwhile, Bob has arrived, and reading a notice that cowboys with outfits are wanted on the Carter ranch, he buys an outfit from a man near the station and starts for the Carter ranch. However, the foreman will not have him, as he confesses that he cannot rope, so Bob rides on until he comes upon an Outlaw's Camp, and is glad to accept their rough hospitality.

In the meanwhile, the ranchman, Joseph Carter, receives his new automobile, but being unable to take his daughter, Jessie, sends her with the foreman for a ride. The machine breaks down and the chauffeur returns for parts, while the foreman takes his opportunity to force his attentions upon Jessie, her cries bring Bob and the outlaws to the scene. The foreman recognizes the outlaw chief and returning to the ranch, starts out at the head of the cowboys to capture the band. Bob has loaned Jessie his horse to return home, and the outlaws have just broke camp, so when the foreman and the boys return they only succeed in capturing Bob and hustle him off as an outlaw. Jessie arrives at the ranch, learns where the boys have gone, so together with her father, rides to the rescue, arriving just as his father comes along. The two fathers learn that they are old friends. The man at the station recognizes Bob, and general rejoicing takes place.

LOVE AND A LEMON (Oct. 11).—John Hobbs is a candidate for sheriff, so is Sam Barton. John is a favorite in the vicinity, but Barton has the political pull. Things look none too well for John, when Mary Lemon arrives to visit her brother's ranch. Mary is a suffragette. Having come to the country for a rest from men and work, she promptly forms an attachment for John and starts right in to turn a probable defeat into a sure victory.

Mary calls a meeting and the boys attend anticipating some amusement. They leave enthusiastic about Mary's charming personality and many of them lukewarm in their adherence to Barton. Mary is not satisfied, election day is at hand and the fight is not won. Mary being a suffragette and a lady, has a large stock of quotations at her command. She remembers one: "The way to a man's heart is through his stomach." Mary buys up all the lemons on the market and prays for high temperature on election day. Her prayer is answered and the day brings forth many violent thirsts and no saloons open. Mary opens a lemonade booth near the polls, free drinks for the adherents of John Hobbs. The temperature and the thirsts rise, men are tempted and fall, they procure free and harmless drinks and a badge bearing the caption: "Vote for John Hobbs." The election is won by lemonade and John is duly grateful, and when the last spectator is gone, shows it in the usual manner of a man wanting a girl for life, and things do not look rosy for Mary's future career as an active suffragette.

ORPHANS (Oct. 8).—Lilly and Ned Thomas are orphans and live in a garret. They are very poor. Ned is ill and Lilly, to get food for him, takes the last thing of value they possess—a locket with their mother's picture in it to pawn. Lilly enters the pawnshop, but the clerk refuses to take the locket. Lilly on her way home finds a white bull terrier, which she brings to Ned. She tells him that she was unable to pawn the locket, but brought the dog she found, so that he may amuse himself with it.

While she is preparing milk and bread for the three, Mrs. Murphy, a neighbor, looks in. She sees their poverty and brings them some fruit and a newspaper. In looking over the paper, Ned sees the advertisement for the lost dog. Lilly takes it to the address, but the owner refuses to give her the reward offered. When Lilly arrives home, Mrs. Murphy tells her that a lady by the name of Mrs. Van Dyk has been inquiring for her and Ned, and that she will return in a short while. In due time, Mrs. Van Dyk appears. She shows the advertisement to the young people and says that she has come to give them the reward offered for the return of the dog. Seeing that Ned is ill, she sends Mrs. Murphy for food and medicine. Mrs. Van Dyk notices Lilly's locket on the table and, looking inside of it, sees a portrait of a lady. Upon asking Lilly the name she learns that it is the young people's mother. Mrs. Van Dyk shows great delight at hearing this and tells Ned and Lily that she is their aunt. They are taken away in Mrs. Van Dyk's automobile, leaving Mrs. Murphy on the doorstep waving a fond adieu.

BISON.

WHEN UNCLE SAM WAS YOUNG (Oct. 5).—Gervais Delemere and Sydney Archdale, Sr., are lifelong friends. Archdale's son, Sydney, and Constance Delemere are affianced. One day as the friends are playing chess, an Indian runner brings a message bearing the information that King George III has directed that a tax of three pence per pound be put upon tea. The message virtually presages a call to arms. The men argue violently, Archdale asserting the tax an outrage and Delemere advancing strong Royalist principles. The men part enemies and the young people are forbidden to see each other.

Hostilities start and Archdale shows his partisanship by drilling recruits. Delemere watches his daughter Constance carefully, he introduces her to Captain Devereaux and intimates to her that it will please him if she will show him attention.

Delemere and Constance are out riding, when they hear a child crying. They investigate and find a six-year-old boy apparently deserted. Constance insists upon taking the child home with her. He is the son of Captain Devereaux, who has deserted little Phillip after he has struck down his Indian wife, Osano, leaving her apparently dead. Osana recovers and vows vengeance after her kind. Constance is unaware of the child's identity. Delemere accompanies Capt. Devereaux East in answer to the call for men to serve the King. Devereaux presents Constance with a charm from his chain as a remembrance. Constance accepts it to please her father. Constance cannot face the loneliness, and accompanied by her servants she starts for Boston, accompanied by the boy, to join her father.

Arriving at a blockhouse, Constance requests accommodations for the night. It is acceded to. The blockhouse is attacked and after a bitter fight the survivors are taken prisoners by the Indians. One man escapes and, arriving at Boston, he seeks out Delemere, who receives a message from General Gage to the Mohawk chief, Main Rouge, asking him to deliver up his daughter. Delemere is on his way to Connecticut, when he is arrested for a spy by American soldiers and put into jail.

In the meantime Constance is taken to the tepee of Chief Main Rouge, where she is found by Osano, the deserted wife of Devereaux. Osano recognizes the charm, and is about to kill Constance, but fearing detection and death, she conducts the white girl to the woods and leaves her to her fate. Constance wanders about and is found in an exhausted condition by a Quaker family and is taken by them to Boston. The Archdales, father and son, are very active in the interests of the cause. Archdale, junior, leads the Boston tea party, overpowers the English crew and throws the tea chests overboard. He is also in command at the battle of Bunker Hill, from which he retreats fighting hard.

Constance visits her father in prison and secures an interview with General Washington. She obtains an order for Delemere's release.

The Declaration of Independence is signed. Delemere, Constance and the boy Phillip settle down happily in a cottage and the lad is devoted to his protectress. One afternoon Constance and the boy are seen by Osano, who attacks Constance with a knife. Phillip tries to defend her and thwarts her long enough to allow of her rescue by Sydney Archdale and his father. The squaw falls and the knife enters her side. They carry the woman to Delemere's cottage, where they find Devereaux, who has just returned from England. Osano recognizes Devereaux and denounces him as the husband who deserted her. In a fit of rage Devereaux draws his sword and lunges at Sydney, to whom Constance has run. Archdale, Sr., kills Devereaux. Osano sees the tribal mark on Phillip's arm and tells Constance he is her son. The boy runs to his protectress. The old men are reconciled and the way is open for the marriage of Constance and Sydney.

THE INDIAN RAIDERS (Oct. 8).—The Thomas family are the owners of a large horse ranch, on the borders of New Mexico. A neighboring band of Apaches, under the famous Geronimo, had for several years been at peace, consequently the Thomas ranch was in a flourishing condition. Tom, the foreman, and Jerry, one of his trusted lieutenants, are rivals for the hand of Jess, the ranch owner's daughter. The dainty little miss shows a preference for Tom. Jerry being of a naturally sullen and morose disposition, takes this preference with ill grace.

Tom and Jess go for a ride, followed by Jerry. The evening meal is the scene of the announcement of Tom's happiness. But the next morning, Jerry, unable to restrain his disappointment, accuses Jess in an insulting manner, whereupon Tom, coming up unexpectedly knocks him down. Further squabbles are put an end to by the sudden discovery that Geronimo and his raiding band have visited the Thomas corral by night and left it clean of horses.

Tom and Jerry lay aside their grievances and go out side by side to fight the common enemy. Exciting scenes follow, where the horses are recovered, Geronimo and his band are routed and the cowboys return victorious. How Tom and Jerry settle their grievances, and how Jerry determines to play a man's part and go away, leaving Tom to his deserved reward, are vividly told in the final scenes of this photoplay.

THE TATTOO (Oct. 12).—Joe Carlisle sells his trading vessel and visits his friends, the Marks family. He finds that Ed. Marks, the eldest boy, is sick and when the doctor recommends that he go West, Joe persuades the family to join him. They agree and Joe together with Mrs. Marks, Ed and his sister Jess, and the two children Dick and Gertie, start in a covered camp wagon. On the way they are attacked by Indians, but beat them off. The children admire the tattoo mark on Joe's arm and persuade him to tattoo their arms in the same way.

They build a log cabin and settle down to Western life, keeping on good terms with the surrounding Indians, until one day Joe surprises Moon Face stealing a hatchet and orders him off the place. Moon Face treasures a grudge and one day swoops down upon the children while they are at play and carries off little Gertie. Dick runs home with the news and the Indian is pursued, but without success. The family mourn the loss of Gertie.

Ten years pass by and Dick grows into a handsome youth. He goes out hunting with his chum Cy. They happen on an Indian camp and are both smitten with the charms of the Chief's daughter, Star Eyes. Their visits are repeated and Dick notes with regret that Cy possesses the first place in the girl's affections. Cy asks the Chief for the hand of Star Eyes and is ordered away. Star Eyes runs away and joins Cy. The escape is discovered and several Indians follow them and, in a running fight, Cy is wounded in the arm. Star Eyes, from their stand point of vantage, keeps the Indians at bay until a posse of cowboys, led by Dick and Joe appears and the Indians are routed. Star Eyes is wounded in the arm, and when Joe splits her sleeve he discovers the tattoo mark and Star Eyes is no more. But Gertrude takes her place and the family rejoice.

MILANO.

THE GYPSY SPY (Oct. 12).—Two members of the French secret service department are commissioned to procure the plans of a submarine boat invented by and known to be in the possession of the Commander of the Hornet, a foreign cruiser. On the way to the port at which the cruiser is stationed, their attention is attracted by a band of gypsies and they are greatly impressed by the beauty of one of the gypsy girls. They stop and approach her under the pretext of having their fortunes told. She manifests a rare intelligence and the men, realizing the value such a woman could be to them in their work, gain her consent to meet them at an appointed place that night.

Zulema, gypsy girl, elated at being able to leave her old life, bids her companions good-bye, and her old mother presents her with an amulet, placing it about her neck, and informing her daughter: "This amulet contains a deadly poison. In time of trouble or danger it may protect you." Under the skillful guidance of the trained political spies, Zulema proves herself an apt pupil, and in a short time is transformed into a distinguished looking social leader. The secret agents receive information from their chief, that the Commander would attend the ball at the embassy and plan to have Zulema fascinate him.

Their plan works better than they anticipate, for it is a case of love at first sight with the Commander. And then, far from guessing their identity, the Commander inquires of the secret agents about Zulema. He is informed that she is a very wealthy widow of excellent family. After being introduced to the "charming widow," he invites her to take a boat ride with him the following afternoon and she accepts. The following day finds the Commander on his trip over the tranquil waters of the bay with Zulema at his side. On landing from the boat, Zulema by design, steps into the shallow water and under the pretext of drying her gown, gains admission to the Commander's apartment. Left alone, Zulema searches for the plans wanted by the secret agents, but her search is fruitless. Taking leave of the Commander, the girl returns to her companions and reports her failure.

But they have not counted on the Commander, for the brave sailor, braver in her absence, immediately dispatches an ardent proposal of marriage to his enchantress. Zulema accepts the Commander and soon develops a deep love for her husband, which makes her forget the odious agreement she has signed. But the agents do not forget and they lose no time in calling and reminding her of her promise. They allow her no alternative than to deliver the plans to them on pain of destroying her happiness by revealing her origin and position. In despair, she carefully searches her husband's desk and in the drawers of the bureau, while the secret service agents wait outside in an automobile.

Her husband returns unexpectedly, catches her in the act of searching through his papers and is quick to apprehend what she is looking for and, while he looks through his desk to make sure his precious plans have not been made away with, Zulema, realizing her disloyalty, seeks refuge from her shame by attempting to take the contents of the amulet which she has constantly worn.

Her actions attract her husband's attention, who prevents the desperate woman from taking her life just in the nick of time. Zulema confesses all to the man she loves and was almost forced to betray; but realizing that her action was forced upon her he readily forgives her and promises to take her where she will be safe from the secret service agents for all time.

KEYSTONE

STOLEN GLORY (Oct. 14).—Warner is an old veteran in love with the widow Simpson. His rival is an old farmer, named Burns. Warner stands in front of the old soldiers' home, telling a crowd of old veterans of the battles he took part in, and as he unfolds the tales the scenes are depicted in the film.

Burns, with rake in his hand, listens doubtfully, makes a few sarcastic remarks and walks away. Meeting the widow Simpson he dallies awhile, and she shows him an article in the newspaper regarding the coming arrangements for the big G. A. R. parade. Burns tells her he is an old veteran, and relates the thrilling experiences he had in the army, which are shown on the screen. Warner comes up and drives Burns away.

The day of the parade arrives. Warner, arrayed in all the splendor of a faded uniform exhibits upon his breast a dozen medals. Meeting Mrs. Simpson he takes his coat off and lays it on top of a cannon while he points to each medal and explains how he won it. He discovers that one of the medals is missing, and runs pell-mell back to the home to look for it, leaving his coat behind. Mrs. Simpson saunters off and Burns comes on. The coat gives him an idea, and quickly donning it he secures a cap and goes to the parade.

Warner comes back with the missing medal, and is enraged to learn that his coat has been stolen. The street parade is then shown, with the soldiers, bands, zonaves, etc., and the old veterans, cheered by thousands of spectators along the line of march. Burns takes his place in the ranks, with his chest thrown out and carrying two small flags in his hands. Mrs. Simpson occupies a conspicuous position in the grand stand and cheers the supposed veteran as he struts by.

Warner suspects that Burns has his coat and looks for him at the parade. He interrupts the marchers and becomes involved with the marshals, but he finally spies Burns and makes a dive for him. Burns sees him and dodges in and out of the parade, with Warner hot on his trail. He finally runs back to the soldiers' home, where he divests himself of the coat, when Warner comes panting up with his heavy cane in his hand. He attempts to strike Burns, who heroically protects himself by placing the flag on his chest. Mrs. Simpson comes along and by clever coquetry manages to subdue the two angry old men and to make them shake hands.

THE SHERIFF'S ADOPTED CHILD (Oct. 16).—The sheriff lives with his sister, and is engaged in running down an unknown bandit who has been quite active in the district. It develops that Jim Brown, a poor miner, who has lost his wife and is in straitened circumstances, has become embittered at the world and is the bandit, living alone with his little boy, Tom. Exciting scenes are shown as the sheriff finally trails his man to the cabin. Brown sees the posse coming and gets away, but is captured later.

Touched by the grief of the little boy, the sheriff takes Tom home and gives him a home. The boy tosses in his bed, unable to sleep as he thinks of his father in jail. He cautiously gets up and, securing a rope, a file and his father's belt and pistols, makes his way to the barred window and manages to hand them to his father.

Securing his horse he gallops away, ridinghard all night. The devotion of his boy, and the bigheartedness of the sheriff have shamed him beyond measure, and he writes the sheriff a letter telling him that henceforth he will follow the right path, and when he has redeemed himself he will send for Tom.

(N. Y. M. P. C.).

THE VENGEANCE OF FATE (2 reels—Oct. 18).—Hazel Phillips, a young girl, is courted by two young men, Evans and Porter, in a western town. She favors Porter, and the two are married. Evans conceals his chagrin and jealousy, and continues as a friend of the young couple. One day a prospector comes into town with a bag of gold dust and nuggets, and tells an interested crowd of the big strike made in the southwest. Evans decides to seek his fortune there, and persuades Porter to accompany him. Hazel consents, and bids her husband an affectionate farewell.

The two men strike through the desert, and after months of hardship and privation Porter finally finds gold. His extreme jealousy has made Evans content to have Porter with him, as he gloated to himself that he was keeping him away from Hazel. When Porter runs in with the glad news, Evans becomes madly angered, as he realizes that Porter will go back to his wife with a fortune. An insane rage seizes him as he realizes how happy they will be. Before the astonished Porter can defend himself, Evans leaps upon him and strikes him to the earth with the butt of his pistol. The injured man staggers to his feet, but is no match for the infuriated Evans, who rains blow after blow upon his partner's head. Porter sinks to the ground, and Evans leaves him for dead.

Evans goes to Hazel and tells her a false story of how Porter died of illness; how he nursed him through it all, and how he had come to convey her husband's dying message to her. Porter is found by a tribe of Indians and nursed back to life. He recovers his health and strength but his memory is a blank, and he is adopted into the tribe. Evans goes back to the gold mine and works it. Knowing that Hazel will soon be in want, having lost her parents and with a baby to support, he lays his trap cunningly. When he goes back to ask her to marry him he finally wins her consent by persuading her it is for the good of her baby, and she accompanies him back to the wild, western country, where he has built a cabin.

A few days after her arrival, the baby wanders off into the woods and is playing on the banks of a brook when it is taken by Indians. As they are hurrying away with the child Porter appears, and the sight of the innocent baby arouses him. Not knowing that it is his own child, he makes them set her free, and she runs home with a tale which her mother believes is only childish imagination. Silently and noiselessly, Porter watches the woman through the window, and the sight of her face touches his slumbering memory, but does not awaken it. Troubled, he goes back to the camp, unable to untangle the confused thoughts which crowd upon his brain.

At this time the government agent, accompanied by an escort of soldiers, calls upon the Indians and serves notice on them to vacate the land and move to a reservation. The Indians resent the order, and wild disorder prevails in the village. Somebody strikes a blow, ready weapons spring forth, and in a moment an avalanche of redskins throw themselves upon the soldiers. Porter is struck on the head with the butt of a rifle, and the shock instantly clears his mind. The face of the woman in the cabin comes before him, and he knows it is Hazel.

The soldiers put up a futile resistance, and are soon despatched. Porter knows that it is but the beginning, that the Indians will go on the warpath, that they will hurl themselves upon the emigrants and settlers, leaving a trail of death and destruction in their wake—and he thinks of Hazel and the baby. He rushes away, hoping to reach the cabin before the rest of the tribe arrive, and succeeds. With the lapse of years, in his paint and feathers, he is not recognized by Hazel at first. From the window they se the long line of Indians thundering toward them. There is no time to be lost, so Porter throws a table behind the door, crowds Hazel and the baby behind it, and stands there unconcernedly. The Indians rush in and demolish and steal everything, but are adroitly kept from discovering the woman and child.

Evans comes home. The Indians hide, and as he approaches the cabin he is attacked and killed, his body stripped of his clothes, and the Indians go on. In the meantime the soldiers have been rushed to the scene of warfare, and corner the redskins, engaging them in a terrific fight, in which the Indians are badly defeated. Porter, with the cunning learned from the Indians, has managed to bring his wife and child to a place of safety, and the reunion is splendidly acted. The last scene shows the venegance of fate—the dilapidated cabin, with the bones of Evans lying in front, around which coyotes are sniffing.

CONVICTED BY HYPNOTISM.—Dr. George Landal and his wife, Blanche, were newly wedded. He was a young physician with brilliant prospects and splendid social connections. Blanche was the only daughter of Mr. Ravenne, a man of great wealth.

One evening, as George is leaving for the club, he takes Blanche in his arms to kiss her goodnight. Her eyes, rapt with love, look into his and he in mock seriousness tells her he can read her very thoughts. She makes no reply; he has hypnotized her.

It was a power he had mastered in his medical student days and now as an experiment he leaves her there while he runs off for a few hours at his club. Later in the evening he returns and arouses her from her hypnotic state by a mere snap of his finger. She awakes as though naught had happened.

Night after night he would repeat this, then go to his club. He was losing heavily these days at the club. Things were at a desperate pass; he must have money. Blanche's father had refused to help him out. Disgrace faced him that night at the club if he could not pay. Like those who are weak he determines on suicide. He gets his revolver. He wants to live, yet his next thought is of the disgrace to face if he does. Then comes the infernal inspiration; Blanche shall get the money he needs. He calls to her bedroom.

She appears and it is but a look from him and the spell is on; her will is nil; his will is all. Now she is but a thing to command. He tells her to dress. She does. He tells her to go to her father's home and up to his bedroom. There she is to take the keys from under his pillow, then go down to the library and unlock the safe, take out a sum of money and return with it to him.

She reaches her father's and the keys are soon secured. The safe is opened and most mechanically; she is counting out the money he has told her to obtain. She has turned to go when her father appears, having heard her come down the stairs.

The father attempts to bar her path and she, whom a mere schoolboy could otherwise have toyed with, flings her powerful father aside with the ease which accrues to abnormal strength. As he falls he strikes the heavy carved table leg with his head and she passes out of the room.

Landal receives her as she returns, takes the money and leads her to her room. When she is back in bed he revives her from her state of hypnotic coma and soon she is again in a state of natural sleep.

Early in the morning there comes an urgent message from the doctor at her father's home. Her father is dead. She hurries over to the home and looks long and with only that love which grief can prove, on the face that she had loved so well. The doctors decided he had died during an apoplectic spell.

Landal left her alone in her sorrow upon the pretense of attending a Medical Congress. Her health commenced to fail and she sent for the old doctor who had brought her into the world. He found her muttering incoherencies and her actions were strange. There is but one way to learn what caused her babble and that is to hypnotize her. He did and he heard her relate the horrible, terrifying truth.

Landal returns and his actions toward Blanche spur the old doctor into a decision. All are attending an evening function when the old doctor proposes that Blanche consent to be a subject for a hypnotic test. Landal objects, though when pressed for his reason, dare not give it. Blanche is brought under the spell and recounts the incidents which caused her father's death. Landal attempts to escape, but the doctor has thoughtfully had a detective at hand and he is arrested.

OTHER PEOPLE'S CHILDREN (Sept. 28).—A confirmed bachelor driven to distraction by the neighbor's children, receives the news that his brother has left for Europe, and is sending his twins and their governess to him on a visit, during his absence. Upon arrival, the governess proves to be his ideal, but oh, the twins. His patience is tried beyond endurance. Their pranks lead them to a home quarantined for scarlet fever, and soon after they, too, take the fever. During the quarantine he and the governess learn to love one another through their anxiety for the welfare of the children. After the recovery, the twins, while playing church, marry their uncle and governess, thus breaking the ice, and relieving the bashful bachelor.

BEE CULTURE (Sept. 28).—An entertaining, as well as instructive film, depicting the handling and care of honeybees. Thousands of bees swarm in the picture. The eggs and larvae are shown, as well as the section of the comb where the bees are hatching from the larvae out of the sealed cells. The queen bee, being fed by the workers, is an interesting sight, as well as thousands of bees working on the comb, and storing up honey. Men shown gathering the honey from the hives, with unprotected hands, is a revelation to the majority.

PICTURESQUE SCENES ON THE POTOMAC RIVER (Oct. 5).—The beautiful green banks of the Potomac River, with its many interesting and historical locations, and quaint old red brick buildings, are introduced in this picture. Leaving Washington, on the famous old Potomac River excursion boats, we glide out from the docks, and approach the War College with its magnificent grounds and buildings. Sailing further down the River, we view old Fort Washington. As the steamer slowly approaches Mount Vernon, we clearly recognize the home of the first President of the United States. On the way to the great falls, the camera catches a glimpse of some little pickaninnies stealthily playing the much forbidden game of "craps," while sheltered in the green branches of a near-by tree, a little outcast with his brother is devouring a huge red watermelon. The picture closes with the wonderfull falls of the Potomac.

He is being tracked by the gendarmes, and Rose, suspecting that he is at the farmer's house, hurries there to warn him of the impending danger. The police arrive at the farm immediately after her and surround the house. When Kilborne steps through the door he is ordered to surrender. He refuses. An officer raises his gun and fires. Rose steps in front of Kilbourne as the shot rings out and receives the bullet in her heart. ATTENTION!
FINAL NOTICE

ON OCTOBER FIRST, 1912, the price of all Deagan Musical Electric Bell outfits advanced 33⅓ per cent. This advance has become necessary owing to the fact that we have added a great many improvements to our Musical Electric Bell outfits, which have greatly increased the cost of manufacturing, and we can conscientiously state that our new improved Musical Electric Bell outfits are greater value at the advanced price than our old style Electric Bells are at the old prices which we asked for same.

Inasmuch as we have a number of prospective customers who contemplate purchasing these Bells, and who have been figuring with us, we will accept orders for the new style outfits until October 10th at the old list prices, namely, $75.00 for our famous No. 310 outfit, consisting of twenty-five Bells mounted on quarter-sawed Oak backs, with resonators, complete with new style keyboard, platinum point contact mechanisms, soft and loud attachments, and many other improvements which have been incorporated in these Bells.

Should you be interested in a set of these Bells, order now, as we will not accept orders at the old prices after October 10th. Any of our various outfits will be shipped C. O. D. with privilege of examination and trial, on receipt of $5.00 to guarantee express charges.

From the Patrons View Point

What Causes People

to continually patronize one Picture Theatre in preference to another? Of course, location, appearances, films, etc. have a great deal to do with it, but quality of the picture is what builds up a steady patronage that makes the business profitable.

This depends largely on your light and if you are using any other device than a to step down your current you are not getting best results.

With our machine you can produce a clear, white, steady light that won't worry your "house" by continuous flickering and will surprise you with the difference it makes with the films.

It is the only device that can be changed instantly to any of the three intensities without breaking the circuit between adjustments.

But this is not all. We will guarantee that our Compensarc

Will Cut 65% from Your Light Bill and we'll send you one on 30 days' free trial to prove it.

We have a little 22 page booklet that explains all the reasons why If you want a better light at ⅓ your present cost, send for it today. It's free.

The Judgment of the Sea

Captain Dixon, detailed to discover a band of smugglers, obtains lodging at their house, where he becomes enamored of Bess, the daughter. But in order to save her father's life she obeys Dixon's order for a clandestine meeting on the pier. Father and lover discover the plot in time to frustrate Dixon's designs, and in evading their blows he falls into the Deep, never to return. It is the Judgment of the Sea.

DO IT NOW!

Ask your exchange for an early booking on the great emotional subject — THE STARBUCKS — in which the author himself, Mr. Opie Read, impersonates Jasper Starbuck.

Your patrons have probably read the book or heard him lecture — an oratorical genius — and they will appreciate seeing him in pictures — an expert actor. The production marks a new era — a study in facial expression — like a series of masterpieces — an abundance of action and heart throbs.

You will be amazed with the results!

Remember the release date—Saturday, Nov. 9, 1912.

Just a line from a man who knows: "I am well satisfied with the American subjects." Signed LEON L. KAHN.

Facts and Comments

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has on more than one occasion pointed out the evils of cheap vaudeville and has particularly deplored the vulgarity of some so-called illustrated songs. We have every reason to believe that we have helped in no small measure to abate these two dangerous nuisances. The offences against common sense and common decency which often hide themselves in the guise of "popular vaudeville" have sensibly diminished in the moving picture houses of the country. They have almost wholly disappeared from the smaller cities, where but a few years ago they threatened to overshadow the pictures and ruin the exhibitors. They still maintain a sort of fitful existence in some of the larger cities, but they are on the wane everywhere and do no longer constitute a peril to the sound prosperity of the motion picture. The cheap little "vaudeville circuits," that three and four years ago dotted almost the entire country, are gone, never to return.

The so-called illustrated song seems to be holding out more strongly and is still in vogue in many houses which are in other respects conducted with great care and efficiency. The greatest trouble the exhibitor experiences in the matter of illustrated songs lies in the lack of suitable material. Granting for the sake of argument that songs, illustrated by proper slides, may form a legitimate part of the moving picture entertainment, it must be admitted that the supply of songs and slides is too quickly exhausted. It may be doubted whether even a genius could furnish a lasting supply, and there are no geniuses in the business of providing illustrated songs. The result is always disastrous. Either the song becomes of the hackneyed and tiresome variety or else it degenerates in its eager haste for novelty into the vulgar and often indecent. The limit in the latter respect seems to have been reached recently in the what is described as "that tabasco ditty." The "song" is freely advertised in the theatrical journals which pretend to appeal to the exhibitor of motion pictures, and we are informed by the composer of this piece of obscenity that "this is the kind they want." We cannot soil the pages of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD with any quotations from the degenerate ravings of the author nor will we mention the name of the firm which is willing to be publicly known as the sponsor of such malodorous filth. We mention the subject because such stuff constitutes a positive danger to the exhibitor. Many exhibitors are busy men, interested in a dozen or more places, and they are not always able to look after every detail in person. A careless or ignorant manager might allow a song of this character to go before an audience which is composed of sane and decent people. A manager might get such a vile song with slides to correspond in the regular service and he might even be justified in assuming that his slide exchange would not dare to send such a thing. He might not discover the atrocious nature of the thing until it showed its nastiness on the screen. The result would be harmful in the extreme. Not only would the decent people be disgusted and stay away, but the enemies of the motion picture would have a dangerous weapon against the exhibitor unfortunate enough to have such a song perpetrated in his house. The exhibitor would of course be held responsible by his patrons and by the authorities.

ONE of the biggest daily newspapers in the country, in reporting a murder case a few days ago, showed on its front page an illustration of how "Mrs.—— was strangled to death." The picture purported to demonstrate the anatomy of the throat and the various deadly grips of the strangler. This same paper has on various occasions called for "a stricter censorship of moving picture films." What would be said if a manufacturer of motion pictures were to submit such a gruesome exhibition to a board of censorship for approval? What would the public think, if any board of censorship were to allow such a picture to be exhibited? The ethics of the motion picture compare very favorably indeed with the ethics of a great portion of what is called modern journalism. If there is a more stringent need of regulation and of safeguarding public morals, the yellow newspaper, much more than the motion picture, is entitled to the speedy attention of the legislature. The yellow press has wrought untold harm in stupefying the intellect and debauching the morals of the population of our big cities, and its outcry against the evils of the cinematograph is one of the grim humors of the situation.

WE are apt, in our advertising of films, to lay too great a stress on the question of cost. This is not, to be sure, original with manufacturers of motion pictures; it characterizes all theatrical advertising. Impresarios and managers urge the public to see a certain play or hear a certain singer because the play or the singer cost the "unprecedented sum of so many thousands of dollars." It is a style of advertising that was much affected by the late Phineas T. Barnum and based upon the frivolous assumption that the American public delighted in being fooled. It is quite certain that this style of advertising is no longer effective with the intelligent portion of our public. In the last quarter of a century people have become more discriminating and exacting. They suspect all styles of flamboyant and bombastic advertising and are especially skeptical about the alleged cost of "superior and supreme productions." As a matter of fact, the cost of a production is by no means an unfailing proof of its superiority. It is the judicious and discriminating use of the money rather than the mere spending of it which secures results. There is no royal road to cinematographic fame and perfection which is paved with dollars. Art and experience are things that cannot be bought with coins and bills.

It would seem therefore that in advertising great features more stress might be laid on other points than the simple expenditure of money. The skill and the experience of actors or directors or manufacturers, the advantages of fine technical equipment and a hundred other things carry more conviction than the statement of the amount of money alleged to have been spent on a production. People will know that there cannot be any thing cheap in connection with a film which aspires to be classed as a great feature. Plain and simple words are still the most emphatic and convincing.

"Saved"

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THERE are certain manufacturers whom I refuse to name who have the temerity to turn out original photoplays now and then, but the sooner we get down to a dead level of monotony in production, with no variety whatever, the easier it will be for all concerned, including the hard-worked critics who have to chase like cowboys over the vocabulary of the English language to brighten up their stories. After the people in front see the same situation portrayed on the screen four or five thousand times they will get so used to it that they will not mind in the least.

Let us all center upon the edifying spectacle of a crime ascribed to a pure and innocent cowboy hero because of a clue, his undershirt button or some other sure means of identification. Have a lot of leather-legged men and fresh horses waiting at the village store—you can even introduce a sheriff with a tin star—and start them in a chase over any old territory that comes handy, with the guiltless hero riding only a few yards in front. Then comes the lynching party. By way of perfectly thrilling suspense have a noose put over his neck. Now we can have the real villain shot in a brawl—a bar-room scrap is instructive—and suffer pangs of remorse. He confesses. Rescue can be varied, as follows—these ideas are not copyrighted:

Mother	drives	to	rescue.	Hero Saved.
Girl	rides	"	"	" "
Chum	runs	"	"	" "
Child	taken	"	"	" "

If we had all four in one evening we could have a voting contest as to which was best.

In case such a strain on the nerves be too great, the advantage of keeping a racing stable under stress of circumstances may be set forth in a milder drama of far-west high-tension. The opening scene can discover a miner with a pick and a pan—these essential properties may be procured without great cost. He may be the spiritless caretaker of a family—slam in a child or two to stir the audience up to the highest sympathetic pitch—or he may be a young hero seeking his fortune for the girl he left behind him to be snapped up by a common ordinary Wall Street broker of taxicab tendencies. At the very last despairing moment an accident occurs—perhaps he shifts his chewing gum and changes the whole course of his life—and lo! there is enough gold in sight to buy a breakfast at the Saint Regis. He stakes his claim and wastes time telling about it. Enter villain through the bushes. He rolls his eyes to the four cardinal points of the compass and jumps the claim. Struggle, race, breakdown, race,—the whole audience is now breathless with expectation that is not unmingled with doubt, for nobody knows how the play is going to end—then it all ends well. The caretaker embraces his family, or the hero his prospective one, and the villain slinks away, or the Wall Street broker goes back broken-hearted to his hot bird, cold bottle and Lobster-Square soubrette.

It is said that a baby dies somewhere in the so-called civilized world every 10 seconds, or, to be more impressively accurate, 360 every hour, 8,640 every day, 3,153,600 every year, though one half of this deplorable loss is preventable. Watch the screen and see how many are saved by the specialist. He saves mother, too, after a lingering illness by bringing in some other baby to replace the one she inadvertently lost. This has been a favorite method of restoring her mental balance since "Mother Love" appeared some years ago. The night-gown child in prayer has awakened the joint conscience of more crooks than pass civil service examination in our police department, and I go a long ways in saying that Lady and Burglar, telephone and police station, have preserved for posterity with frugal care more jewels than enter the port of New York undeclared in the false-bottomed trunks of our best families.

When two men and one woman get busy on the screen, we may confidently look for a killing. There may be a duel in which the life of the loved one is spared at the last moment by the interposition of the heroine, though she die in the attempt. Or the hero may be misled and take poison, while the antidote limps along in such a provoking way that we wish it would hurry up. If the villain happens to be a Count—we are supposed to hate these titled foreigners who marry our richest heiresses-es-es—the man with the turned-up mustache and flat-brimmed plug usually steals the silver and enlightens misinformed stern pa-pah just as the wedding bells are about to ring.

The mortgage on the farm is still in stock, though there were more automobiles at a recent farmer's picnic in Iowa than could be counted on Fifth Avenue any bright October afternoon. Chin-whiskers in cowhide boots is the jay-director's idea of the man who owns and works the sweeping acres of our fair land, a finer type than the English country gentleman of idle aims and oppresive methods. So the manliest man our society has produced is still theatrically presented as a straw-chewing imbecile who has to be helped out of difficulties, though he won his conquering way, his own employer, by individual effort of the cleanest and most wholesome kind.

The Girl-Reporter saves the situation and makes a scoop at the same time. The Railroad-Operator saves the train from destruction, or the innocent heroine tied on the track. The Faithful-Servant saves his master in time of stress at the cost of all he values, even life itself. Men plunge over cliffs, down into gullies, through raging waters, into houses where the smoke pot is working overtime, and all for the love of her, while the number of blind men whose sight is miraculously saved should attract the attention of the International Congress of Scientists.

The number of kidnapped children is alarmingly on the increase, and the bomb is still burning where it will do most harm while we sit in front and watch the fuse sputter its deadly way towards the explosive projectile unmoved because it has been delicately indicated to us that the one who really ought to be blown up will get his or the hero will surely be on time. It is so exciting! Then think of the high quality of imagination required to conceive of such astounding expedients.

When all these themes have been worked threadbare and relegated to the theatrical lumber room with the mechanical devices of long ago, when what is obviouly irrational and stupidly silly has gone to the film scrap heap, when feuds and shooting on sight that do not belong to the normal life that most of us recognize appear only as frayed relics of the past or of some remote phase of our being, when directors are weary of trying to revive stale stories or deconventionalize what lacks the intrinsic quality to entertain modern audiences, we may get some plays with a punch, in which characters evolve their own destiny instead of being saved.

"The Lion Tamer's Revenge" (Cines)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade

THE Cines people can lay "the flattering unction" to their souls that, having once put their brains and hands to the doing of a big thing in the producing field, they always do it well. One recalls to mind "Brutus," "Rameses, King of Egypt," "Richard, the Lion Hearted," "The Daughter of the Spy," and others among the number of their great productions, and in none of them could disappointment find a resting place. There have been weak spots, of course, in some of them, as in all films, but these minor defects have been lost sight of in the admiration created by the fine ensemble of each.

In the feature subject under review (the title of which alone gives one a thrill), "The Lion Tamer's Revenge," the Cines people have a two-reel release that is found to create for their product a still greater demand in America. In this country, where there are so many circus fans, everyone is familiar with the constant dangers surrounding a lion tamer and his assistants. Now and again, during the circus season, the newspapers convey the intelligence of narrow escapes or of a fearful death from the attack of vicious lions; and the risks are considered so great by circus owners that lions are now carried chiefly for exhibitions in the circus annex and are very seldom seen performing in the ring. The circus scenes in "A Lion Tamer's Revenge" will, therefore, form a series of thrilling spectacles, apart from the culminating tragedy, for the lion tamer is seen dominating fully twenty Barbary lions in the arena, being assisted by a lady equally as fearless as he.

The acting of this lion tamer, by stage name Herman, in real life Alfred Schneider, will rather astonish everyone who views these films. A man of fierce personality and proof against fear, he can yet be tortured and utterly cast down by the knowledge that his affianced loves another. The only tenderness he has ever known is consumed by his savage desire for revenge, and he attempts to sacrifice her and her lover at the same moment by placing them helpless in the arena into which he drives a score of maddened, hungry lions. If one watches this man carefully, all through the exciting and absorbing scenes, there will not be found a single moment during which he has failed to live his part—not act it, mark you. His final struggle with the officers over the mangled body of his rival, to get at the woman who has betrayed him and escaped his vengeance, is a fitting climax to the brute ferocity of his nature.

Cleo, betrothed to Herman, has been given talented delineation by Miss Marcella Meier. The portrayal rightly shows that Cleo is dominated by Herman and that no real love can exist where fear has entered. Anthony Novelli makes a devoted lover and a gallant officer in the role of Lieutenant Alexander. His stand against the lions in the final scene is a despairing effort for the salvation of Cleo and himself.

capable care of Charles Maestro. He does not attract us greatly by his ring grotesques, but he very emphatically impresses us by his diabolical cunning and cruelty in prompting Herman, in his pursuit of vengeance.

The staging and settings are in nice keeping with the story. The interior, showing the great amphitheater, in which the big cage for the lion act is placed and the audience in attendance, adds a fine touch of realism. Cleo's dressing-room and her interview with Lieutenant Alexander, followed by the stormy meeting with Herman, afford impressive atmosphere and stirring situations. Good photography is evident throughout the two reels.

The incidents of the story are laid in Rome. Herman, a lion tamer, and Cleo, his assistant, are the leading figures of a circus that is showing in one of the great Roman amphitheaters. Cleo is betrothed to Herman and he loves her with a love that is intense. This love begets in him none of the tenderness that endears a man to a woman; it is rather the similitude of a lion's rights over his mate; rights for which he will battle to the death against an intruder and, if needs be, include her in the slaughter.

It is only to be expected that Cleo's nature has never been stirred by such devotion. Her lover is her master, a task master at that, and she pines in secret for a something that will transform the galling chains into links of sunshine. This something is introduced into her life one day, when Lieutenant Alexander, of the Roman army, presents her with a bouquet of beautiful flowers, ostensibly as a token of his admiration for her grace and skill in an equestrienne act, but really as an expression of his sincere admiration of herself as a woman. Herman, whose eyes overlook nothing in which Cleo is concerned, observes the act, and we see a snarl on his lips as he questions her in the ring. Her easy, candid reply reassures him, and the snarl is succeeded by a smile as he learns that the gracious little gift is from a stranger.

But the Lieutenant, in his blind infatuation, bungles things, and takes the first step in what is destined to become a tragedy. He follows Cleo to her dressing-room and, on being rebuffed, shows such deep disconsolation that the warm heart of the woman is touched. Besides, he has brought a thrill to her heart that has been hitherto unknown to her; and, moved by sympathy and attracted by his fine appearance, she consoles him by a soft pat on the shoulder and by musical words that electrify the man. Ardent lover that he is, it is only after a few endearing words that he takes her in his arms and kisses her. Herman opens the door almost at the moment and the lovers just escape being discovered. Here we have a fine display of clever acting by Miss Meier and Anthony Novelli. The latter especially, as the lieutenant, throws the lion tamer off the scent by his quickly assumed nonchalance.

The Lieutenant departs. Herman's jealousy being aroused, he turns ferociously on Cleo and gives her much the same rough usage as he would one of his refractory animals. She is thoroughly cowed and mute before him and he leaves her with a threat should she dare to love another man.

The lion tamer grows more jealous as he thinks of the attentions of the Lieutenant, and he arranges with the clown of the circus to spy on her movements. Cleo receives a clandestine letter from Lieutenant Alexander, and joins him on an autoing trip. She is followed by the clown, who succeeds in gaining a place on the back springs of the auto as it speeds away.

Cleo is late for dinner that day, and on being reprimanded by Herman, gives an evasive explanation. At this juncture the clown comes into the dinner table, and makes signs to Herman to follow him out of doors. There he tells him of the meeting and of the tender words that have passed between the lovers. Returning to the room, Herman accuses Cleo of her duplicity before the entire circus force, and forbids her to leave the circus premises in the future.

But the lovers meet again, and a fiendish plan is suggested to Herman by the clown to entrap them. He calls on Cleo and good naturedly offers to carry a note from her to Alexander. Deceived by his manner, she writes the note and delivers it to him. The clown carries it direct to Herman, who opens it carefully and reads it. Then it is re-sealed, and the clown takes it to the Lieutenant, who is overjoyed to receive it.

This note fixes a meeting-place for the lovers, the following night. The Lieutenant tells the clown, verbally, that he will be at the rendezvous and requests him to advise Cleo accordingly. This is done and Herman is informed of the particulars.

The fateful night arrives. The clown calls on Cleo and notifies her that Lieutenant Alexander awaits her outside. He then joins Herman, who is waiting in a concealed spot near the door, through which Cleo must pass. As she cautiously emerges, Cleo is seized from behind by the conspirators, and is gagged and bound. They then carry her to the caged arena in which the lions perform, and tie her to the bars.

The clown meets the Lieutenant at the appointed spot and asks him to follow him to the place where Cleo awaits him. Suspecting nothing, Alexander is led into the arena. He begins to feel that he has been entrapped, just as the clown rushes from him through the gate and locks it. Now the plot unfolds itself to him, and, like a brave man, he determines to die gamely. Seizing a platform leaning up against the cage bars, he pulls it aside, thinking it may lead to safety. With horror, he discovers Cleo behind it in a fainting condition, upheld by the thongs which bind her to the bars. Then the whole truth flashes on him.

Now the thunderous roars of the lions which are being turned into the arena by Herman fall on his ears. He again places the platform in front of Cleo and gets behind it himself, hoping to be able to keep the brutes from reaching her. All in vain. The infuriated animals crowd around the spot with such fierce determination that he rushes out into the center of the arena to distract their attention from his beloved. He wrestles with them desperately, and we see him go down. After that there is a merciful hiatus, during which Cleo makes her escape, just how the producer has failed to show us.

The final scene shows the arrival of the police in the arena next morning. A white sheet hides the ghastly remains of what had once been a gallant soldier. Herman explains to the police that the tragedy is due to an accident; but Cleo, with avenging finger, points to him as the man who had lured the Lieutenant to the spot. He springs at her like a wild animal, but is seized by the officers.

The films will be released by the General Film Company on October 21st.

EXTENT OF OUR FOREIGN FILM TRADE.

Fifteen thousand miles of motion-picture films were exported from the United States in the last fiscal year, while nearly 3,000 miles were imported, is the summary of U. S. Consular reports. The exact length of the motion-picture films exported in the year ending June 30, 1912, according to the Division of Statistics of Consular Bureau, was 80,035,302 feet, valued at $6,815,060; the exact length of the motion-picture films imported was 14,274,768 feet of "positives," valued at $825,083, exclusive of other films and plates valued at $179,130, of which the quantity is not stated. A comparison of the exports in 1912 with those of preceding years is impracticable, since 1912 was the first fiscal year in which the quantity of motion-picture films exported (measured in feet) was recorded in the statistical returns to the Department of Commerce and Labor. The fact, however, that photographic goods, of which motion-picture films form apparently about 75 per cent of the total, amounted to nearly 10 million dollars' value in the exports of 1912, against a little over 7 million in 1911 and 4¾ million in 1910, suggests a very rapid growth in the exportation of motion-picture films. On the import side the growth is much less strongly marked, the figures being for "positives" 14¼ million feet in 1912, against 11¾ million in 1911.

A large proportion of the motion-picture films now used in the various parts of the world are manufactured in the United States. About two-thirds of those exported go in the "unexposed" form, ready for use in taking pictures in those parts of the world to which sent. The other one-third is in the completed state, having been utilized in the United States in making finished motion-picture films ready for use in placing illustrations upon the screen. Of the importations, practically all are "exposed" films, views taken in other parts of the world for use in the United States.

THE CINEMATOGRAPH AND NATURAL SCIENCE.

By Leonard Donaldson.

The main part of this book deals with the achievements and possibilities of cinematography as an aid to scientific research. It is not claimed that the work is in any sense of the word exhaustive. The application of the motion picture to science is at present in a purely experimental and inchoate stage. The book clearly reflects this fact. It contains however a quantity of valuable data. It is practical throughout and carefully avoids the ranting rhetoric to which we have to listen whenever a "reformer" attempts to descant on the educational value of the motion picture. Some of the chapters are exceedingly interesting, notably chapters IV, V and VIII. The last named chapter gives us a glimpse of what the motion picture will do for the teaching of natural history. It deals in a brief manner with "Life in an Ant Hill," "Life and Habits of the Wasp," "The Evolution of the Frog," "Life and Habits of Fresh Water Fish." No friend of the motion picture can fail to be delighted and instructed by means of this little book. It is written in a clear and popular style and abounds in the narration of interesting adventures and experiments. There is a supplement entitled "Sidelights on Scientific Cinematography." This supplement consists of a series of articles which the author had contributed to the "Bioscope," the well known English periodical. The supplement makes just as interesting reading as the main part of the book.

"Woman In White"

A Gem-Universal Feature.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A GREAT sensation was made by the novel of this name when it was released from the publisher's hands, and much doubt was expressed about the correct presentation of the legal points incidental to the story, but the author spared himself no pains to lead his readers aright, employing a solicitor of great experience to guide his own steps where they led him into the intricate labyrinth of the law. All doubtful questions were submitted to eminent authority, even to correction of the proof sheets, and events proved that these precautions were not taken in vain.

The types in the photodrama are admirably chosen, and the characterization made as clear as possible within the limitations of a two-reel presentation that covers the tremendous action of a great two-volume novel and is compelled to devote a great deal of space to explanatory sub-titles. "Count Fosco," "Laura" and "Walter Hartwright" are all impersonated very close to the author's ideals, and are what he would have liked to have seen if he had been able to witness his entertaining story exhibited in picture form.

Scene from "Woman in White" (Gem).

Wilkie Collins, like all men of fine selective taste, believed strongly in characterization and expressed himself on this subject so ably that his words are worth quoting for the sake of those who are really interested in moving pictures and aspire to elevate them to a rank with the fine arts. Beginning with a statement that he has always held the old-fashioned opinion that the primary object of a work of fiction was to tell a good story, he modifies it to the extent of saying that the first condition to be observed is that of character delineation. He says:

"The first effect produced by any narrative of events is essentially dependent, not on the events themselves, but on the human interest which is directly connected with them. It may be possible in novel writing"—and this is true of photodrama production—"to present characters successfully without telling a story; but it is not possible to tell a story successfully without presenting the characters; their existence as recognizable realities being the sole condition on which the story can be told."

If that clear statement could be cut out and pasted up in every studio in America it might have an effect that critics have been aiming at for the past two or three years. If it had that effect, the photoplays would gradually rise in character and value to a point now occupied by the few that have been written and set forth by men who are thoroughly conversant with their respective branches of the business. The general average might be raised to the quality of our few rare masterpieces.

I must compliment the director of the Gem production upon the care and taste shown in much of the interior furnishing and certain important exteriors, such as the church scene, as these have necessarily to conform as far as possible to the peculiar characteristics of English country life. Having traveled and sojourned in nearly all parts of England, I was favorably impressed by the serious attempt to handle this subject in a consistent and at the same time picturesque manner. After a discriminating choice of types and an esthetic judgment of scenic effects the story itself has been followed according to dramatic necessities rather in the line of early mystery chosen by the author in his work of fiction.

CAST OF CHARACTERS

Woman in White / Laura	Janet Salsbury
Percival Glyde	Charles Craig
Count Fosco	Alec Frank
Pesca	Lyman Rabbe
Walter Hartwright	Charles Perley

"The "Woman in White" is the story of a bold substitution made because a young wife refused to transfer her property to her scheming husband, Laura being the wife and Sir Percival Glyde being the husband. The Woman in White of the story is a girl of about Laura's general age and personal appearance, who has exhibited mental peculiarities from childhood. They were harmless in a way, one of the principal eccentricities being that of always dressing in white. When she finally became a source of distress to her own mother, the latter preferred to have her placed in a private establishment rather than a pauper asylum, and the mother thus played a part in the strange deception which was practiced by Sir Percival Glyde and Count Fosco.

Scene from "Woman in White" (Gem).

In order to obtain an enormous estate which would descend to Sir Percival in case of Laura's death without issue, the feeble minded and feeble bodied Woman in White was drilled to impersonate Laura while the latter was incarcerated in a private madhouse. Such is the plot of the story with Count Fosco as the principal conspirator and a little Italian named Professor Pesca as the real instrument of justice, although Laura's lover, Walter Hartwright, was an active agent.

The photodrama opens with a revelation of the existence of one of those brotherhoods organized in Latin countries for political or criminal purpses. The members of the secret society are all gathered when Count Fosco betrays them by signaling to the police. A raid and terrific struggle follow; but little Professor Pesca escapes to the consternation of the Judas who has betrayed his fellow-members of the society.

The love story of Walter Hartwright follows. He is the drawing master at the home of Laura and falls deeply in love with her. His love is reciprocated by the charming young girl, but the usual obstacle interposes that makes stories of this kind interesting. Laura's husband has already been selected for her and the discovery of her affection for the drawing master results in his discharge. An end being made to the intimate relations she enjoyed with Walter Hartwright, and the young girl being completely under the dominance of her English father, she is compelled to marry the baronet that he has chosen, Sir Percival Glyde.

Sir Percival Glyde is one of the decadent gentlemen of title who come to this country every year in search of some weak-minded heiress; and as his main purpose in matrimony is that of obtaining property he falls into the scheme of substitution suggested by bold Count Fosco. He has borrowed money from Fosco, and is such a moral idiot himself that he consents to have his wife drugged and incarcerated in a madhouse when she refuses to transfer her inheritance to him.

It is almost unbelievable at this stage of our civilization that such a scheme could be carried out without immediate discovery because of the large number of people involved in transferring the young wife from her home to the private asylum and in the acceptance as a substitute of the half-witted woman who is nearly at the point of death. There could be no intelligent and honest acceptance of the sickly idiot in the place of the bright and charming girl she resembled, but as a matter of fact, the use of private asylums in England for the purpose of incarcerating people who are in the way was so common at that time that the great novels of Wilkie Collins and Charles Reade on that subject stirred up a political and moral revolution such as may accompany the revelations in our own police scandal.

Laura manages to escape from the private asylum after her substitute has died and been buried and she visits the graveyard where a stone has been raised sacred to her memory. Walter Hartwright meets her there. Believing her to be dead he visits her tomb as a matter of sentiment and finds a woman in black who is none other than the one supposed to be lying beneath the sod.

The story now turns to the re-establishment of Laura's identity and this is brought about by the intuitive steps taken by Hartwright to follow up the associations of Sir Percival Glyde. He finds him in company with Count Fosco, then shadows the latter persistently, but without result, until he describes the arch villain to his particular friend and associate, little Professor Pesca.

Pesca has not forgotten the treachery of Count Fosco and might be excused for writing the latter's death warrant on the spot. Instead, he gives Walter a communication to deliver which warns Fosco that he will meet his death by secret violence unless he re-establishes the right of the living Laura to her inheritance and to her place in society. Armed with this letter Walter extorts a written confession from the arch conspirator, the consideration being that Count Fosco shall be permitted two days' time to escape vengeance at the hands of the Brotherhood.

The interesting and impressive Count Fosco, one of the boldest villains ever delineated in the social drama, removes the hirsute ornaments on his face and otherwise disguises himself to escape what should be coming to him. We feel that he is well out of the way, but what about the drunken decadent of attractive title, Sir Percival Glyde, who has slipped into matrimony and a tremendous inheritance with a conscienceless lack of scruples peculiar to his kind?

A visitation of God causes the death of Sir Percival Glyde in a highly dramatic fire scene. He is partially destroyed when rescued by Walter Hartwright and carried into the open to perish miserably. His dying confession completes the chain of evidence necessary to prove his own infamy and the true identity of the young wife he had placed in a private madhouse. The play ends with the final terror of Count Fosco. He has been detected by members of the Brotherhood in spite of his disguise and is shadowed from point to point in some very effective scenes until we see him in the last one lying dead at the heads of those he betrayed, alone in a humiliating end of a long life of degraded ability.

"Put Yourself In His Place"

Two-Reel Thanhouser Adaptation.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE Thanhouser productions are growing more interesting because of the progressive spirit that is plainly perceived by those who look beyond the screen into the studio and its methods and into the directive minds and selective taste evinced in what is materialized from an author's ideals. No one in the business is better aware than Mr. Thanhouser himself that there is a certain amount of convention in all drama, that pictorial representation on the stage is necessarily artificial, that painted scenery and footlights make realism in the legitimate performance theoretically impossible, yet no one has been quicker to recognize that moving pictures offer opportunity such as the artist enjoys of getting out into the light of day, into an entirely new and clear atmosphere of artistic influence, where it is possible to reduce visual convention to a minimum and make it a source of half-conscious delight.

It is rather remarkable that a man long trained in the traditions of the stage should be divesting himself of its tawdry old trappings at the very moment so many are engaged in trying to vest the old fundemental conventions with the jarring inconsistencies of modern interpretation. Here is a man who has been in the show business long enough to settle down in the well-known rut of artificiality, yet who is in the front rank of those who realize that there is a pictorial phase as well as a dramatic one in the New Art. The trend of his production is to make each scene a veritable picture by itself, with instinctive attention to composition, placing and balance.

The non-critical spectator in front is suffused with an undefined pleasure when the best of the Thanhouser photodramas are flashed on the screen for a reason—love of the beautiful is so universal, even among those of humble circumstances, that the ability to sense a picture might be called common property. Aiming always towards finer presentation of a subject in hand it seems to me that we may look to Mr. Thanhouser for some splendid achievements when he takes hold of photodramas of modern construction and purpose, for he is engaged in the most difficult branch of the art, that of making old lamps shine like modern electric illumination. He has been preserving standard plays and illustrating works of fiction that were not intended for all ages.

The convenience of this method alone recommends it. The characters are accurately delineated in print, the scenes well described by the author, and only few alterations in construction are really necessary, difficult as they may be in some instances. The delicacy shown in his selection of types, the care exhibited in costuming, pains taken to choose appropriate settings, these all lead to a masterly quality of production, but are greatly nullified in attempts to vitalize works of fiction written under other conditions than those existing today, because frequent use is required of that most disturbing of all anachronisms, the explanatory subtitle.

Like many another scenario writer I have found it easy to set forth a play without an explanatory, and therefore disturbing subtitle from beginning to end, injecting a few to cover lapses of time or to sharpen a certain point to be made to its keenest edge. We have found that the most delicate character analysis can be made without such aid, and it becomes a matter of pride for the self-respecting photodramatist to so manipulate his material that the audience will not be required to wrestle with it mentally. The difference is that between a masterly painting that speaks for itself and a picture in which the characters are represented with a bubble of information projecting from their mouths. The grand problem of the photoplaywright is to indicate such characterizations as permit the people of the story to lay bare the inmost workings of their minds in preparation for the action to follow and during that action.

The two most attractive characters in "Put Yourself in His Place" are Grace Carden and Jael Dence. They are such interesting personalities in the work of fiction and so equally interesting in the photoplay that criticism is somewhat disarmed in the latter instance, but my own idea as an impressionist is that they should have been shown in sharper contrast, the author intending present one as the result of superior culture and the other a country maiden of rare physical charm, their gentle rivalry in love being that of refined intelligence as opposed to innocent simplicity.

CAST OF CHARACTERS.

Grace Carden .....Marguerite Snow.
Jael Dence .....Ann Drew.
Henry Little .....Wm. Garwood.
Squire Raby .....Wm. Russell.
Coventry .....David Thompson.
Edith Raby, the squire's sister.....Jeanne Darnell.
Edith's husband .....Jas. Cruze.

There is really no complaint to be made of any of these performers—they all act well up to their opportunities, while it is a genuine source of delight to watch Miss Snow and Miss Drew every moment they are to be seen. The interior settings are as correct as those we have come to expect in Thanhouser productions and the exteriors are beyond improvement from our present standard of comparison. The story itself largely concerns the love of Henry Little for Grace Carden and its reciprocal sentiment, with the timehonored interference of those who attempt to arrange the affairs of Cupid to suit social exigencies. There is a complexity of kinship involved—Edith Raby has married a man beneath her station and lost her husband at a time her brother might have helped her, and she accuses the Squire of being the direct cause of her widowhood—this presents us with a hero in Henry Little of noble descent and far more noble character. And there is an incidental clash between Henry Little as a skilled workman, a lover of steel and a forger of steel tools, and the thick headed members of a union, then the fate of the principal characters hinges upon such a trivial incident that the plot seems to depend on the element of chance.

The real motif is the triumph of a thoroughly modern and efficient young man when he is at last opposed to a low environment of inefficiency among fellow workmen and even he is afterwards opposed by the equally inefficient leisure class from which he is descended. Henry Little is a type of young man highly honored in America, the one who is tried out and proves his innate quality. He is supporting his mother, because she refuses to permit any relations with her wealthy and aristocratic brother, Squire Raby, when Grace Carden engages him to instruct her in the art of wood carving. Grace is the goddchild of Squire Raby, and the Squire favors the suit of a pleasing gentleman of leisure named Coventry. Henry has succeeded in reaching the sympathetic interest of Grace and has established an independent forge of his own in a deserted church on the domain of Squire Raby when he becomes sick with jealousy over the interposition of a man he knows to be of no value to himself or to the world. As it is not possible for him to earn his living where organized labor has become organized persecution he has been compelled to pursue his work in secret, and he is aided in this by his former employer.

The church is one long deserted by reason of a shifting of population and is on the road to decay, but is not a ruin. It has been protected from complete destruction by Squire Raby, but it is so far out of the way as to be rarely visited by curious tourists. Into this romantic setting are projected a forge, anvil, bellows, tools and lathes of steel, and amid these solemn surroundings the young mechanic pursues his vocation, the strange flares of light within it at night awakening uncomfortable suspicions among the nearest night watchers, some shepherds on neighboring hills.

After discovering that the pretensions of Coventry are dangerous ones, Henry loses heart and tries to work away the misery from which he suffers, spending nearly all of his time, night and day, in a feverish attempt to conquer unfavorable circumstances by determination and unremitting labor.

One day, when Coventry and Grace are exploring the neighborhood of the church, they are overtaken by a storm. They become exhausted in a vain struggle to reach shelter and are on the verge of collapse when they note a light in the windows of the deserted church. They make a last desperate attempt and succeed in reaching the church door. Henry takes them into his peculiar workshop and revives them. After explaining the strange necessity which forced him to pursue his honorable calling in such a place, he extracts an oath of secrecy from both, and in due time they rejoin their friends.

From all accounts it seems about as easy for an English gentleman to turn villain as it is for a New York politician to turn crook. Grace keeps her word, but Coventry has seen enough to excite his jealousy and he visits a resort of factory workmen with the news. He leads them to the deserted church, they break in and a desperate fight ensues, Henry using his tools and hot cinders as weapons until he is nearly overpowered. Squire Raby arrives and effects a rescue only to find that the young workman is his own nephew.

Henry is now set up in business for himself, with a factory of his own, but the villain's villainies grow more and more villainous. Henry's factory is blown up at a time he is supposed to be within it, though he is in reality on his way to America. Grace mourns him as dead for a while, but finally consents to marry Coventry. The number of ladies who have nearly married villains is only exceeded by those who really have. Coventry has succeeded in intercepting all communications from Henry except the very last one, a telegram received on the eve of her marriage.

Now Miss Sweet Simplicity, Jael Dence, no longer deserving her name, gets her pretty fingers on the despatch and it reaches Grace with happy consequences better shown in the picture than I can describe them.

While adaptations do not compare with original plays in live interest, I give great credit to those who succeed in condensing and making of interest these nearly-forgotten works of fiction.

BRIBING THE KIDDIES.

Mr. V. T. Gilliam of St. Louis, Mo., has just sent us a letter to announce that the Dr. Fry Methodist Episcopal Church South of that city has enlisted the services of the moving picture in its church work. The announcement is preceded by four long paragraphs in yellow journalistic style on the "misguided individuals who every now and then rise up and give forth a yell regarding the harm resulting from the motion picture," and then concludes, apparently in order to show that he and his fellow church members must be classed with the enlightened, as follows:

> The Dr. Fry M. E. Church South of St. Louis has been operating a machine of its own for the past year and the result has been most gratifying. The pictures are shown every Friday evening, the admission is free to all, the young people are given tickets each Sunday in return for Sunday-school attendance, it being understood that admission to the pictures can be gained by their attending the Sunday school. Three reels of film are shown and before running the last one the machine is stopped long enough for an offering to be taken and the pastor makes a short talk to an attentive audience. As a result of this departure the church membership has been increased a goodly number and the Sunday-school almost doubled in attendance and everybody is happy.

Frankly, Mr. Gilliam, we do not like the way you use the pictures, and even at the risk of being classed with the misguided yellers we must voice a warning to the effect that your plan will result in more harm than good. If you wish to use the pictures for amusement, all right; if you wish to use them as money getters, all right; if you wish to use them for educational or religious purposes, all right; but if you wish to use them as a bribe, NO. In our time we have seen the boys and girls we taught in Sunday-school go out into life as grown men and women, and we have also seen coals and blankets and picture cards and all sorts of other things used in the very same way you are using the photoplays. Almost invariably the children who go to church and Sunday-school for what they can get out of it have become the men and women who are now taking bribes for doing or winking at the doing of illicit things. This is inevitably so because you are preaching the word of God and practising the works of the devil. The children are quite intelligent enough to distinguish the difference and every time they will laugh at your precept and follow your example. Use your admission tickets as rewards for faithful work on the lessons or for good conduct in the school, but don't employ them as bribes to win attendance. If you do this last, you are injuring yourself, the cause of the pictures and, worst of all, the souls of God's little ones.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

CINCINNATI LOCAL OUTING.

THE first outing given by the Cincinnati Local Branch No. 2 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, held October 5, was a grand success. The day opened bright and warm and as early as eight o'clock the people began pouring into the Zoological Garden. By one o'clock there were ten thousand people in the park.

G. W. Peters, representing the Gaumont Company, and Freeman Owens, representing the Universal Animated Weekly, were early on hand taking pictures of scenes and animals at the Zoological Garden. There was a terrific scuffle of the animals at the Zoo Saturday morning, and Superintendent Sol Stephan was amazed to find lions, bears, monkeys, fowl and serpents in a very undignified struggle to gain possession of a piece of looking-glass that had been the property of one of the little monkeys.

"How unmannerly! What doth this mean?" quoth Stephan.

"We are going to have our pictures 'took' to-day and I wanted to see if my hat was on straight," answered a shy dove with a top-knot.

"I wanted to get my mustache curled right," added the sea-lion.

"I wanted to see if my tail feathers were just so," interjected the proud peacock.

Even clumsy Zekoe, the hippopotamus, and Brutus, the lion, wanted to fix up their complexions, and the polar bear was anxious to see that his new white fur coat fitted properly.

Soon M. A. Neff, president of the National Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, arrived, with a corps of moving picture experts and a crowd of delegates to the outing of the picture men at the Zoo. The animals posed their best as the moving film was reeled off. The Zoo pictures will be a part of a series of Cincinnati moving pictures taken to exploit to the world Cincinnati's good things.

At one o'clock Mr. Neff, chairman of the committee, with Mr. John J. Huss, Mr. J. B. Glassmeyer, Mr. Otto Lightner, Dr. Kolb, Mr. F. A. Botts, Mr. Henry Levy, Mr. Herman Eggers, Mr. Lehman, Mr. N. B. Rogers, Mr. F. L. Emmert, met Hon. Henry T. Hunt, mayor of Cincinnati; Hon. James M. Cox, Democratic candidate for governor of Ohio; A. L. Garford, Bull Moose gubernatorial candidate; Mayor Geo. E. Phillips, of Covington, Ky., and Attorney-General Hogan, at the Sinton Hotel, and escorted them to the Zoological Garden in automobiles with banners flying.

Upon arrival at the Zoological Garden pictures of Mayor Hunt, Mayor Phillips, Hon. Jas. M. Cox and A. L. Garford were taken, then a parade was formed, led by Cincinnati Local No. 2, followed by the representatives of the Boosters League of Cincinnati (which also represented the Chamber of Commerce), the Boy Scouts and animal parade at the Zoo. After the parade was over, Mr. M. A. Neff, president of the Exhibitors League, called the meeting to order, and introduced Mayor Hunt, who extended the keys of the city to the visiting exhibitors and friends. While Mayor Hunt's address was very short, it was right to the point and was loudly applauded by the exhibitors, as he touched upon some points that were vital to their interest, and his attitude was friendly all the way through.

The next speaker, Mr. A. L. Garford, talked on the high standard of pictures and the educational benefits to be derived from motion pictures. His remarks were well received and he made many friends. The last speaker, Hon. James M. Cox, was enthusiastically received, as he has attended several conventions of the Motion Picture Exhibitors, is well known, and most of the boys call him "Jimmy" Cox.

Everything went off nicely. G. W. Peters and Freeman Owens, of Gaumont and Universal Weekly, report that the pictures are fine and it will only be a short time until they are released. All exhibitors are anxiously waiting to run the films.

Mr. Otto Luedeking, local treasurer, was on the job early in the morning, as he had charge of the gate receipts. Mrs. Shakespeare, his official stenographer, acted as ticket agent. Mr. August Carbin was official ticket taker.

After the big outing was over, and the tickets counted, it was found that over ten thousand people had attended the first outing. Messrs. Chas. T. Beeching and W. C. Kitt had charge of the electrical department. F. A. Botts was very prominent; Harry Brice, who had charge of the program, was very active. Carl Tarvin, who was on the film and slide committee, was the right man in the right place. Those who furnished automobiles were J. S. Glassmeyer, F. L. Emmert, N. B. Rogers, J. J. Ditchen and M. A. Neff. J. J. Huss, president of the Cincinnati Local, furnished the badges and banners for the outing.

Mr. J. H. Broomhall, second vice-president of the state organization, was present and a large number of exhibitors from surrounding towns.

The headliner of the cabaret in the evening was Miss Francis St. Clair, of Detroit, Mich., and ten other high-class vaudeville acts; Alexander's Ragtime picture caught the people. The python crawled around through the grass, not only for the entertainment of the people, but caused great amusement while Mr. W. G. Peters and Mr. Freeman Owens took moving pictures of it. This was certainly a thriller. Many went home still shaking after seeing this wonderful reptile, which is the largest snake in captivity—25 feet long—and vowed never to take another drink.

Mr. Neff is having 2,100 feet of municipal film made for the city of Cincinnati, also 1,000 feet made for the Zoological Garden. These pictures will show every important scene in Cincinnati and the Zoological Garden in full.

NEWARK EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE.

At a meeting of exhibitors of the city of Newark, N. J., called for Thursday, October 3rd, by State Organizer W. S. Martin, resulted in an organization for that city. Thirty exhibitors were present and, assisted by President G. A. Robinson and National Vice-President L. F. Blumenthal, a permanent organization was perfected. Officers were elected as follows: F. C. Young, president; Joseph Stern, vice-president; W. H. Meier, treasurer; C. J. Hausenauer, secretary.

A committee was appointed to draw up the constitution and by-laws consisting of I. Boyland, chairman; Joseph Stern, H. Eckstein.

A buffet lunch was served and the prospects for a strong organization are very bright.

HOUSTON EXHIBITORS BUSY.

On Sunday, September 20th, a meeting of moving picture exhibitors of Houston, Texas, was held, the object of which was to take up the matter of attending in a body and making preparations for the forthcoming Moving Picture Exhibitors' League Convention in Dallas, October 15th and 16th. Mr. Anthony J. Xydias, vice-president, presided and the following exhibitors were present: Messrs. Maurice Wolf, Moye Wicks, Jr., W. Peters, W. Byron Billings, Moe Goodman, John J. Solan, A. Linczer, M. George Brown and Anthony J. Xydias. Mr. Wicks was elected temporary secretary and Mr. Wolf, captain. Every Houston exhibitor has signified his intention to be present at the convention.

CONNECTICUT EXHIBITORS ORGANIZING.

A strong, concerted movement is on foot in the State of Connecticut for an organization of motion picture exhibitors. The immediate object of the present movement is to make a strong stand before election and force the various candidates to show their hands and declare where they stand in the matter of Sunday opening.

On Thursday, Oct. 3rd, the exhibitors of New Haven got together and formed an association to be known as the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New Haven. The officers elected were: John Gentile, president; James J. Cannon, vice-president, and Mr. Fahy, treasurer. It is the intention of the newly formed New Haven Association to interest the exhibitors of other Connecticut cities in organizing a State League to affiliate with the national body. The New Haven men have made a good beginning and their secretary, Mr. Cannon, has already given evidence that he is a live wire. The Connecticut exhibitors should use the New Haven League as a nucleus for a State organization.

Election is coming. The Connecticut exhibitors are an unorganized mass. The politicians or candidates will give them mighty little consideration unless they make a noise. Now is their time to make use of that powerful possession, The Screen, which belongs to them. It is in their hands —this power that is as great as that of the daily press. Let them use it to smoke out every local candidate and every candidate for the State Legislature and make him tell where he stands on the Sunday opening question; then let them put it up to the voters on the moving picture screen.

All this should be done in a systematic manner. There should be a headquarters from which the State campaign should be directed. Every Connecticut exhibitor should at once get into communication with Mr. James J. Cannon, Secretary, M. P. E. L. of New Haven, care of the St. Elmo Theater, 296 Grand Avenue, New Haven. Perhaps a State League can be formed before election, and the men can put one over on the candidates. Meanwhile we pause to see what will happen; bearing in mind that excellent proverb: "God helps those who help themselves."

UTICA EXHIBITORS SEEING NEW YORK.

Caspar W. Shultz and J. E. Reardon, of Utica and Little Falls, N. Y., proprietors of "The Gem," "The City," and "The Star" theaters of Little Falls, were New Yorking for several days during the current week under the personal direction of Mr. Sam Trigger, president of the M. P. E. L. of New York City and State. Messrs. Reardon and Shultz are members of Local No. 2, M. P. E. L. of N. Y., of Utica, and are both militant hustlers for the cause. Mr. Trigger escorted them to the World office for a brief visit and then escorted them around the town. Sam is one of our best escorters. He never escorts anyone into any place that he isn't perfectly able to escort anyone out of again; with assistance if necessary, but he never needs any himself. Mr. Trigger would not permit the Utica gentlemen to return to their homes until he had recorded their solemn pledge to be present with their wives at the Second Annual Reception and Ball of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York, Thursday evening, November 14th, at Palm Garden, 58th Street and Lexington Avenue, New York City.

Tickets, $1.00; extra lady, 50 cents (selling very fast). Music by New York Hippodrome Band. Grand Olio composed of photoplay stars from the leading producing compenies—Essanay, Lubin, Imp, Thanhouser, Vitagraph, Reliance, Rex, etc. Grand March to be led by Maurice Costello and Florence Lawrence. Big event. Biggest gathering of the motion picture clan in New York (or anywhere else) this year.

LEAGUE NOTES.

The meeting which will be held in Dallas, Tex., on the 15th and 16th, promises to be a record one. M. A. Neff will leave Cincinnati on Friday, Oct. 11, stop over in St. Louis on the 12th and 13th for the purpose of meeting with the Insurance Committee; will leave St. Louis the evening of the 13th, arriving in Dallas, Tex., the evening of the 14th. Mr. Neff expects to return by way of Shreveport, La.

Mr. M. M. Wear, president of the state of West Virginia, visited the National president at his offices for two days on state matters pertaining to West Virginia.

Mr. B. H. Karnes, president of Local No. 1, of Huntington, W. Va., visited Mr. Neff's office on important business on the 6th.

PROGRESS REPORTED IN KENTUCKY.

The Executive Committee of the Kentucky Motion Picture Exhibitors' League met in Louisville on October 15th and planned for the annual meeting of the organization to be held in Louisville early in 1913. President J. H. Stamper of Lexington, Ky., presided at the gathering, which took place at the Seelbach Hotel. The Louisville Photoplay Association acted as hosts to the visitors, entertaining them at a banquet at the Seelbach. Conditions of moment to the members of the organization were discussed. The Kentucky Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is growing rapidly after a rather slow start. Exhibitors of the Bluegrass State did not take kindly to the organization primarily, but after learning its object they became enthused and those who do not now belong are in the minority. Officers of the League are enthusiastic over prospects of its being one of the leading State organizations of the country.

Bernhardt in "La Tosca."

(Universal Features Release).

By G. F. Blaisdell.

IT was a quarter century ago that the great dramatist Victorien Sardou gave "La Tosca" to the theatergoers of the world. The tragedy, perhaps, was brought to public attention as much through the interpretation of the famous Bernhardt as by reason of the fact that its author had then been a member of the French Academy for ten years. It may be of interest to note that three days after this issue of the World sees the light the actress, who on her mother's side is of Jewish descent, will be sixty-nine years old, her birthday having been October 22, 1844. Bernhardt has been on the stage for over half a century, and in this film we see her in one of her most successful plays. It may even be classed as one of her favorite plays—the fact that she appears in it is sufficient to indicate that; it is well known that Mme. Sarah bears the reputation of doing just those things that suit her own fancy and of looking with impatience on opinions that conflict with her own. If aught need be said in extenuation of this attitude her pre-eminence as an exponent of the dramatic art will be ample justification.

In transferring this play to the screen, Mme. Bernhardt took pains to secure adequate support. M. De Max has the role of Scarpia, M. Deneubourg is Mario Cavaradossi, and M. Maury is Angelotti. Without question the one scene that stands out above all others is that where Scarpia, the chief of police, is besought by La Tosca to save from death Mario, her lover, and Scarpia, on condition that La Tosca will sacrifice her honor, agrees to do so. Scarpia sends to the commandant of the castle an open order to use only powder in the muskets at the execution. Secretly he orders the captain to proceed as originally directed. La Tosca, believing Mario secure and having seen the passport prepared by Scarpia, pretends to agree to Scarpia's condition, but unseen picks up a dagger. As the chief of police approaches her and puts out his arms to embrace her La Tosca drives the knife into his breast. The passport is torn from the stiffening fingers; two great candlesticks are placed at the head of the body, and a large crucifix is taken from the wall and laid on the breast of the man who stood between La Tosca and happiness.

The action is fast. That it is interesting is proved by the fact that the two reels seem unusually short. There is no sterner test than this of the holding quality, or, to use a much abused word, the gripping quality, of a film. To compress into forty minutes the essentials of this great story necessarily involves the elimination of minor factors. So we have preserved the really vital scenes. If there is an absence of perfect clarity in one or two of the opening scenes the path of the drama is rapidly smoothed as the plot proceeds.

The story is of Rome of 1800. Baron Scarpia, the chief of police, is a persistent suitor for the hand of La Tosca, a celebrated singer. In Mario Cavaradossi, a famous artist, Scarpia has a rival; but the painter is the favored suitor of the singer. The opening scene is of the court entrance of the Argentina Theater, where La Tosca is appearing. Scarpia has ordered removed from a niche in a wall a bust emblematic of the Roman republic. Also he has ordered obliterated from a dead wall adjoining a few decorations of an irreverent populace—such, for instance, as "Scarpia, Tyrant." The bust is smashed on the pavement. In its place is put one of the King.

Angelotti is an irreconcilable, a man still true to a lost cause. He has seen the destruction of the bust typifying the republic. In anger he climbs to the bust of the King and dashes it to the ground. Scarpia arrests the revolutionary. La Tosca, in sympathy with the cause so openly espoused by Angelotti, conveys word to the man in prison by a trusted keeper that he will be assisted to escape by means of a workman's disguise. He is then to proceed to the church of St. Andrea, where Mario has a commission. The painter will take him in woman's apparel to his villa on the outskirts of the Roman capital. The ruse works and Angelotti safely passes out the prison gate.

In the church Mario is busily at work. La Tosca enters and criticises playfully the canvas of her lover. Then she unfolds her plan for the escape of Angelotti and departs. Shortly after the revolutionist enters. Mario hears footsteps and hastily conceals the fugitive. Scarpia appears, having followed the prisoner to this point. He and his men begin a search of the edifice. Mario brings out a dress and Angelotti jumps into it. The two men hastily depart. La Tosca comes back to the church. As Scarpia returns from his floor of the building he picks up a workman's apron. Then he discovers a fan. He inquires of La Tosca if it is hers. At first she says it is not; then hastily she says it is.

Scarpia is not in doubt as to the whereabouts of Angelotti. He is not far behind the two men as they reach the painter's villa. Mario hears the pursuers. The revolutionist has discarded his disguise; it is on the ground outside the house. Mario lets Angelotti down into the well. Scarpia enters the villa and demands of Mario the location of the refugee. La Tosca enters and the chief questions her. She shrugs her shoulders. Men enter bearing the dress in which Angelotti escaped. Scarpia moves fast. A screen is put in one corner of the room; behind it Mario is bound and on his head is placed the brutal screw. As the band tightens Mario utters no sound. La Tosca, discovering the situation, reveals the hiding-place to save her lover's life. Angelotti is brought in, dead. Mario is arrested. Scarpia decrees that the painter shall be shot at sunrise.

La Tosca goes to Scarpia to plead for Mario's life. She asks for a passport for the two, saying they will leave the country. Scarpia orders the captain of the prison to use only powder in the muskets and then secretly nullifies the open direction. He offers the passports, but at the price of the singer's honor. La Tosca declines the proposal. The chief pursues her about the room, around chairs and table. La Tosca, apparently changing her mind, agrees to the conditions of the chief. As she parleys she takes from the desk a dagger. The chief writes the safe conduct, and with it in his hand he comes to embrace the singer. She strikes, and he falls at her feet. La Tosca seizes a cloth, wets it and cleanses the blood from her hands and dress. Then she searches the desk for the all-important passport. She discovers it in the dead hand of Scarpia. She loosens the fingers and removes the paper; then she places the candlesticks and the crucifix.

Cautiously La Tosca peers out the door. She goes directly to the courtyard, just in time to see Mario brought out. She requests the privilege of saying good-bye. As she embraces her lover she tells him of the plan to save his life and of their departure and for him to fall and pretend death. The soldiers are lined up, the guns are discharged, and Mario falls. The soldiers file out. A surgeon comes in, touches the body and departs. The watch passes through, but does not stop. Soldiers enter with a stretcher. La Tosca asks them to leave the body to her, and they go away. The singer leans over her lover.

"Mario, dear, you may speak now." A moment later she asks in terror: "Why don't you answer me?"

She turns the face of Mario to hers. She screams and rushes to the wall. The curtain falls. La Tosca has flung herself to the pavement far below.

Kinemacolor Company Now Releasing.

Fine Quarters at Broadway and Forty-eighth Street a Busy Place—American Dramatic Subject Shown in Superb Exhibition Room.

THE Kinemacolor Company of America announces that it is now ready to enter the motion picture field. It is declared that as a result of its work it has completed 311 subjects; these are all ready for the market. The company is now thoroughly settled in its spacious and elegant quarters at 1600 Broadway, having an entire floor. The feature of the equipment is the exhibition room. This room, approximately 20 by 60 feet, is a marvel of luxury and appointments. Two projecting machines are used, insuring rapid service. There is a regulation safe deposit vault, with a storage capacity for 20,000 reels

Several months ago President Henry J. Brock engaged David Miles, a successful producer, as the head of the dramatic departments. For four months Mr. Miles has had three companies at work. These companies have added to the large Kinemacolor stock of foreign subjects the necessary complement of American-acted dramas and comedies.

The company announces that as a result of last week's advertising they have received 416 applications for film service. Many of these applications were by wire. Contracts are being closed rapidly.

Pursuing the company's policy of extension, Mr. Miles recently has established three more dramatic companies to work at the Whitestone (Long Island) studios and generally through the Eastern States, while he has personally taken the three original companies, comprising seventy members, on a Western tour. Two of these companies are to proceed at once to the new Kinemacolor studios at Hollywood, Los Angeles, where they will be permanently established. The third will create productions which have been prepared for months, using the wonderland of the Grand Canyon for a background. The cedar flats will catch every glory of this paradise on earth, and the scenarios to be worked out there are said to be tremendously effective. This company will later take side trips to all parts of California, New Mexico and Arizona, where useful "local color" may be obtained. Anita Hendries Miles will accompany the Western party as general scenario editor.

After Mr. Miles has started the companies at work, he will leave them in charge of Frank Woods and Jack Le Saint, both well known directors, and he will return to make up new companies in the East. Being the only company to produce the colors of nature, it will be necessary to make as many productions as half a dozen of the "black and white" companies combined.

Among the artists who went West with Mr. Miles are many familiar names, including the Misses Mabel VanBuren, Stella Bazeto, Clara Bracy, Ruby Ross, Lulu Davis and Linda A. Griffeth; Messrs. Gaston Bell, Charles Hemming, Jack Brammall, Charles Haydon, William Brown, Guy Oliver, Cecil Magnus, Robert Broderick, Murdock McQuarrie and Maylon Hamilton.

On Wednesday morning an American dramatic subject was shown at the projection room for the benefit of the trade press. It was entitled "East and West," a two reel subject produced by Mr. Miles. The story is of a young man in the East who is ordered West on a mining inspection trip. He bids good-bye to his sweetheart and duly arrives at his destination, Pine Creek. As he leaves the train he hires a horse and sets out for the mine. A drunken pedestrian bent on robbery hits him on the head with a stone, and Loyd falls from his horse. An Indian girl is shown in her canoe as she paddles down a shaded creek. Coming ashore, she discovers the unconscious figure. She bathes Loyd's head. Then she constructs of rope she has in the canoe and three poles which she fells, an Indian travoy, or drag. On this she places Loyd. Then attaching the horse she starts out for the Indian camp. In two weeks Loyd is convalescent, but his memory is blank. Four months later Loyd asks the chief for the hand of his daughter and gets it.

Four years later Earl, an old friend, at the solicitation of Loyd's old sweetheart, goes West to learn what he can of the mysterious disappearance. He finds Loyd, but is not recognized. There is an argument, to which the Indian wife in the next room listens in terror. She embraces her little girl and awaits the outcome. The war of words ends in a scuffle. Loyd is thrown heavily to the floor, landing on his head. The blow restores his memory. Loyd realizes then his situation. The wife, still listening in fear, sends out into the room the little child. The daughter goes to her father. At first there is no sign of recognition. Then father love asserts itself. The child is taken to his arms. Loyd calls his wife and introduces her to Earl. It is agreed between the two men that the old sweetheart back East shall be allowed to think that Loyd is dead.

The picture is well staged. The production of the drama in colors naturally will enhance the charm of the film.

Other subjects shown were "Spanish Bull Fight at Madrid," "International Yacht Race at Kiel," "Great Storm at Teneriffe" and "The Cave Dwellers at Atalaya, Canary Islands." The bull fight was a close view of the Spanish national sport. An effort had been made to eliminate some of the more revolting features of the spectacle. Enough were retained, however, to give the spectator an accurate idea of the game. It will thrill.

The yacht race gave a splendid view not only of many big racing boats, but also of the various war craft and the Zeppelin airship in flight. Best of all, however, was the picture of the great storm. There was a near view of the wreck of the ship Titlis, which had been piled up on the rocks. In spite of the fact that many of the scenes were taken with a leaden sky the photography was remarkably clear. It is a rare picture of the ocean in its angriest moods, and will arouse much interest.

On Monday, Oct. 14, there was a Kinemacolor display on board the Mayflower for the benefit of President Taft and his guests.

NEW MAJESTIC DIRECTOR.

Albert W. Hale, director with Thanhouser Company, leaves that concern Saturday to take up the same line of work with the Majestic Company. Mr. Hale was responsible for such notable Thanhouser productions as "Letters of a Lifetime" and "The Birth of the Lotus Blossom" and takes with him the best wishes of Mr. Thanhouser, Mr. Hite and the entire Thanhouser organization.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

THE board of directors of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company issued a general call to exchange men using that company's programs to meet in Chicago on Saturday, October 5. The call was responded to from all parts of the country and the first session was held in Club Room 12, of the Sherman House, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

It developed that the object of the meeting was to ascertain from the exchange men if they would support an increased program—from 22 to 28 reels per week—the increase to include some well-known makes, in addition to the brands already marketed each week. It was also sought by the directors to ascertain if the exchange men would feel disposed to add two and three-reel features to the increased weekly program, such features being well-known European brands, and the complete weekly program to number 32 reels. Both these propositions were heartily welcomed by the exchange men, and those whose means made it possible for them to do so, immediately placed their orders for the increased weekly output and for the European feature subjects.

The gathering had sessions Saturday afternoon and evening and on Sunday, in the morning and evening. The utmost harmony prevailed, and every exchange in the country affiliated with the Universal Company was represented personally, with the exception of the Wichita Film Supply Company, of Wichita, Kan., and the United Motion Picture Company, of Oklahoma, both of which were represented by proxy.

Fourteen of the most prominent exchange owners present, who are unconnected with manufacturing interests, were assured by the board of directors that no attempt will be made in the future to increase the number of exchanges now existing, and that the manufacturers will not acquire any more.

The proceedings terminated in a banquet, held in the Crystal Room of the Sherman House, on Sunday evening. Joe Engel, sales manager of the Universal, was toastmaster, and after a most enjoyable time the banquet was resolved into a business meeting, during which several important topics were discussed.

On the board of directors of the Universal there were present: Joe Engel, sales manager; David Horsley, P. A. Powers and Carl Laemmle.

The exchange men present were: Mr. Crombacher, Portland, Ore.; Mr. Bailey, Butte, Mont.; Mr. Kaufman, Montreal, Canada; Messrs. Drew and Blackmyer, Detroit; C. Olson, Indianapolis; A. F. Beck, St. Louis; J. W. Morgan, Kansas City; J. Bryson, Minneapolis; Mr. Fitzjarrell, Baltimore; Wm. Oldknow, Atlanta; V. Carrick, Philadelphia; Messrs. McMahon and Jackson, Cincinnati; Mr. Van Husen, Omaha; J. Singer, Des Moines; M. Markovitz, San Francisco; Earl Miles, San Francisco; J. Schnitzer, Toledo; A. Schmidt, Buffalo; N. Thompson, Cleveland; J. Nolan, Denver; H. Fichtenberg, New Orleans; Al Davis, Pittsburgh, and Messrs. M. Fleckles, C. R. Plough and Joseph Hopp, Chicago.

The following were also present: Messrs. Spellmire and Schroeder, Indianapolis; Brimmer, Stein, Walker, Chatkin and Edgar Hopp, Chicago; Oscar Jacobs, Milwaukee, and C. L. Fuller, special representative of the Universal Company, New York.

Carl Laemmle Interviewed.

Carl Laemmle was seen on Monday, October 7th, at his office, and in reply to a query as to his impression of the meeting of exchange men said in part: "We had very pleasant meetings and exchange men seemed to be pleased with business conditions. They are doing better business now, considerably so, than when under the regime of the old Sales Company. They themselves admit that they are making more money. My own exchanges are all doing better business and our patrons appear to be well satisfied."

On being asked about the Western product of the Universal, Mr. Laemmle stated with emphasis: "The Universal is producing out West, at the present time, some of the best Western films yet turned out."

Peoples Theaters Company, Los Angeles, Incorporated.

Carl Ray, of Muskegon, Mich., writes from Los Angeles, where he has been visiting for a month, that the Peoples Theaters Company has been incorporated there with a capital of $100,000. The object of the formation of the company is to build a new moving picture theater in Los Angeles, at Seventh and Hill Streets. It is proposed to make this theater one of the best modern structures for amusement in the country. A fine pipe organ will be installed in the new house, which will seat from 1,000 to 1,200 people.

The officers of the Peoples Theaters Company are: Carl Ray, president and general manager; Lou Somers, vice-president and resident manager; and Dr. C. J. Dove, secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Ray is one of the most enterprising exhibitors in Michigan, owning in that state, in the city of Muskegon, the Lyric, Amuse, Elite, Majestic and Orpheum theaters. All his houses are good paying business propositions, due to his skillful management. At the State convention of Michigan exhibitors, held in Muskegon last July, Mr. Ray was unanimously chosen as president.

Frank C. Cook, owner of the Airdome Theater, Manhattan Avenue and West 109th Street, New York City, spent a few days in the city last week. Mr. Cook visited the Selig and Essanay plants and made a thorough investigation of moving picture theaters in the city.

Charles P. Woolf, operator at the Premier Theater, 366 So. State Street, called at the World office last week and subscribed for that paper. The Premier, which is owned by Jones, Linick & Shaefer, offers good vaudeville and moving pictures. Business is pretty fair, Mr. Woolf stated.

Roy Cummings was a visitor at the World office last week. Mr. Cummings owns the following houses: The Amuse, Madison, Wis.; The Amuse and Majestic, Racine, Wis.; The Henry Boyle and Royal, in Fond du Lac, Wis.; The Amuse and Royal, Dubuque, Iowa, and the Majestic, Oshkosh, Wis. The last named theater has just been acquired by Mr. Cummings, being formerly known as the Bijou and owned by Timm & Beglinger, who ran it as a vaudeville house. Business is very good in all these houses, Mr. Cummings informed me. Indeed, he stated that picture houses were doing excellent business all over his section of the country. Western pictures of all makes are in high demand, Mr. Cummings said. Mr. Cummings was one of the pioneer exhibitors of Michigan and contrasted the present picture theater programs with those of the early days, when he offered 500 feet of film on Saturdays and Sundays at five cents admission. Mr. Cummings stated that his patrons would go away highly pleased at that. The Moving Picture World is carefully read in every house of the Cummings' circuit.

Miss Kathlyn Williams, the well known leading lady of Selig's Eastern studio, left for Edendale, Cal., on Monday, October 7th. Miss Williams will take the leading parts in several big productions, in which wild animals will figure prominently, at the Western studio. Few people have forgotten the "Survival of the Fittest," "Captain Kate" and "Lost in the Jungle," the thrilling animal pictures, in each of which Miss Williams assumed the chief character. Many for a time believed that Miss Williams was an animal trainer, so fearlessly did she intermingle with fierce leopards, lions and other wild beasts. This conviction, however, was soon dispelled when she appeared later in many leading roles that displayed her talent and versatility as an actress. Miss Williams is as fearless as she is beautiful, and picture lovers will await with much interest the new thrillers in which she will appear, under the direction of Producer Campbell.

The American Song Slide & Poster Company, 549 First National Bank Building, Chicago, has purchased the Hennegan stock of posters in Chicago and also has the exclusive agency in Chicago. The company will carry a full line of stock posters and heralds. Exhibitors are pleased with this move, as everything now will be more convenient for them, as they can secure all of their supplies at one place.

Handling the Kalem Release.

A Few Suggestions as to the Method of Advertising "From the Manger to the Cross."

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

CONTRARY to the belief expressed in some quarters that the hostile attitude of certain clergymen toward the Kalem five-part release, "From the Manger to the Cross," this writer is of the opinion that this hostility, based upon the mere statement of the fact of the release, will, in the end, prove the most valuable advertisement that this unusual subject will command.

To the clergyman unacquainted with the modern trend of pictures or familiar, perhaps, with certain European subjects in which biblical personages and angels from the Opera ballet are commingled in trick work and a garbled story, the idea of making the central figure of their religion the leading character in a photoplay seems sacrilegious if not blasphemous, and he is scarcely to be blamed if he gives vehement voice to his disapproval in his pulpit and perhaps through the press. But his indignation will lead him to early investigation of this picture in the hope of more material upon which to base fresh onslaughts and once he sees the production he will become an advocate in the same degree of emphasis as marked his attacks.

His censures will react to help the release and his warm advocacy will do more good than his attack has done harm. But for the general interest of motion pictures, without regard to the Kalem release in particular, the tendency to denounce the unseen should be checked and each manager should in quiet fashion constitute himself a committee of one to reply to these attacks, not through the papers but direct. See the clergyman who attacks the subject. Ask him to withhold judgment until he has seen the reels and explain courteously that no matter how repellant the idea may seem, the production itself is reverent in tone and treatment and such as cannot give the slightest degree of offense to any creed or sect. The keynote of the entire production is reverent repression, and the utter absence of rant and striving for theatrical effect make this portrayal one of the most remarkable film productions ever made.

The attitude of every exhibitor whether he expects to make early use of these reels or not should be one of courteous defense, and this applies as strongly to the independent as to the licensed exhibitor. The Kalem company has done something for pictures that is beyond the partisan lines of affiliation and every manager should uphold its efforts.

Much of the success of this picture is dependent upon the manner in which it is advertised by the men who present it. The life of Christ is not a subject to be "circused" in the usual fashion. It should be widely advertised, but not blatantly. Every word of statement should be carefully weighed, each piece of paper thoughtfully prepared. Most of the paper will be supplied by the Kalem company and be done in proper spirit; the same spirit that marked the production of the script, but there will be newspaper advertisements, small bills and other matters that will fall to the exhibitors and these should be prepared in a style that will be in harmony with the larger printing.

The great point will be the avoidance of statements that tend to shock the sensibilities of the community. In the breast of every man there is an inherent sense of decency no matter what his religion or lack of it. He will resent, consciously or otherwise, the irreverent and the crude, be he Christian or Atheist. It will be well to adhere strictly to the selected title in the announcements. "Christ in five reels" may appeal to some as a compact and comprehensive announcement, but it will do untold damage in arousing the spirit of hostility that will keep from the theater those most apt to appreciate the production.

If you expect to handle this picture make your first campaign among the ministers and the church workers. Tell them that you have the reels coming; interest them in the advertising photographs that will be supplied, assure them that the reels in no way give offense and, if possible, arrange with them to attend the performance prior to the public showing of the subject.

Approach the editors directly or through the business office as may be the custom. Impress upon them the vast educational possibilities of the production, explain that the scenes were made in so far as possible in the exact locations, that the governments in control of Palestine lent their efforts to a perfect production and that these films represent a mighty step in advance of the ordinary photoplay. Arrange for write ups, giving the press matter supplied by the company, but do not give the same notice to more than one paper unless you explicitly state that the matter has been duplicated to other papers. Be generous in supplying cuts of proper screen and arrange to have someone sent to the press viewing to which the ministers have been invited. This should preferably occur on the morning of the opening day and will be in the nature of a dress rehearsal, but see to it that your music and effects have been fully rehearsed before then. The effects should be few and simple if, indeed, any should be used.

If you have properly interested the ministers it is not unlikely that you will be able to obtain from them the addresses of the congregation. It is probably, though, that many pastors will object to supplying these addresses to the manager, fearing that other and later use may be made of the names so obtained. To meet this objection ask if it cannot be arranged to have some member of the church address the envelopes under the direction of the minister. In such a case the management will supply the envelopes properly filled and stamped and the addressing and mailing will be done from the rectory.

Make these announcements severely plain, a good quality bristol card of fashionable size with envelopes to match. Have them sealed and stamped with a two sent stamp. Because this is an appeal to churchmen do not suppose that you must use Old English type, though it is permissible to print the name of the title in Cloister Black, Flemish Black or Chaucer Text. Do not use the modernized Old English such as the Engravers or Shaw Text, but hold to the church faces. For the body of the announcement use preferably a gothic or some good oldstyle. The former will more nearly convey the suggestion of engraving, particularly if copperplate gothic be employed. The card should be in black or black with the title in church purple. The wording should be dignified and simple, something like this, perhaps:

> Messrs. Smith and Brown beg to announce that commencing Monday, January sixth, Nineteen Hundred and Thirteen, and continuing for the entire week, they will present at the Grand Theater, Broad Street, Corner of Main,
> "From the Manger to the Cross,"
> as produced by the Kalem Company in Egypt and Palestine in the actual locations in which these august events occurred, with organ and choir. This subject will be presented each afternoon at half after two and each evening at half after eight. Admittance may be had one-half hour earlier.

There is nothing "pulling" to such an announcement, but pulling ads would be as much out of place as using the twelve apostles for a ballyhoo. Preserve in every feature the note of dignity and this, of itself, will be your best advertisement.

If possible arrange with the Sunday and day schools for special performances between the school session and dinner time. Give the superintendents and teachers tickets and, if thought desirable, issue half rate tickets to be given the pupils. Get the children in early in the week and their talk will be one of your best advertisements.

Use the billboards as well as the papers if you can afford it, but do not have recourse to perambulating advertisements whether by sandwich boards or wagon.

Let the advertising continue within the house in the same spirit of reverence. Repress any tendency to laughter or loud talk. If at all possible have an organ and keep it going from the time the doors are opened even if you have to use two organists. Nothing will hold down the crowd better than the soft tones of the organ. Have the house well but not brilliantly lighted and the slightest suggestion of incense will not offend; but do not use more than half an ounce of powder burned fully fifteen minutes before the doors are opened and do not burn incense or offer any other suggestion of the church once the house is in.

If possible to get a minister to lecture the film do so, but be certain that he will not preach a sermon instead of lecturing the subject. The leaders are full and explanatory and the remarks supplementing these should be brief and to the point. An organ and quartette will be better than an orchestra, the orchestra playing the picture, but the quartette to be used only during the changing of the reels except, perhaps, that some selections from the various Stabat Maters may be very softly sung during the last reel, though it should be seriously impressed upon the singers that they are accompanying the film and are not rendering a number.

Avoid such jarring notes as surpliced ushers and the display of religious emblems. Despite the sacredness of the subject you are conducting a theatre; not a church. Plan each move with the utmost care to be in keeping with the film and you will find this release not only the most notable but the most profitable you ever ran.

Doings at Los Angeles

Studios in Demand at Los Angeles—New Universal Company at Work—Other Good News Notes.

THE only two idle motion picture studios in Los Angeles at the present time are soon to have occupants according to reports which were current this week.

The Kinemacolor Company, as announced in this column several weeks ago, has decided to establish a company in Los Angeles and has been seeking a location. It is now said that arrangements have been made to take possession of the property at 4500 Sunset Boulevard, formerly occupied by the Revier Laboratories. There is a well-equipped studio on the ground—an office, a couple of ample stages, a large building which has been used as a warehouse and scenery room, dark rooms and a group of smaller structures built to serve the double purpose of backgrounds and dressingrooms. The report that the Kinemacolor Company will take over this property still lacks definite confirmation, owing to the fact that the owner of the property is out of the city and the Kinemacolor representatives are not on the ground.

The other idle studio is the one at 1425 Fleming Street in Hollywood, formerly occupied by the Western Lubin company. It has been unoccupied ever since the Lubin people gave it up and discontinued their local company several months ago. Last week two strangers, who said they were from New York, visited the owner of the property and agreed with him on a price. A tentative agreement was entered into for the purchase of the land and improvements, which consist of two stages and a group of other buildings. Afterward the same two men looked up the owner of adjoining vacant property and made a similar agreement with him. The only detail of their plan they divulged, other than to say that they intended to use the property as headquarters for a new motion picture company, was that they expected to make extensive improvements between now and January 1, when they intend to begin operations.

The identity of the mysterious strangers has been a puzzle to motion picture people in this city ever since their negotiations became known.

Another Unusual Company.

The Universal Company has added another company at its Hollywood and Oak Crest studios and now has five directors constantly at work. The director of the new company is Otis Turner, who has been with the organization for some time and has already demonstrated his ability to make good in the new position. His company for the present is producing two-reel Bison subjects along big, broad, virile Western themes. This is the work which Director Frank Montgomery has been doing so successfully with his company. The addition of the new company does not mean that Montgomery will give up the production of Bison releases but merely that the output will be increased in response to a popular demand.

Charles E. Inslee is playing leads with Turner's company. Jack Conway, who was leading man in the company directed by Milton H. Fahrney, has left and William C. Dowlan has taken his place, playing opposite to Dorothy Davenport. Louis Fitzroy is a new character man with Fahrney's company. The only change in Director Thomas Ricketts' company is the addition of a new juvenile, Robert H. Grey, and there have been no recent changes in the company which is working under A. E. Christie, the comedy director.

Keystone Pictures Out.

The first reel of a series which will be put out by the new Keystone company, reviving the popular characters of "The Two Sleuths," was completed at the Edendale studio this week and sent on to New York. In it Mack Sennett and Fred Mace appear once again in the roles which they created and made so popular when they were both with the Biograph company more than a year ago—Sennett as director and Mace as principal comedian of the Biograph company.

A new series of stories relating the further adventures of these two blundering detectives is now in Sennett's hands—enough to insure that the releases will appear for a dozen weeks or more in case they prove to be still as popular as they were before.

Two releases a week will be Sennett's regular stunt from now on until further notice—a detective comedy and a farce. Outside the supernumeraries the company consists of Sennett, Mace, Mabel Normand, Ford Sterling and Henry (Pathe) Lehrman.

Director Ford with his company is now turning out regular Broncho releases at the old New York Motion Picture Company's plant in Santa Monica Canyon.

Brevities.

Local exhibitors have been shifting about with their programs this week. Two of the leading downtown houses have abandoned the General Film Company and have taken on Independent programs, and it is reported that this change is to be followed by the reappearance of Licensed pictures at the Garrick and the Banner, both operated by the Quinn Brothers. Evidently the "Q" management has made up its quarrel with the General Film Company.

The two houses which have jumped out of the Licensed into the Independent ranks are Rolfes and Huntoon's Picture Theater on South Main Street and Tally's College Theater on South Hill Street. The reason assigned by the managements of both houses for the change is that they were not able to meet the opposition of four-reel programs and occasional features against three-reel programs and no features. The inability of the Licensed exhibitors to get features is causing a great deal of uneasiness and dissatisfaction and a feeling that the General Film Company will have to meet this condition or suffer.

Exhibitors in other cities who consider themselves fortunate if they can keep their houses well filled when they show first-run pictures, charging only ten cents, or second-run pictures for five cents, will no doubt be interested in the case of Clune's Theater at Pasadena. This is a house which seats upwards of 1,000 persons. It is somewhat remote from the main business section. The management uses no pictures newer than third run and these apparently are only technically so, because there are occasional reels shown not more than thirty days after the release date. Every film in the house is exhibited previously in at least two houses in Los Angeles only ten miles away in distance and thirty minutes in going time by street car. Despite this fact the management charges 10, 15, 20 and 30 cents and has crowded houses nearly every night. Another picture house half a block away, which nearly every patron of Clune's has to pass, runs second-run programs and charges only ten cents, but does not get the business. Both houses use Licensed films. As the advertisement says, "There's a reason." But what is it? I can't figure it out.

James K. Hackett made what was said to be his first appearance in front of a motion picture camera October 3rd while playing an engagement in this city in "The Grain of Dust." Frank Egan took advantage of his presence in the city to use him in the first venture of the Egan Dramatic School into the motion picture business. The contract was signed up one day and the next Egan took Hackett and a company of actors to one of the local motion picture studios and produced a photoplay adaptation of the one-act play, "The Bishop's Candlesticks," based on Victor Hugo's famous story of Jean Valjean. The little play is one of Hackett's favorites and although it has been in his repertoire for a long time he does not often have an opportunity to present it because it is too long for a curtain raiser and too short for an evening's entertainment. Egan's new company, which was referred to last week, is now ready for work, although he is still unprepared to announce what arrangement he has made for disposing of his productions.

The traveling company of the U. S. A. Film Co., bound from New York to the City of Mexico, and traveling by a slow and circuitous route, reached Los Angeles this week. There are 36 members in the company and they are being guided, chaperoned and entertained by Charles G. Husted, secretary of the company. Their plan seems to be to go where they please, stop as long as they like and photograph everything worth photographing that comes in their way. They stopped three days at Redlands in the heart of the orange grove country while Husted and J. C. Ebling came into Los Angeles to look after business affairs. The company left New York August 18th and expects to reach the City of Mexico—when it gets there. Meanwhile they are turning out two releases a week with the regularity of clockwork. Everyone is reported well and having a good time.

Major J. A. McGuire, one of the veterans in the motion picture business—although this doesn't mean that he is as aged as it sounds—has been engaged as assistant director of the Western Vitagraph company at Santa Monica. When he is not helping out Rollin S. Sturgeon he will occasionally appear in the pictures.

POWELL.

Music for the Picture

BY CLARENCE E SINN

AN OPINION ON CUE MUSIC.

AN interesting letter received from "E. J. L., Brooklyn, N. Y." Lack of space alone forbids printing it in full. He says in part: "My viewpoint of picture playing is entirely adverse to what appears under the heading of 'Music for the Picture,' in the Moving Picture World of September 14th. There is no universal method of playing to the picture—no practical or suggestive help, and most of all, the very apparent lack of interest on the part of the film manufacturers. You agree and have admitted there is no method; you give no help to the aspirant when you allow him to believe he must 'be born to it'; or be a thorough bass and harmony student to play the pictures. The 'lack of interest' I will take up first.

"In the Vitagraph booklet we find musical suggestions for 'The Adventures of an Army Colonel' (released July 31st). Light music is suggested for the opening scenes while the picture opens with a burglary—a long and stealthy scene requiring music dramatic 'pizzicato' music. They close their suggestions by saying there are no especially appropriate cues, yet there is a second burglary more lengthy than the first, opening with a leader 'In Action.' Why do they say there are no appropriate cues and invite the loss of dramatic effects?

"Take their release of August 17th, 'Two Battles.' Allowing their opening suggestions to stand we are supposed to play march songs from the 'Balkan Princess.' Why march songs when immediately after Gordon leaves his sweetheart we find him in mortal battle and should play dramatic 'battle music' to add to the realism. The second battle suggestion is 'Radium Dance,' softening into 'Traumerei.' Why not, after playing military marches between the two battles, play dramatic music for the battle which is short, softening into a dirge as Gordon wanders among the dead on the battlefield, in search of his dead friend, softening into 'Traumerei' as he lays the flag over his friend, continue this through ensuing scenes, crescendoing as you see his sweetheart playing the piano and running into a dreamy waltz when you see 'Army Club' scene, continuing this to end. By 'crescendoing,' I don't mean 'faking,' but playing the same number louder, giving the impression that the piano on the screen lends to the volume of music.

"The Kalem Company's idea shows more sincere interest, but I have been unable to find it practical, as, should it be universally used, it would mean the outlay of a great deal of money per week—and lengthy rehearsals necessary for proper rendition. This brings us to the fact that we dare not interfere with the musician's repertoire (with which he is familiar), as this gives him a free hand to watch for cue .

"Now we come to the big scene 'Method,' which I desire to discuss: To obtain a method we must first know that the whole picture is made up of parts leading to a central point —the big scene, then relaxing into the result. These parts in my method are: 1st, Introduction of characters. 2nd, Incidents showing formation of plot. 3rd, Incidents showing running down of the plot or plotters. 4th, The unmasking—what is it all about—the big scene. 5th, The punishment of the perpetrators. 6th, The result or reward, moral or otherwise. In addition to this there are situations dramatic or humorous to be dealt with separately. In pictures similar to the Kalem Arabian pictures, music characteristic of the country should predominate. Dramas of court intrigue or ancient classics must be treated with classics.

"Using the above 6 incidents for my ground work I proceed as follows: No. 1 and the introduction of characters I use a waltz where it is apparent that the influence of a female character or child is necessary to the formation of the plot. Should a male character predominate I use a two-step, saving my 'rags' for comedy pictures. Should the scene open with a sick room, death scene, fight, etc., I deal with it as a situation, going right back to the above rule. For No. 2 you will find that a reverie, tone-poem, novelette or similar number will create the proper interest unless the introduction of characters and plot run hand in hand, in which case I continue through 2 as in 1. Now in No. 3 is where you must create interest, as it leads usually to the big scene. In pictures of a child or female interest I use a caprice, the predominating movement being of a legato nature, which gives the number a soft effect. For the male I use a caprice of entire staccato effect. I use a caprice for the reason that it is pleasing and unusual and allows for the widest latitude in tempo; you can start it slowly and as you near the big scene increase the tempo without marring the composition. In 'westerns' this might call for a gallop; the only way I have been able to cope with them is to keep on marching and galloping until I see a petticoat on the screen not on horseback, when I go into a waltz of rollicking tempo.

"For No. 4, 'The Big Scene,' it is impossible to say what to play without seeing the picture. For example, in the 'Army Colonel,' the big scene is where the Colonel suddenly turns on the light. At this point I make a strong crescendo and abrupt pause of about 10 seconds.

"Try this where a situation is created by unexpected and abrupt action or when a shot is fired that takes effect, remembering that the firing of the shot must have some bearing on the plot. No. 5, like 4, depends on the situation as to appropriate music. No. 6 I usually treat as No. 1, unless something is particularly suggested by the epicure. I do not contend that the foregoing are fixed rules, that the incidents occur in rotation as numbered, that they are all shown in one picture, or that the musical suggestions as given are conclusive, but I have obtained excellent results with them and in my house the music is talked about. Why can we not expect, demand and receive from the manufacturers a musical plot for all pictures prior to their release? To illustrate I submit what I would call a practical musical plot for pictures, using three pictures of entirely different style and temperament.

The parentheses for minutes at the end of the lines will help in selecting music, giving an idea of how long the number will run; can be determined by number of feet of film used figuring 60 feet to the minute."

Views and Interviews.

By Hugh King Harris.

THE pace is surely swift these days. By that I mean the writing of Photoplays—what passed muster only a few months ago to-day goes into the discard. I have before me a letter from Mr. H. J. Brand, of Brand's Advanced Motion Picture Co., Los Angeles, Cal. In it he asks for some high grade, heavy educational scripts, and states he is having a great deal of trouble finding what he wants. We see on the screens to-day so many of the purely dramatic and comical, that it is evident the educational of interest is difficult to produce.

A careful review of the situation will clearly reveal the fact that many educationals are in reality re-writes of magazine articles and adaptations of historical stories, etc., the educational with an original twist is a scarcity.

Perhaps one reason why we have so many "Westerns" is the fact that they are more easily written, the conventional half-breed, sheriff, cowboy and chase are susceptible of all sorts of twists and turns, and the writer who is onto the game can readily find it possible to produce salable scripts along this line.

But in talking with the managers of several theaters through the middle west recently there seems to be another side to the "Western," it is the love of the public for action, the out-door pictures, with horses and chases are never monotonous. Interiors are apt to pall on one; to sit for twenty or thirty minutes and simply see the leads play with words makes an audience restless; action is imperative, the railroad stories and war pictures prove strong favorites for this very reason, they have life.

Of many stories I have sold recently I have found on reviewing them that they are carrying more and more life, more special scenic effects, more vigor and the climaxes are vivid and there is real life in all of them.

The motion picture game is in the ascendancy surely. I have just completed a trip during which I devoted most of the time to investigating motion picture conditions. The outlook was never brighter.

Over in Chicago there was one thing I hated to see and that was the class of "vaudeville" permitted by the authorities in the picture houses. "Hoochee Coochees," "Girls in Blue," snake dancers and Salomes, it is a direct slap at the business and even if these rotten stunts are pulled off in the tougher district it makes no difference, motion picture houses should be properly conducted or not at all. One place I went into was as dark as a pocket and things were in a bad condition all around. I found several cities overdoing the sensational end in the way of advertising; a western show with scalps hanging on the box office is rather the limit.

I find, however, a tendency for much better lighting, ventilation, advertising and conduct in the theaters as a rule everywhere, the Cleveland, Detroit, Grand Rapids, Toledo, Indianapolis and other theaters visited were practically all run in a fine condition and the class of people attending gave evidence of the headway the pictures are making with the best character of playgoers.

Almost without exception the larger vaudeville houses are featuring the photoplays, some run the Animated Weeklies only—others run up to three and four reels, but the picture end is of decided importance all along the line.

The new releases by the various companies is an indication of the increased demand—but as stated in the opening paragraph, "the pace is swift"—the writer has to keep right up to the line and a little beyond. In this connection an amusing occurrence came up while I was in the Selig office a while ago. I met a very pretty little girl at the information desk, and on inquiry for "the Scenario Editor" was informed he was a very busy man. I stated I had written for them—and still she insisted that if there was any information I wanted she would give it to me. We talked for some time and she volunteered the information that every day a number of would be scribes blew in and if they were allowed to see the "Editor" he would have mighty little time to read the scripts, "And say maybe we don't get a bundle of them too," she remarked as she pushed back a wisp of wayward hair.

Of course I met Mr. Selig and we had a nice visit, although the "Editor" was really out of town, and by the way in spite of the fact that Selig's have sent most of their animals west they have a plentitude of dogs, steers, turkeys, and other animals out at the plant to make it mighty interesting.

In one of the offices the editor kindly allowed me to go over a big bundle of scripts submitted, out of some fifty there were half a dozen written in lead pencil—others with pen, some on dirty paper and rolled and creased in a way that would bring tears to your eyes.

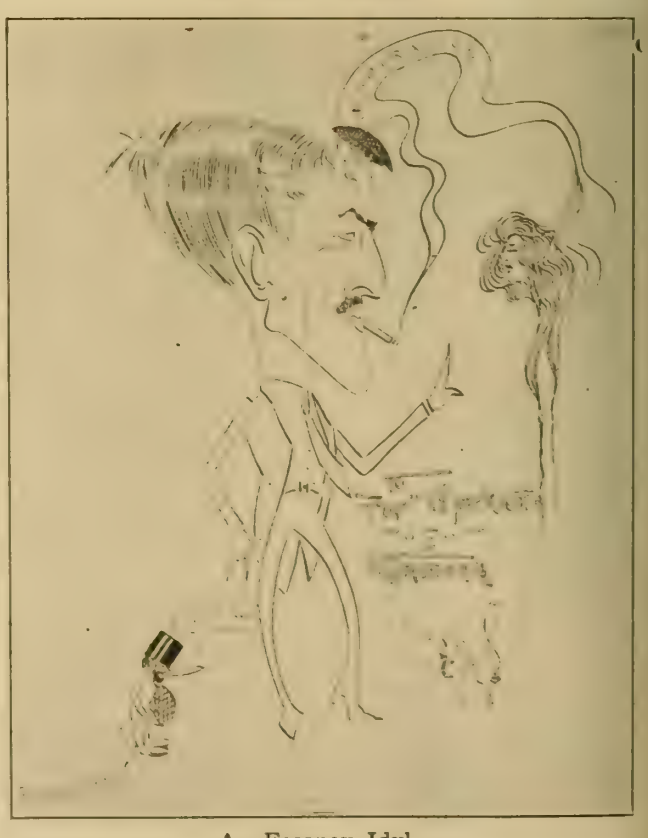
Surely the editors have their troubles and don't forget it—they are happier to receive the "live ones" than the authors are to receive the checks.

I met a great many theater managers who had a whole lot of good things to say of the World, and its many departments, it has done a great big lot of good in the field and is looked upon as an educator of the right sort; its advertising, music, projection departments and reviews, all came in for their share of praise.

As for the Photoplaywright Department, Epes knows that we pen pushers think of that end without saying anything more about it.

The entire trip was a pleasant one and gave me many fine ideas and an insight into many phases of the game I would not have missed. I know it would be a splendid thing if there could be more intermingling of those interested in the work and the business, every town has something a little different, the various manufacturers and managers all have good ideas they are glad to talk over and it would pay one to make even a short run to gather in some of the good things that await one along the route.

Suffice it to say, the one big noise in the amusement field to-day is the photoplay and it is not "coming into its own"; it has decidedly "arrived."



An Essanay Idyl.

The Efficiency Plan of Film Salesmanship.

By R. R. Nehls, Manager American Film Mfg. Co. of Chicago.

IT is not the writer's intention nor would it be of general interest to here enter into a discourse on salesmanship, but perhaps it would prove of value to better appreciate in what respect salesmanship, as applied to moving picture films, differs from its application to general merchandise.

"That fellow Smith never heard of Radio and he gobbled ours up like a Turk in famine." It was one of the salesmen of Bunk and Company, telling the boss how he sold a big order of an inferior article where the mere knowledge of a certain competing brand would have squeezed him out. This is not extraordinary—it happens every day. It does not prove that it pays to make an inferior line of goods, but it does prove the value of a standard. Again, a factory is probably making the best, but the selling force is not efficient and a really meritorious article fails to find a ready market, and it is true in the line of every day business that extravagant advertising has created a demand for a product which would fail on a "try-it-before-you-buy" selling plan. These, in short, are the general conditions to be found in the selling world.

But the film selling story supplies conditions in a class of its own, very likely unparalleled in the commercial world. The actual "film drummer" does not exist. Of course, now and then, the representative of a film manufacturing concern will go out across the country with a couple of prints in his grip, but he knows before he says "Good Morning" to the exchange man just why the exchange is not buying his film. If it is because the subjects are of poor quality, Mr. Salesman, if you please, will not dare talk quality unless he is pretty sure that his line has improved since that exchange last handled it. But he knows full well that if such be the case, that film man knows it for he has been watching the product, if for nothing more than to substantiate his own judgment in excluding it from his program.

In the recent strategic upheavals, sad to say, film has not sold on an absolute standard of quality. Your film salesman, therefore, will probably talk to his prospect along trade politic lines, trying to correct what he may consider an erroneous impression, perhaps, or smooth out the turbulent face of some antagonistic sentiment and he knows that he cannot sell him this unless he is successful in such an effort. Surely, that cannot be found in the curriculum of salesmanship. But the conditions are real, and have been known to forcibly bear on the prosperity of a film manufacturing concern.

Now, the question naturally suggests itself: "What is the selling system of a brand of film?" The answer is that no such thing exists—films are sold by a selling force, not a salesmanship system. So the cleverest man in the world could not sell a "Flying A" film if the brand were not up to the standard in photographic quality, dramatic cast and technical perfection. And when, on the other hand, it is in the quality class—why, it is its own salesman! Quality is its selling force, its advertisement to the man who buys, and its only and complete argument. No man on the road, carrying prints which may even be good, can talk quality into the product as a brand. It must exist. The exchange man may agree that the films shown him by the representative are of good quality, but he will not order on that alone. What he will most likely do is say, "Yes, these are pretty good, better than your concern has been making, but how do I know I'm going to get films as good as this right along? I'll watch them, Mr. Man, and if the releases of the next few weeks are as good, I'll wire my order." And no amount of argument is going to relieve him of the impression that the two sample releases shown him are special efforts made to catch his order.

Simmering the issue down to its actual merits, it will be found that the employes in the studio and laboratories are the key to the situation. They are the real salespeople. Let us see why. The camera man must possess a thorough knowledge of the operation of the camera and the comparative value of light or the prospect of sales is decreased. The dramatic possibilities must be worked out to the fullest extent and not handled in a "hurry this scene, I've got a date" manner, or the production loses much of its selling power. Good judgment must be exercised in the selection of proper settings or the sales will be impaired. The technical work at the laboratories, first of all, the development of the negative, timing the printing and subsequent development of the positive, the toning and tinting, and the assembling of the completed print, must be given the most careful consideration, because here the efforts of all other departments mentioned can be put to naught and the prospct of sales reduced to a minimum.

If the releases possess the selling force I have mentioned, you will see who are responsible for it, and if the film does not sell, then, you know where the trouble lies. The acting and photography, the settings and the story (and the last is by no means least) are the complete elements of the film. The raw film stock is not taken into consideration as it is presumed to be perfect, although this is not always the case. A chain is only as strong as its weakest link. Let any one of these departments weaken and even the doubled strength of the remaining links will fail utterly to hold up the selling force of the product.

It may be argued that the standing order system of film purchase gives market to occasionally unworthy productions. That is true, but while it applies to a print here and there, it has never proven of substantial advantage. For a poor production from a favorably known studio often indicates a change of regime, a mistaken notion of economy or some kindred error in management. Then it does not take long for the manager to receive emphatic expressions of opinion from customers. If he fails to read the signs and act accordingly, the cancellations follow, usually in sufficient number to prove to him that another change of regime is imperative or that his notion of economy is affecting the worth of his product. Then, when he has got his productions back to their former degree of quality, he is confronted with the task of bringing this fact to the attention of his customers forcibly enough to win back the reinstatement of orders, so that in the long run, the week or two that the standing order extended over the poor quality period was more than equalized before the order came back and the manufacturer finds his false economy rather expensive.

But was it argument that brought that order back? Was it a promise that the brand would improve in lieu of actual improvement? No. It was fulfillment, execution. Salesmanship availed nothing, but backed up by the selling force of a meritorious product, the personal representative was reduced to a commercial expedient. Of course, that quality will win is a platitude, but in no commercial pursuit is there a parallel to the relation between the visiting representative and his product in the film business. Here quality alone sells. The exchangeman must be shown, and the best he can see is the best that the studio and laboratories are capable of—that's the standard of efficiency, the selling force.

More About Photographs.

THE S. J. Fry Film Exchange, of Boston, is interested in our discussion of the distribution of photographs of scenes from the releases, but contemplates issuing only one frame of photographs of each subject, obtaining these from the manufacturers and renting the frame to the exhibitor by the day, the same as a banner.

The idea is a good one in a sense, but we think that it is too purely local in scope to win the approval of the manufacturers. They might be willing to supply a set of prints to cover the entire country, but the majority of them will not be willing to supply each locality with prints.

These photographs, known as "stills" or "flats," are made for the use of the press departments as cut copy, and they are more or less of a nuisance at best, since the handling of the negatives interrupts the larger photographic operations. It would be practicable to duplicate the sets, but it would not be convenient to make a dozen or fifty to supply isolated exchanges. At the same time if the Fry Company will make inquiry of the companies direct, they may be able to obtain the desired prints.

That Telephonograph.

Perhaps you've shared our curiosity as to the Telephonograph that the Pastime Theater, Brooklyn, uses. Mr. Wunderle has told us about it. He says "The Telephonograph" is a simple, but effective, device for a lecturer. A large wooden phonograph horn is suspended by an iron piping stand about eight feet from the floor. To this is connected a length of one-inch flexible metal tubing terminating in a cup shaped mouthpiece, the whole being well to one side of the screen. The lecturer is seated at one side of the screen and talks into the mouthpiece in his natural voice, the sound being amplified by the resonant qualities of the phonograph horn, which acts as a sound magnifier and makes it possible to fill the hall while speaking in ordinary tones, which not only saves the strain on the throat, but gives a more natural delivery. Another advantage is that the tubing being flexible the lecturer may face the screen and watch the picture without his tones becoming muffled. The Telephonographical part is used to excite attention, but the scheme itself is a capital one, and we are obliged to Mr. Wunderle for the information. We have sent the address of the firm making the stencil cutting machine he uses to several who made inquiry for it, and will be glad to send it to any who will enclose a return envelope with their request. The price of the machine—$100—puts it beyond the reach of many, but at that it is no more costly than a typewriter.

From China.

The Arcade Theater, Tientsin, sends in two samples for this week. One of these is the best piece of work they have yet shown us, a four-page folder in red and black on heavy cream paper. It advertises "An Evil Fascination," a Milano subject in two reels. Inside it is just a straight run story of the film with a few words of introduction. Typographically it is above the average. Another sheet shows a shadow cut with the suggestion that "Coming events cast their shadows before," an idea that may be worked out in several ways. This sheet advertises the Olympic Games of 1912 and the Oxford-Cambridge boat races, two films that emphasize the value of the pictures. Europeans living in China hunger for the news of home and the Arcade brings to their very doors all the sporting events that the Briton, in particular, longs for. Outside of the imprint of the Tientsin Press on most of the paper, the printing might have been done in any good American shop, though now and then a folder on native paper gives the hint of the Orient. We like the Olympic line: "Nations fighting for supremacy in the realm of sport." It is the Olympic games in a nutshell.

By the Month.

J. S. Thomas, manager of the Palace Theater, Scranton, Pa., and other houses in nearby towns, sends in a program of the Scranton house for the month of October. He writes:

> I have been in the habit of using printers' ink in advertising my houses, and am enclosing a copy of the program I am using for the Palace Theater. I find this method of advertising pays very well, but this is the first that I have used giving more than one week. This one was gotten up in a hurry, and I am planning some improvements for the next issue, including the use of a few cuts.

The booklet is 3⅝ by 5¾, sixteen pages, with cover in heavy tinted paper. The title page is well displayed, the type being clean and well set. There appears only the name and address of the theater, the legend "The House of Licensed and Censored Photoplays," and "Program of Features for October, 1912," the latter being played up to get the attention.

Inside the use of a cheap news ink gives some of the pages a rather smeary look, which no doubt will be improved with the next issue. Too much grease in the ink is apt to make for bad press work, and the work here is susceptible of improvement. A better ink will have to be used if cuts are run. On the grade of paper employed the 50 or 60 screen cuts will give better results than the finer screens. Four reels are used to each show, though but two are advertised, the foot notes keeping that fact in mind. These run:

> We show two additional reels every day, making four of the best reels that money can buy.
> Please bear in mind that this is only a partial list of our pictures.
>
> In addition to the subjects listed herein we show every day two other reels. For titles watch the posters.

Some Small Points.

We think that a ten-point full face for titles throughout would be better than the alternate light and bold twelve-point that is used. The two faces do not match and the impression of hurried work is conveyed that does not aid the appeal. We think, too, that six instead of eight-point type and a more equal distribution of the space would help some. Where a subject is dismissed with a line, possibly because the information is not at hand, the impression created is that the reels so slighted are not the equals of the others. Toward the end of the month the subjects are not more than hinted at since the printed matter supplied by the companies is not at hand and Mr. Thomas uses six-day stuff. We think that the monthly program is gaining favor since it works well where the scheme has been tried, and in due course it may be possible to interest the companies in giving advance information further ahead.

The value of a booklet of this sort depends upon the effect created on the minds of the readers and the best impression will not be made unless the arrangement is orderly and business like. It is not always plain to the reader why he does not like the issue, but the sub-conscious feeling is present that the advertisement is not what it should be. Mr. Thomas has taken better care of his end than has the printer.

Tips from Tally.

Seymour Tally, assistant manager of the Broadway Theater, Los Angeles, sends some programs and this letter:

> I enclose herewith a few of our late programs, assuming that you may be interested in them. We have found them a very satisfactory medium for advertising. We get out about seven thousand per week; half in the theater and the other half about town; they cost $18.00 for the printing and I get up the written matter myself. We believe that the stories of the photoplays given in advance in this manner bring us many patrons.
> We noticed an article in the last number of the World wherein your correspondent in this city stated that Quinn Brothers were possessed of a lease which we had given them on this house. We would like you to contradict that statement, as we are the sole owners of this theater and have given no lease to them and do not expect to do so.

Snappy Talks.

We find the Tallygrams, as they are called, decidedly good. They are four-page folders on heavy paper in light shades of cream and yellow. Each issue has a front page differing from the others, the value of which is matter for debate. Our own belief is that the best way is to have a front that can be recognized at a glance rather than a constant change. The page is four inches wide by nine long and carries the double change for the week, there being five reels to each program in addition to soloists.

Page two is reserved for editorial chat changed each week, the changes being shown on the third and fourth pages. We think the most effective display for the subjects is the marginal title here shown; a new and effective idea:

Dr. Skinnem's Wonderful Invention —Kalem	Dr. Skinnem is flat broke and greatly distressed. Doctor falls asleep and dreams of a wonderful invention that enriches him and causes the departure of all his troubles. What the invention accomplishes and its final results are laughably depicted.
The Ancient Port of Jaffa —Kalem	A splendid view of Jaffa from the sea greets our eyes and, going ashore, we marvel at the wonderful street scene near the Custom House. We journey on to the auction market and then visit the public fountain on the Jaffa road.

The Editorial matter is good enough to reprint. Take this, for instance:

> A great many people claim that Motion Pictures are injurious to the eyes.
> WE claim that a visit to our theater is not only a pleasure but a positive rest to the optic nerves.
>
> The decorations and floor coverings are of a cool, pleasant green; the hangings on the stage are of the same shade and serve to frame the picture to the best advantage.
> The picture screen is not of the type which forms a glaring reflection of all white lights thrown upon it.
> FURTHERMORE, by the aid of a new feature installed this past week, the blank screen is never shown, a heavy velvet curtain being drawn aside as the picture starts and drawn together as the picture ends, a momentary pause being given between pictures to allow for relaxation, for the reading of programs and for the exit of patrons.

The curtain scheme is good. Here is another:

> DO YOU KNOW THAT TALLY'S has the only disappearing orchestra in America and, so far as we know, in the world. An orchestra that always "rises to the occasion." During the opening overture they are up where you can see them play; upon finishing, piano and all, they sink down out of sight where the glare of the orchestra lights won't bother your eyes.

Speaking of our orchestra, in their choice of selections and in their rendition, they are unsurpassed and the fact that they "play the pictures," that is, play such music as best suits the style of picture, adds greatly to the attractiveness of the show.

TALLY'S THEATER is closed to patrons between five and six P. M. and is thoroughly swept and cleaned and the air becomes purified before the evening crowd takes possession.

This feature is not found in the "continuous run" houses.

Keeping in Touch.

It's a splendid thing to keep in touch with your audience by means of slides and programs. Tell them what you have done for their comfort and what you are going to do. Make them feel that you constantly have their best interests at heart and that you are running the show to give them pleasure as well as to make money for yourself. Get the matter up in a breezy fashion and you'll find that your chat is as helpful in creating business as is your announcement of films. To a certain extent the play's the thing, but given precisely the same program in the same condition and one house will make money where the other loses. One man puts his personality into the house, the other does not, and the personality of the house counts as strongly as the personality of the player on the screen.

There are some theaters in New York given over to vaudeville that have changed hands recently. The former manager stamped the houses with his personality and he sold the dollar seats first. The new owner has left his imprint on the house and the seventy-five cent seats mostly sell after the cheaper seats are gone. Everything you do and say helps or hurts your house. See to it that your words and actions are helpful.

A Montgomery Tribute.

Down South, Frank Montgomery has left his imprint on his chain of houses and the other day he was accorded the unusual honor of being given the editorial page cartoon in the Jacksonville Metropolis, the cut showing the manager sitting on a bench tightly clasping Miss Jacksonville while the more attractive Miss New York tries to coax him away. The caption indicates that he is going to stay South, but for all that we should like to see New York made one of the feeders of the "Jax" circuit. Mr. Montgomery would give us a style of performance that is not to be found in these parts just now. It counts for something when you can make yourself such a factor in local affairs that your plans provide inspiration for the cartoonist.

Ticket Books.

The Cameraphone theaters, Pittsburg, are selling books of twenty-four tickets for one dollar. Apart from the appeal to the bargain instinct and the saving of money, the tickets are a convenience and help to clinch business by making regulars. The Cameraphone Bulletin seems to keep straight up to the mark week in and week out. They are using this form which may be useful to others:

ARE YOU ON THE MAILING LIST?

Of late we have received many requests from patrons to place their names on our "Weekly Bulletin" mailing list. To give all an opportunity, we invite those interested to fill in the form below and mail same to us, and each Saturday we will mail the "Bulletin" announcing stories for the following week.

Believes in the Papers.

Lee D. Balsly, manager of the Aladdin Theater, Springfield, Mo., and treasurer of the Missouri Exhibitor's League, sends a well displayed ad and expresses his belief that in towns of from 10,000 to 15,000 inhabitants the newspaper offers the best advertising. It does when ads look like his. At the same time we think that posters should back up the work of the papers. Mr. Balsly writes that he finds it necessary to drop around and see the compositors once in a while to keep them in touch with his ideas and that is probably the reason why he gets an excellent display. Printers are like others in that they like a word of appreciation now and then and they will work harder for a man they know than for one who merely sends his copy over to the office and never comes himself. We think that the compositor can suggest the composition, though we cannot preserve the proportions of the advertisement. Here it is:

"HOUSE COZY"
A L A D D I N
ALONE IN NEW YORK being the second story of
"WHAT HAPPENED TO MARY."

The story is absorbing, splendidly acted and will increase the interest in Mary's character which was begun in the film "An Escape from Bondage," released a month ago.

Mr. Smithers "Opens."

C. T. Smithers, of the Idle Hour circuit has been keeping his Aberdeen house open all summer through various schemes including an orchestra strike because the house was kept too cool, but he has a formal opening which enables him to get out an announcement and the announcement is good enough to make us overlook the opening of an already opened house. Mr. Smithers writes that he has issued these opening announcements for several seasons and finds that it pays him. There is no reason why it should not, for he spreads himself on this annual.

The one to hand is in dark green ink on light green paper and the envelope matches exactly. All of the circulars were sent out sealed and with letter postage, and the sheet is two fold, though but one page is used. It conforms to fashionable demand and is quite the best thing Mr. Smithers has sent us—and he is a regular and welcome contributor, at that. The copy reads:

THE IDLE HOUR CIRCUIT
ABERDEEN, S. D.

September 28, 1912

Dear Friend and Patron:

Monday, September 30th, and Tuesday, October 1st, are the dates set for our formal annual opening for the season of 1912 and 1913. We have given you the best procurable in motion photography and music during the past year, but at this year's opening we have made an unusual effort and obtained features far in advance of even our own expectations.

Along the musical line we are stepping forward. We have secured for leader in the five-piece orchestra, Mr. Vernon Alger. This means the best possible in musical selections.

We have installed the very latest model machine, Power's Cameragraph No. 6 A, the highest price machine on the market and the first shipped into South Dakota. This new 1913 model is fire-proof and the pictures will be absolutely without flicker. The machine has larger magazines, which enables us to add another 1,000 feet of film to our program, making a total of 4,000 feet of pictures instead of 3,000, which we have been running. Intermissions can be cut down to a very small margin.

Just to call your attention to the improvement we have made in our programs, would say that a year ago one big two-reel subject once a month was all that could be procured. Now, by the selection of big features from the famous Universal Film Manufacturing Co., we are showing one and two every week, all that it is possible to obtain. We have secured for our opening, Monday and Tuesday, the fine two-reel subject, "Maud Muller," and for Wednesday and Thursday, "The Outcast Child." These will be followed by other two-reel subjects, "The Celebrated Case," "Rip Van Winkle," "Massacre of the Sante Fe Trail," "Filial Love," "At Old Fort Dearborn" and others.

Every effort will be put forth this coming season to make "those idle hours" spent in the Idle Hour very happy ones.

We wish to thank you sincerely for your patronage in the past and hope to see you in attendance at our opening days, September 30th and October 1st. I remain,

Yours very truly,

C. T. SMITHERS.

Probably even Mr. Richardson will be interested in learning that the larger magazine of the Power's 6A will permit four instead of three thousand feet to be run. There's a house in town that is running 8,000 feet on an old machine, but it is allowable to cheat a little when you write an advertisement and no statement like this will harm, while it does help to emphasize the facts of the new machines and the longer show.

But Not This Way.

Quite different is the statement that is made by the Royal Theater, at St. Joseph, Mo., in regard to the Queen Elizabeth pictures shown September 23-26. It says in part:

This is the first time MADAME SARAH BERNHARDT has ever appeared in motion pictures. The ROYAL THEATER is the first motion picture house in the United States to show this picture. The admission will remain the same—10 Cents.

This sort of thing is foolish, so foolish that a friend who has no interest in the exhibition end sent in the advertisement for our delectation. On the face of it, it is absurd to suppose that this important film should be shown first in the Missouri city and no one will believe it. If they did believe it it would not heighten the importance of the reels in any way and in an effort to be impressive the management has made itself ridiculous. More still, it overlooks Camille, which was widely boomed.

Otherwise the advertisement is effective, dropping six inches across three columns, the advertisement itself being 3 x 3¼, the announcement being framed in eight point full face alternations of Sarah Bernhardt and Queen Elizabeth in this fashion:

HARDT SARAH BERNHARDT SARAH BERNHARDT
HARDT SARAH BERNHARDT SARAH BERNHARDT

If You Run That Film.

And by the way, if you run Queen Elizabeth, stop with the scene before the last, cutting out that absurd death flop into the pile of cushions placed before the throne for no other reason than to save the Bernhardt bones. It gives a comedy finish that is hurtful.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

At the Universal.

ACCORDING to the latest announcement the Universal will retain its script reading room, but will supply each studio with one or more photoplay writers on salary. These writers will edit the scripts purchased on the outside and write stories of their own to make up the number required by the directors.

The reading room will be at 1 Union Square until the change is made to new quarters, and will be under the direction of C. B. ("Pop") Hoadley, a thoroughly practical and experienced photoplay writer, and a man who has made hosts of friends through his editorial connections with Imp, Champion, Powers, and others.

It is too early to announce a scale of prices, but we do not think that the ten dollar script will last long under the Hoadley regime, for no experienced editor expects to get scripts of proper quality for that price, and Mr. Hoadley wants to see the best. We think that the announcement of his appointment will be sufficient to raise the curse that has hung over the reading office, at least to those who know.

It may interest some to know that the offered free criticism of scripts was a scheme that died a-borning.

In Sending to Eclair.

The Eclair Company asks that scripts offered them be addressed to the photoplay department of that company, and not to an individual. Numerous scripts are received intended for Eclair, but addressed to Eustace Hale Ball, although Mr. Ball has not been connected with the Eclair Company for several months.

And having delivered their message to you, we want to add the remark that the same process should be followed in all cases unless you enjoy such closely personal relations with the editor as to warrant the direct address. It does not in any way assist you to sell your script more quickly or to better advantage, and sometimes it does retard the handling of your work promptly should the person addressed be ill, absent from town or no longer with the company. If you want to sell scripts to a company address them to that company, and not to an individual, and get over the crass foolishness of the belief that if you can learn the editor's name and address them to him direct, you can get the inside track. We have even seen scripts come in addressed to initials because those initials were signed to a letter. The initials happened to be those of the stenographer who had written the letter. Don't do it.

These Your Sons?

Emily Ward Schott, Canajoharie, N. Y., has received in one of her own return envelopes a script entitled "Two Sons of Wealth." As the company did not enclose a rejection slip, she has no knowledge of the sender, and the script itself bears neither name nor address. The letter is postmarked Station O, which is the postal district in which the Universal office is situated, and probably the script came from there. The owner of the script can have the same on application with identification and stamped and addressed return envelope. Do not send to us. Send to her.

Change at the Comet.

We have received a number of letters from authors who complain that they are unable to obtain the return of their scripts from the Comet Company. These complaints are well founded, but we believe that there will be no cause for complaint with Joe Roach on the desk. Comet has had no photoplay editor and has treated scripts with scant courtesy. Some have gone back and others have hung around. Mr. Roach promises a new condition and we think that some of the long lost scripts will presently come home, while more recent arrivals will be handled with celerity and due courtesy.

Not Enough Action.

A correspondent writes that he received a script back the other day with the remark that there was not enough action, but he thought he put in all the action that was essential for the player.

Not enough action, in the studio, does not mean that the author has not told the player fully what he should do, but means that there is not enough action (or movement) to the plot. There is not enough happening to make a good story. A plot may contain the germ of a good idea and yet be so badly developed that there is nothing to the story as it appears on the screen save the start and finish of the play with some more or less germane action in between. Such a plot lacks action. The actors act, but their actions do not interest because the action is unmeaning. There are actions and actions. See to it that your action interests because it rouses speculation while it advances the story.

"Too Conventional."

From Fond du Lac comes an inquiry as to what "too conventional" means, the writer stating that many of his stories come back so marked.

There are two words that the novice will encounter—"obvious" and "conventional." The conventional story follows the old, beaten path. It lacks novelty. It adheres too closely to established form. In a word it lacks newness and so, interest.

If a man coming down the street meets a woman whom he knows he raises his hat in salutation. That is the conventional greeting. He follows the conventions; the accepted usage. Millions of men daily greet millions of ladies with the conventional raising of the hat. There is nothing novel or exciting in the action.

But suppose that a man met a woman and instead of raising his hat to her grabbed her by the neck and demanded the return of the false teeth she has not yet paid him for. That action would be most unconventional and therefore exciting. It is not well to have such strenuous dentists as heroes for your stories, but you want to come closer to the dentist than to the "lid" lifter in forming up your plots.

"Obvious" merely means that when your story starts everyone knows just how it is going to end because stories that start that way end in a certain way. When you fool them by using an entirely unsuspected line of development you have ceased to be obvious.

Horace G. Plimpton.

We are not running a picture of Horace G. Plimpton in our photoplay editor series because he is the Edison editor, but because he is not. This is to correct the popular belief that he is. His official title is Manager of Negative Production and he has full responsibility for all departments of the production end. He supervises those who do select the stories just as he supervises the production of the plays, selects the companies, plans their field work and looks after the other innumerable details that make him one of the busiest men in the photoplay world. When Mr. Plimpton took hold of the Edison studio the product was uncommonly bad even for several years ago, but he has brought the production to the front rank and has held it there—which is an even more difficult attainment. He was the first to use copyrighted stories as such, one of the first to credit the author on the film, and seemingly has solved the cast problem by announcing each important player immediately before appearance.

An Ungallant Author.

Steve Talbot offers a funny proposition in a recent letter. He writes in part:

> What is the matter with a man who writes a photoplay a week, and never by any chance introduces a female lead, and hardly a female character in any of them?
> I suppose I work along the same lines as other writers. A single idea comes to me—usually while watching a play on the screen—I turn it over in my mind for a day or two. At the end of the second day I have the plot evolved in my mind. I then write a four or five hundred word synopsis which includes every incident which will strengthen the plot. Let that cool off for a day, then make a rough draft of the scenario, scene by scene. Next I write a two hundred word synopsis, and after going over the scene plot with a blue pencil, copy the whole and mail it.

What perplexes me, and inspires this query, is the fact that after my photoplay is finished, and ready for mailing, I am surprised to find on reading that I have no female part of any importance and usually none at all. If this omission were premeditated, I should not mention it, or bother you with a letter; but the very fact that I am surprised to find that my script is not suitable for the Victor or other company, which features a woman, shows that the omission is the result of something in my make-up which is—well, to say the least—not conducive to an alarming success as a photoplaywright, now that most of the producing companies are depending for their success upon the beauty or ability of a Pickford, Lawrence, or a Fuller.

The first photoplay I ever wrote that is worthy of an editor's attention did have a prominent part for a woman, and with its rejection by the Victor Company came a letter from C. H. van Buskirk, saying that a similar theme had been used by the Imp Company, and requesting the pleasure of seeing more of my work. Somewhat elated, I immediately went over in my mind my other productions, and was amazed to discover that out of a dozen (the grand total), none had a female character, or an excuse for one, so I am without the means of affording Miss van Buskirk the requested pleasure.

Now, after reading the above, which I hope makes my distressing position plain to you, what's the matter with me? And do you suppose I am alone in my peculiarity?

We think that Mr. Talbot makes his discovery too late. He works in a methodical and businesslike fashion, but he doesn't seem to size up his plot correctly in its early form. He should take that synopsis and ask himself where the lady is, and if she is not to be found the only thing to do is to force her into her proper place. There is, of course, a distinction between female lead and leading woman, and we take it that Mr. Talbot has his leading woman. The thing, then, to do is to twist the plot in such a fashion that the woman has the stronger part. It will not only be good mental discipline, but it will be a revelation in the matter of flexibility of the plot. Almost any story can be thrown to the man or woman at will, and since Mr. Talbot now knows his fault and the remedy we hope soon to have report that he is out of his difficulties.

If we ran a correspondence school (which Heaven forbid!), we should require our pupils to write a story for a leading man and then turn it over to the woman. It can be done with seven stories out of ten and sometimes with decided advantage to the plot.

Why Not?

Here are a few remarks from James Carroll, the Powers prize winner, who writes:

How easy it is to pick flaws. Everybody's doing it. The incongruity of a costly bracelet on the arm of a tattered heroine returning to the old homestead is readily seen; and other inconsistencies occasionally shown on the screen. But why so many willing to throw the hooks into the director? Pause, put yourself in his place, consider the mass of detail on his overburdened shoulders, the whirl of events in his maelstrom of duties, and cease to wonder that some little detail sometimes escapes his notice.

Away with the hammers! Out with the helping hands, and let's all get together with suggestions for the betterment of the script itself. If a good idea strikes you send it in and let it redound to the benefit of all. There is, I fear, too much of this jealous hugging to the breast of many little tips which might be helpful to our fellow writers. It is a struthious absurdity; the obsession of Number One. The selfish man never attains to the pinnacle point of success. The student of metopomancy will tell you that the over-development of the bump of selfishness retards, seriously, the growth of the bump of genius.

We were a bit doubtful about that "struthious," but Mr. Carroll says it means to hide your head under the sand like an ostrich, so we'll take his word for it, though we do not approve of words that are to be found only in dictionaries costing ten dollars and upward.

But there is meat to what he says. If you've been helped, help others. Tell what you've found out that others may be helped. You can't write all the scripts. Help those who are trying to write those you cannot handle. Send in your suggestions, rather than your kicks, and help make this department an exchange of ideas. If you are up it is because someone has given you a helping hand. Pay back your debt by helping others.

Mr. Carroll also suggests the reading of the entire paper even to the Projection Department, which at first glance might not interest the author. It is a good tip. It is ostensibly for operators, but Mr. Richardson has much that should interest authors. The more you know about any phase of the business the better qualified you become to succeed in your own line.

Points of View.

A well-known woman writer wants to know why it is that her estimate of a story is not accepted by the editor. She says:

Why do not authors and editors agree as to what is a good story? I wrote a poor story in about a day, sent it out several times. It came back so often I was about to throw it into the waste basket, when I tried it once more and received $15 for it—which was enough.

There is not a man or woman living who can get the perspective on his own work. We took $8 for one of the best fiction stories we thought we ever wrote. When it came out in print we were almost ashamed of it, yet for three months we thought things about a well meaning and hard-worked editor who saw with clearer vision than our own.

This is even more to the point in photoplay where few writers have the precious gift of being able to visualize their action. The story that may seem best to the writer may be dull and uninteresting on the screen, and the bald recital of bare action may make a feature. Don't make up your mind that this is a good and that a poor story. Find out what the editor thinks and give him credit for knowing.

Lois Weber on Scripts.

It is not generally known that Miss Lois Weber, until lately of the Rex, is a writer and producer as well as player, but the clever leading woman has many capital productions to her credit. We are indebted to her courtesy for the following opinions and suggestions.

"In writing for the motion picture field, I have in mind that five-foot shelf of books made famous by President Eliot. My books may not be identical with his, but the shelf serves as an illustration.

Miss Lois Weber.

"My ideal picture entertainment would be a well assorted shelf of books come to life in as many thousand feet of film as were required. There would be a bit of poetry, more good prose, some philosophy, history, geography, religion and even a few character sketches. Variety would indeed be the spice of life in the world of motion pictures.

"But the idea has taken firm root that the ideal photoplay is one in which excitement is sustained throughout to some novel climax, and presumably for that reason most of the playwrights and editors and directors strive to attain that ideal.

"Well directed, such a play does indeed make a good picture, but equally good pictures can be made of climaxless plays. Don't let us all cut out after the same pattern and feel that the height of originality has been reached when we find a new climax.

"The effort will only bring discouragement to the writers who lack subtlety or original imaginations, but who may have ideas just as attractive in their way if they adopt the pattern best suited to them. They might be the philosophers, historians or poets necessary to the book shelf where there appears to me to be a great deal of room for them.

"I have read hundreds of photoplays by ambitious writers, and, with few exceptions, writers most lacking in imagination strove most for the murder, theft, suicide or illegal elopement that represented climax to them. I do not say that all the unsuccessful writers would succeed by remembering that such crimes are too common to be interesting, but I think more would meet with encouragement than do at present, and the atmosphere would be purified considerably.

"If only more directors (and most of all, directors of directors!) would realize the value of simple themes in pictures and give them a place. They are harder to direct, it is true, but how refreshing when well done. It may be that these directors are not over burdened with simple theme plays. That the public likes them, I know from personal experience. Take for illustration a picture made this year, "The Price of Peace." The story was most simple.

"A man married a woman whom he loved devotedly. She died and he was beside himself with grief. He sought relief in every worldly thing without avail and learned the lesson of life at last, that the "Price of Peace Is Holiness." The action moved simply and with dignity. There were no terrific scenes and no evil accomplishment. It was a series of beautiful and convincing illustrations. That photoplay further sinned against accepted traditions by having a subtitle before every scene where no subtitle was required for mere understanding of the action.

As to the Subtitle.

"Where illustrating a poem on the screen, a verse is placed before each scene. In the case of "The Price of Peace," a short story written in twenty sub-titles was illuminated by twenty scenes. Of course that method must always remain the exception rather than the rule, but it must be taken into account when arguing against or for the sub-title.

"Many good photoplays require no sub-titles at all for effect or understanding, but often the right words in a sub-title or other insertion are the means of creating an atmosphere that will heighten the effect of a scene, just as tearful conversation or soliloquy at a stage death bed will move the audience to tears where the same scene enacted in silence would leave it dry eyed.

"Naturally the wrong words may have the opposite effect, but that is no argument against the sub-title; it only argues that the wrong person wrote it.

My own experience has been that the photoplaywright need worry little or not at all about sub-titles, and not a great deal about form and scenes, for most directors base their acceptance or rejection of a play on its main idea as set forth in the synopsis, and by the time they have rearranged the scenes of an accepted script to their liking, the original sub-titles are of no value.

Some few well-known writers have the pleasure of seeing their ideas carried out in full, but unless one is such a character, one's ideas will appear "as is" on the screen, which, after all, is better than not having them appear at all.

And those writers who have not yet had the latter half loaf can have little help given them other than has been offered heretofore through these columns, for no one can teach ideas as has often been said, and it is the idea that counts. All should have neatness in their manuscripts as one point in their favor, for an editor has no expectations of finding a neat idea in a dirty, much corrected and misspelled manuscript. Don't give him more call for prejudice than he already justly has.

"In the meantime we will all go on writing more plays that can be read and many that shouldn't be, and the editors will continue to imperil their epicurean powers by enforced tasting of many badly seasoned samples, and we should all be in a bad way indeed if we were not sure that things must always come right if enough of us work toward that end."

Comments on the Films

WELL MATCHED (Essanay), Oct. 2.—A comedy freshly amusing and well acted. John Steppling and Mary Hight play an engaged couple who haven't seen each other for five years. Both have grown fat, both have written that they dislike fat people. Neither of these players are really fat, but both are well filled enough to suggest the situation and both are good comedy players. They make their reducing exercises and fasting very convincing. We saw it with an East Side crowd up in the gallery. The audience plainly was enjoying it and, after the laughable climax, when the two go out for a good lunch together one hungry spectator began to shout out the order that the two were going to give to the waiter. Howard Missimer plays Doctor Thin; Lily Branscombe, the lady attendant; Chas. Hitchcock, the man attendant. Beverly Bayne, Mildred Weston and Evebelle Prout are the lady orchestra while Dolores Cassinelli is the cabaret singer.

"AT THE BURGLAR'S COMMAND" (Pathe), Oct. 2.—A burglar comes on a pretty girl (Gwendolin Pates) about to commit suicide on account of a tiff with her sweetheart. He makes her call up the man, who is eager enough to make up, and when the man comes, he makes him call up a minister and they have the wedding, to which he is witness. Perhaps something like this has been done before; but here it is especially well done. The burglar furnishes excellent comedy and two or three good laughs. The best reason why the picture is good is because it is human. It is in the groove of a very natural dream. Any one in love would be very thankful to a burglar who brought about a longed-for marriage; indeed, some romantic souls might even pray for the burglar. Miss Pates is not only a good actress, but she is very personable also. The burglar also adds much to the picture. A good offering.

"THE VILLAGE VIXEN" (Kalem), Oct. 4.—Jane Wolf in the title role does good work in this drama—in fact, it may be said it was her delineation of the vixen that saved the picture from falling flat. This is no reflection on the others in the cast; they did their part, but the story was not there.

"CASHMERE, THE CHIEF HEALTH RESORT OF INDIA" (Edison), Oct. 4.—The charm and interest of this splendid scenic are enhanced by superb photography. There are views of swiftly running rivers, tumbling cascades and primitive bridges; one marvelous picture is a panorama of the Vale of Cashmere, with the snow-capped Himalayas in the distance, their reflection showing in the glassy water as plainly as do the mountains themselves in the background. Another scene giving a view of the return of the Maharajah from his winter sojourn in the plains will be of great interest.

"SHE CRIED" (Vitagraph), Oct. 3.—Miss Florence Turner gives us a bit of old-time Turner comedy. It just happens that she also wrote this skit as well as taking the chief role. There are many in the cast, the chief of whom is Harry Morey, who makes a lot of fun on his own account by his delineation of the "tough" of the factory. It is a case of more or less laughter all the way through the thousand feet. Miss Turner takes the part of Mame, "the boss weeper," and she leaves a trail of tears in every department in which she is successively tried. E. R. Phillips, Charles Eldridge, Robert Gaillord, Charles Edwards and Richard Rosson all do good work.

"THE GREAT DROUGHT" (Selig), Oct. 3.—There are two very interesting character portrayals in this dramatic story of a western farming country. It is an unusual picture with a mystical thread in it, for those who want to find it. Its principal character, Jim Harker (Thomas Santschi) is a hard-hearted, scornful man. The object of the picture is to show the breaking down of this man's pride and the bringing of him to his knees. The means it uses, and for this we most commend it, are not mere hard luck nor, as it seems natural forces, but all that is most evil in the man unites with all that is good in a dramatic struggle which grows tenser and tenser, until just at the close of a famine-making drought, he prays. This struggle is the center of the picture and every other character in it is used solely to bring out its human qualities. Our first view of Harker shows him a hard landlord, but one who will face a mob. Next we see him a hard father to his daughter, who loves a poor man. Next he is shown as scornfully rebuking his wife for teaching his little son to pray. There is now introduced an old hag, very worthily presented, who acts as the caller down of vengeance. The author, Lanier Bartlett, deserves high praise, as also does the producer, Colin Campbell. Mrs. Harkner is Anna Dodge; the daughter, Bessie Eyton; her poor lover W. Oakman; his mother, Lillian Hayward; his sister, Lillian Clark; Dominguez, A. E. Garcia. Others who appear are Geo. Hernandez, Frank Richardson and Rob. Chandler. We wish we could tell who played the old hag. She is a very praiseworthy figure.

"A HOSPITAL HOAX" (Kalem), Oct. 2.—A farcical picture with a situation exaggerated with the purpose of making fun. It has a sporting man for its hero, and makes him fall in love with a pretty hospital nurse. She is "tipped off" and when he arrives as a sick man she, with the doctor and other nurses, have fun with him. It pleased the sport loving members of the audience.

"ANCIENT TEMPLES OF EGYPT" (Kalem), Oct. 2.—Excellent views of Luxor, Karnac and Thebes. It is like other Egyptian pictures made by the Kalem people, very good indeed. Any of these pictures on a split reel adds much to its value.

"THEODORE ROOSEVELT" (Pathe), Oct. 3.—A very well photographed topical, taken at Sagamore Hill, Oyster Bay.

"EXPERIMENTS WITH LIQUID AIR" (Pathe), Oct. 3.—A short, but clear and very entertaining scientific picture.

"A FEUD IN THE KENTUCKY HILLS" (Biograph), Oct. 3.—An unusually tense picture, even for a Biograph. In it, after a few scenes that introduce excellently suggested types of mountaineers and give a few glimpses of mountain life, the action becomes like a whirlwind. It is a one-act picture of the almost complete annihilation of a mountain family. A love story softens it some; but it is a hard picture, almost brutal. It is for those who like their pictures fiery. It will surely please the gallery and also, we think, many who are not in the gallery; but, while we feel sure it will be a success, we cannot commend it wholly; it is likely to offend very sensitive minds, because it is a blood-thirsty picture.

"THE REDEMPTION OF SLIVERS" (Essanay), Oct. 3.—A picture with a situation to please a large number of patrons, in that it shows a man wholly submerged breaking through all difficulties and making a man of himself. It is not convincingly shown and fails to get the grip that persuades us that the story is truthful. The story is clear and in part well acted. The leading role, "Slivers," fits E. H. Calvert very well. A younger man would have been better; but he shows a regeneration of a tough character very well. Wm. Bailey's farmer is decidedly weak. Beverly Bayne as the farmer's daughter and Eleanor Blanchard do excellently as do Howard Missimer and John Steppling as rural characters. Frank Dayton is a policeman; Chas. Hitchcock, a brakeman, and Dolores Cassinelli, Evebelle Prout and Mildred Weston have small parts.

"THE RED BARRIER" (Vitagraph), October 5.—Harry Morey, as a Russian diplomat, takes a strong part in this drama. Leah Baird, as Isabel, daughter of Professor Bain (Charles Eldridge), is courted by Lieutenant Bruce (Earle Williams) as well as the count. The count, through the destruction of a note written by the lieutenant, wins out. He proves to be a brute. A chance meeting at a diplomatic ball leads to a duel between the Russian and the lieutenant. The Russian is killed. The blood shed by the husband proves to be the barrier to a marriage between the lieutenant and the widow. It is a good release.

"THE LINE AT HOGAN'S" (Biograph), October 7.—Most amusing comedy. Hogan, a hod-carrier, wins the widow O'Shaughnessy, beating out McNabb, a fat man. Hogan is always having trouble with a clothesline which runs in his back yard. On the afternoon before the wedding night he again collides with the line; it just happens that the wedding clothes are hanging out, placed there by Hogan's daughter. Hogan in his rage denudes the line and jumps on the clothes. Of course, they cannot be worn and the hod-carrier goes to his wedding in makeshift clothing. He is rejected and McNabb accepted. A few days later when Hogan witnesses the brooming which the unlucky McNabb is getting at the hands of the husky bride he gets his revenge. Hogan is so happy he goes home, hangs up the line, suspends a horseshoe on it, and underneath puts a chair, in which he sits, with his daughter on his lap.

"A TEN-KARAT HERO" (Biograph), October 7.—On the same reel as the foregoing is another laughmaker. It is a reminder, in a measure, of "One-Round Hogan." The town bully comes to grief when one of his victims, catching him asleep, removes the belt which sustains the tough's trousers. Then, gathering a crowd, the victim awakes the sleeper. The bully gets to his feet. As he does so the victim hits him. The bully goes to strike in return, but discovers that his trousers need attention. He gets another punch. Every time the bully starts a blow the trousers begin to fall, and the division of his attention results in disaster. The victim wins back the girl he had lost through his supposed cowardice.

PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 41.—There is no more inspiring sight in motion pictures than the view of racing yachts. In this number there is a splendid scene, with the camera close at hand, of two great racing machines, under full sail, the water pouring over their rails by the ton. There are other fine views of the Cowes regatta. Other notable pictures are of the New Haven celebration and the conference at Altoona, Pa. There is also given a short glimpse of the late General Nogi of Japan, the last picture of him taken before the motion camera.

"A REDMAN'S LOYALTY" (Pathe), October 5.—In a film replete with excellent photography and marked by fine camera work, George Gebhart puts over a real Western. Mr. Gebhart takes the part of an Indian to whose care have been confided two girls on their way across country. The picture is most carefully and intelligently staged, and there is a dramatic finish. Mr. Gebhart's work was of his best, and he was well supported.

"AN ASSISTED ELOPEMENT" (Selig), October 4.—With a plot that cannot by any means be said to be new, Selig makes laughs in a picture in which Frank Clark, Elmer Clifton and Betty Harte have the leads.

"HER SPOILED BOY" (Vitagraph), October 4.—Miss Anne Schaefer does excellent work as the mother of a pampered son in this production of the Western company. Robert Thornby well portrays the son.

"THE CONFEDERATE IRONCLAD" (Kalem), October 5.—This is a good Civil War picture in which the Kalem company plainly spared no expense to make an interesting and a thrilling production. Many men are employed in the making of this film; also several large craft and a train of flat cars are used. A remarkable scene is the portrayal of the ironclad going into action. Marion Cooper, Anna Nilsson, Guy Coombs and Hal Clements have the leads.

"HIS LIFE" (Lubin), October 5.—Edwin August makes his debut with the Lubin company in this picture. Class will tell. It tells in this portrayal of the young man of the country who goes to the city and has his head so turned by the allurements of the metropolis that he forgets the crippled mother and the sweetheart back home. Mr. August brings to bear in the making of this film an experience on the stage and on the screen. He is supported by the Lubin management in elaborate settings and artistic camera work. There are many effective dissolving views. Again we see use made of the curtain, which enhances the impressiveness of the drama. Mr. August is supported by Miss Hawley. She does good work, as also does the woman who takes the part of the mother.

"THE USURER'S GRIP" (Edison), October 5.—This strong production, which is bound to be a great power for good wherever it is shown on the screen, has been reviewed at length in the World.

"A SHIP BOY'S GRIT" (C. G. P. C.), October 4.—Good drama. It is a story of a boy who suffered abuse at the hands of a tyrannical sea captain. When the time came he did the thing a man might have failed to do. He did it so well that the captain admitted his fault and became the boy's protector.

"TERRIBLE TEDDY" (Essanay), October 4.—A comedy based on the suit of three men for the hand of a woman, who says she will favor the man performing some act of bravery. There are two frame-ups which are uncovered. There is considerable fun in the piece.

"LOVE ON TOUGH LUCK RANCH" (Essanay), October 5.—A comedy seriously marred by wretched photography. Some of the scenes portraying darkness were only too successful. The eloping young man in the afternoon had an arm in a sling. In the evening it was very much in use. Augustus Carney and Arthur Mackley make some fun.

"THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER" (Lubin), October 7.—Angry old ocean piling in over great rocks and tumbling through canyons dominates this film. It is a picture that will appeal to all men from the Northern New England coast and to all lovers of fine natural scenery. There is a good drama running through the reel; but the water is the feature.

"A CURABLE DISEASE" (Edison), October 7.—This a story of the Union Printers Home at Colorado Springs. It begins in the East, and among the opening scenes is perhaps the finest picture of a linotype room ever thrown on a screen. It is too bad it could not have been extended a little. The film is designed to show the beneficial effects of proper treatment of incipient tuberculosis. There are some good views of the home in Colorado, one showing great mountains in the background being particularly effective. A pretty love story runs through the picture.

"HOW THE CAUSE WAS WON" (Selig), October 7.—This drama containing a labor situation moves slowly perhaps at first, but it moves steadily. When the old labor leader is explaining to his comrades why he removed his hat to the owner and is telling the men of the days when the two were together in the army, the scenes being shown on the screen, and the owner is suddenly shown standing at the back of the hall listening to the speech, there is created a situation which strikes with a wallop. It is genuine drama.

"ALKALI IKE STUNG" (Essanay), October 8.—Another of the series of Western comedy, which is not quite up to the standard of some of its predecessors.

"WHEN YOUTH MEETS YOUTH" (Kalem), October 7.—A drama the chief feature of which is an explosion in a quarry. It is well done and makes a good situation.

"THE PIRATE'S DAUGHTER" (Selig), October 2.—Hobart Bosworth makes a brief appearance in this drama which was written and produced by himself. There are scenes afloat and ashore. It will make a fair release.

"AMONG MANY LOVES" (C. G. P. C.), October 8.—Good comedy. A noted comedian is employed as a bookkeeper in a millinery shop. He falls in love with all the girl employees; the two proprietors fall in love with him—and their love is not reciprocated.

"THE TRIANONS—VERSAILLES, FRANCE" (C. G. P. C.), October 8.—On the same reel as the foregoing are marvellous colored views of the palaces and buildings erected by Louis XIV. The pictures are rare.

"UNCLE MUN AND THE MINISTER" (Edison), Oct. 9.—A fantasy with good laughs, and gives us one of Fred Nankivel's stories of Uncle Mun, who, by the way, is only the devil in a jolly and helpful mood. The author plays Mun, an artist whose pictures cut up capers on their own account. The love story, which is played by Edna Flugrath and Harry Beaumont, is merely a peg to hang a comic rescue from drowning by Uncle Mun. The girl's father is the minister (Wm. Wadsworth) who sees the canoe upset and, with the villagers, gets Mun's help. He changes the scene from love among the fishes to love in the mud, for he empties the lake. Uncle Mun pictures have been appearing in the "N. Y. Herald." The offering is fresh and pleasing.

"THE GODMOTHER" (Vitagraph), Oct. 8.—Marshall P. Wilder plays a "godmother" under compulsion. Four boys needed a chaperone. They had found that the aunt of four girls, who had planned a visit to the college dormitory, had fallen sick. The tailor came with clothing he had been pressing and they saw a possibility in him, so impressed him into service, dressing him up as an old woman. He gets his revenge. There are laughs in it due to Mr. Wilder's presence. The situation is very slight. As entertainment the offering is fair. The four youths (one can't call them boys) are Hughie Mack, H. L. Barry, R. Richmond and E. Thomas. The girls are Lucy Lee, Anna Stewart and Rosemary Theby. The authoress is Mrs. Breuil. It was produced by Ralph Ince.

"WHEN PERSISTENCY AND OBSTINACY MEET" (Vitagraph), Oct. 9.—It seems like harking back to good old days to find Miss Florence Turner and Mr. Maurice Costello playing a good romance together. The peculiarities of this situation, though, do not give much chance to either to portray any of those subtler shades of character which they have given us in the past. Those finer things, especially in Miss Turner's work, are marvelously pleasing. We are always expecting them, and every picture by the players without them, even in a case like this, where the offering has a substantial merit, is somewhat disappointing. Mr. Costello plays the part of [illegible], he is a lover suing for the hand and affection of [illegible], played by Miss Turner. Not all of it is strongly convincing, the lover's dressing as a woman, for instance, nor is all of it fresh. The lover's paying the expressman to let him deliver the package in the cap and jumper to get a chance to speak to the girl who is in a pet and won't let him apologize, is not fresh, but it is acted in a natural, straightforward way, has a happy ending, has well trimmed sets and is clearly photographed.

"UNDER FALSE COLORS" (Edison), Oct. 8.—The situation was made for the sake of a story and not taken from life. Such things as it deals with are not impossible, at least in part; but the normal mind sees at once their improbability and feels that the figures are not quite human, they are plot-ridden. As a story, we find it well planned and smooth in the way it is carried forward. Bannister Merwin's technique is evident, but he has not shown his originality in it. Miss Gertrude McCoy plays the heroine's part. Her personal grace is part of a very fortunate equipment for a motion picture player. She adds much to the picture's beautiful scenes. Robert Brower and Louise Sydmeth play her parents, the newly rich people. George Lessey has a most ungrateful part as her suitor whose cleverness overshoots itself. It is a half-villain part and, in such a story, is not effective. Augustus Phillips, as the picture's hero, is acceptable.

"NOTHING TO WEAR" (Vitagraph), Oct. 7.—A rattling mirth-maker, featuring Kate Price as Nora, a cook. She finds, at the last minute, that she has nothing to wear to the butchers' ball. The mistress is out and Nora thinks first of appropriating an evening gown. The difference in waist measure keeps her from doing so. The parlor, however, furnishes all that is needed. The portieres are made of plush. One-half, if pinned on skillfully, will do for the gown; and a curtain is fine for trimmings. A lamp shade is the basis for a good basket hat, and, when trimmed with an embroidered table doily and a bunch of fresh roses, becomes her very well. The making of this costume, in Kate Price's hands, is a scream and a scream that starts little and grows big. It is a well-made picture, fresh and very funny throughout. It makes a desirable release. Even sentimental music couldn't kill it; but it would have been much better without music. Comedies seldom need music and it's a harsh nuisance with most of them. Miss Marguerite Bertsch is the clever author. Wm. Humphrey produced it.

"HIS ONLY SON" (Nestor), Oct. 9.—This is a genuinely interesting drama of the West, commendable for the naturalness of its story and some novel touches of humor. The principal roles, those of the father and the only son, are vigorously handled from the time of their dispute until the end, when they are reconciled through some exciting experiences with a band of outlaws. The setting, in a rough mountain country, is picturesque.

"THE INDIAN RAIDERS" (Bison, N. Y. M. P. Co.), Oct. 12.—The principal event in this western drama consists of a well presented Indian raid in the course of which two cowboys, rivals for the love of a rancher's daughter, settle their quarrel and leave the spectator to admire both of them. Hard riding and swift movement characterize this film which will appeal to those who like outdoor men and episodes.

"THE WRECKERS" (Imp), Oct. 7.—Glen White and Jeanie Macpherson play the leading parts in this drama, full of deep sea flavor and showing the ways of the wrecker. The story, which deals with a castaway's disastrous attempt to find the location of a false beacon light, is not as clear as it might be. The setting, a rocky sea coast, makes the scenic features of the film unusually strong.

"THE WINNINGS OF SILAS PEGG" (Rex), Oct. 6.—Silas, who is close-fisted, is induced in this comedy to lay a bet of five thousand dollars on the outcome of an election. His frantic fears before the issue is decided, his wild joy and reckless prodigality when he discovers that he has won and his terrible disappointment when, on account of a bank failure, he loses his earnings afford some amusing situations and give us a good glimpse of Silas' character. Picture goers who enjoy broad humor will find an amusing friend in him.

"A CHOICE BY ACCIDENT" (Eclair), Oct. 10.—Uncle Caleb, who wants to marry his nephew to either one of two pretty wards, fails to reckon with grandma who unwittingly rejects his plans in this comedy of many opportune incidents. A rough and tumble fight of rather long duration enlivens the climax. That the nephew, after all is said and done, marries Uncle Caleb's maid lends a touch of novelty to the finish. The film is characterized by many events.

"EMPLOYER'S LIABILITY" (Nestor), Oct. 7.—The story depicted on this film handles the vexatious theme suggested by the title. A lawyer is made to shoulder the responsibility of some mine owners in Colorado for inducing an injured miner to sign away his claims on the company for damages. In the end, the lawyer's wife makes restitution for the swindle. The subject matter will particularly entertain those who are interested in the relations between capital and labor. The outcome as pictured here lends a pleasing human touch.

"ALL ON ACCOUNT OF A RING" (Eclair), Oct. 8.—The good fellow in this rippling little comedy begins an amusing chapter of accidents by waiting until the eleventh hour to dress for his wedding, and by tearing his dress trousers and losing the wedding ring. The bride, her parents, the guests and the nervous minister who wait while the groom comes out of his difficulties, are rendered in an amusing manner.

"SURPRISING ELIZA" (Eclair), Oct. 8.—Sharing the fun with the above on the same reel this comedy presents Silas Hobbs, a farmer, who sets out to surprise his wife, Eliza, by buying a new suit of clothes. The greater part of the surprise was to consist in his wearing them home and the accident by which this plan failed will provoke a wide smile.

"GOOD SNUFF" (Powers), Oct. 9.—This is a commendable comedy beginning with two old gentlemen taking snuff and ending with an epidemic of sneezing, which two little children mischievously spread by making away with the snuff. The various characters are Dutch and appear in the picturesque costumes of their land. Few people will resist the appeal of this well presented fun.

"THE ORPHANS" (Gem), Oct. 8.—This drama, in which two children play the leading roles, concerns itself with their misfortunes after a dishonest and extremely ogerish guardian turns them out of their rightful home and compels them to seek a living in a great city. Through the agency of a lost bull terrier they are finally restored to their own. Some admirably selected settings in crowded streets capture the interest.

"THE GIRL IN THE NEXT ROOM" (Crystal), Oct. 6.—This comedy, which revolves about a girl and a stranger who unwittingly stumble across each other in the same flat, is commendable for its photography and vigorous presentation.

"THE MAN FROM THE NORTH POLE" (Crystal), Oct. 6.—Dividing the film with the foregoing appears this farce which contains views of the north pole, the antics of an escaped lunatic and two very much frightened old people and their butler. The fun is energetically thrust forward.

"THE LOCK OF HAIR" (Eclair), Oct. 6.—This drama is woven out of a Napoleonic soldier's sentiment over a lock of hair which his sweetheart has given him. Killed in a duel, an old comrade assumes the difficult task of breaking the news of her lover's death and does it by returning the lock of hair. The scene in which this transpires is an exceptional one, well set, well acted and with a strong appeal. The characterization of the old soldier is very commendable. The striking costumes of the soldiers of those times make for good pictures and the production, as a whole, will be generally liked.

"A MOSLEM LADY'S DAY" (Eclair), Oct. 6.—Following the above on the same film is this succession of colored scenes from Oriental domestic life. We found them of much interest.

"EVADING JUSTICE" (Lux), Oct. 11.—A drama in which human hearts prove more powerful than the course of justice. The actors handle their parts convincingly and the interest is caught at the beginning by an exciting chase of an escaped convict. He makes good his escape, but in taking refuge in a rich man's house he is seen and held at the point of a revolver while a servant is sent to bring the gendarmes. When they arrive, the child of the rich man plays with the revolver and accidentally shoots himself. The convict, who has been a doctor, saves the little one's life, and in return for this service he is given his liberty. The story is rather simple, but it is well presented and is nowhere confusing. No one could miss its point.

"THE TRAMP'S REVENGE" (Great Northern), Oct. 5.—This half-length film shows the short, amusing comedy of a tramp taking revenge on a spinster, because she has refused to give him a hand-out. He succeeds by substituting his feet for hers while an old beau is making love to her on a park bench. Much care has been exercised to work out details and the production will win a quiet smile anywhere.

"DOTTIE, THE DANCER" (Thanhouser), Oct. 13.—The fun in this comedy grows out of a young actor's assumption of the leading lady's role in a musical comedy. He plays his part so well that his girl's father, who had objected previously to him as a son-in-law, falls in love with him. Riley Chamberlain plays the part of the deceived old man with his usual success and the acting throughout is commendable. The humor is broad and will get over in any playhouse.

"GUY MANNERING" (Reliance), Oct. 9.—These two reels of film present a dramatization of Sir Walter Scott's novel "Guy Mannering." As a child the hero appears as Harry Bertram; later he appears as "Brown," then as Bertram again. These changes of name are confusing, although necessary. But it must not be understood that this has utterly befogged the story. Much care has been used to make it clear and the effort has been largely successful. The smugglers who kidnap the boy, Harry Bertram, thus allowing his estate, Ellengowan, to fall into the hands of a rascally lawyer, are colorful characters and the scene in which they desert their ship is exceptionally interesting. Mrs. Hurley who plays Meg Merrilies is deserving of much praise. Hector Dion plays the role of Guy Mannering. As a whole the production is commendable and will appeal particularly to those who have read the novel.

"A SISTER'S DEVOTION" (American), Oct. 9.—The photography of this picture is clear; but it lacks atmosphere and the faces are not always brought out well. There is much in the picture and in the story too that suggests that it was made several months ago and put by till now. In it, a sister saves a thoroughly worthless brother from his just deserts. At the end there is a good, thrilling moment. It isn't up to Flying A standard.

"THE REFORMATION OF SIERRA SMITH" (American), Oct. 10.—A bad man's conversion is given in this picture with a bit more power than the average picture of such; but the situation is not one that makes our love of the characters easy. Sierra Smith is Richardson and the sad face of poor Mrs. Smith (Miss P. Bush) makes it very hard to sympathize with him even though we see that he loves his little daughter. Mr. Kerrigan and Miss Von Trump have less important roles that don't give much chance for acting. The picture is very well acted and produced and makes a serviceable offering.

"'OSTLER JOE" (Comet), Oct. 7.—There have been two other pictures illustrating this well-known ballad. One of these, by the Edison Company, appeared within the fortnight. It is interesting to note the marked differences in atmosphere that different producers give this story. It makes a good scenario and all the pictures of it we have seen have been excellent offerings.

"THE PROMISE" (American), Oct. 14.—The young fisherman (Kerrigan) had given his promise to marry a fishergirl (Miss Von Trump). When he met the cowgirl (Miss Bush) he was sorry. It is a torrential story of passion, set on the beach and in places near by. Four of the chief players are fisher folk who live near the sea; the others are ranch people. These cowboys, with Miss Bush and Richardson, come for a few days at the beach. The cowboy and the fisher girl meet, and the cowgirl and the young fisherman meet. The storm quickly is in full swing. The story takes the very effective path of solution by elimination and deaths comes as quickly as in the last act of Hamlet. The old man is killed, then the cowboy who kills him dies, then the second young fisherman is shot for shooting him and the girl sees her lover kissing the hair of the cowgirl; she drowns herself.

"LITTLE MUSIC TEACHER" (Majestic), Oct. 6.—A pleasantly sentimental picture giving a love story, clearly told and fairly effective. The producer perhaps depended too much on its very romantic atmosphere to cover the rather mechanical means he uses to carry the story along. It is not convincing; but it is romantic and therefore makes a fair offering. Herbert Prior and Miss Anna Lehr play the leads.

"MISS ROBINSON CRUSOE" (Thanhouser), Oct. 8.—A very delightful and romantic story of the sea. Miss Flo LaBadie and Mr. Cruze play the leads, as two young people of great wealth. The girl is shipwrecked and cast upon an island inhabited by cannibals who think her a goddess and worship her. They have reason to think so. Her handling of a huge rattlesnake makes a most startling scene. The simple islanders, as well as the audience, see this and the audience is sure to sympathize with them in their opinion of her. She is rescued by the man who, in his big yacht, seeks her out and saves her in a well-conducted battle scene—five white men against a horde of cannibals. In many of its scenes, it is a highly artistic picture and, where it fails to be so, it is nevertheless effective, and makes a very desirable offering.

"THE WINNER AND THE SPOILS (Majestic), Oct. 8.—Marion Brooks, the author of this picture, have given us a very graceful, pretty story in costume. It is set in France at the time of Louis XV and the backgrounds are beautiful palace rooms and park-like exteriors. It is a love story, but only secondarily so; for it deals chiefly with the heroic means a young girl takes to save her brother from wasting his substance at play. There is no villain in the story; it is thoroughly romantic, a kind of fairy tale. The producer has made his picture in keeping with the atmosphere of such a story and, aided by Herbert Prior with Mabel Trunnelle in the leads, and with Roy Prosser as the brother, and Ben Lodge and Virginia Westbrook as servants, has supplied a highly commendable offering.

"GAUMONT WEEKLY NO. 30."—A very well balanced and very interesting number. These topical pictures don't need our praise.

"THE GYPSY SPY" (Milano), Oct. 12.—A sensational story of diplomatic intrigue in two reels. A gypsy girl is employed in the national secret service. She is detailed to get plans of a foreign submarine from its commander. He falls in love with her and she marries him to get the secret, but herself falls in love with him. The head of the secret service department now acts as villain to force her to give him her husband's plans under penalty of having her husband told her secret. The ending is more happy than convincing. This part is not very effective as a melodrama nor does its working out show much thought. The picture is made beautifully, with lovely scenes and much grace. It features Mme. Eugenie Tettoni in the leading role as the gypsy. Because of its backgrounds and beautiful photography it will make good entertainment.

"THE BRIDAL ROOM" (Imp), Oct. 10.—The girl (Violet Horner) is engaged to one man (King Baggot) who has furnished a house. She elopes with someone else and word is brought to him in the house. He demolishes every room but the bridal chamber. The girl's grinding, hard life with her drunken husband is shown and it contrasts with the prosperity of the man she left. The action works up to a well planned and executed melodramatic climax. The production was very carefully made, and is a good substantial melodrama.

"BETTY'S NIGHTMARE" (Victor), Oct. 11.—Betty, who is employed as cook in a farmhouse, but wants to act, sees the "great aggregation of talent" that goes with the patent medicine man and dreams a good old melodrama, an excellent and very amusing take-off. Miss Florence Lawrence puts some of her most energetic acting into the picture and keeps it going at marvelous speed. Mr. Owen Moore is her leading man in the hired man on the farm. It makes a good offering, light and breezy.

"LOVE AND A LEMON" (Nestor), Oct. 11.—A picture for election time. One sheriff who is running for office is rich and can treat; but his opponent is fortunate. He has a suffragette friend, Mary Lemon, who works for his cause. He is elected and also gets a lemon. It is lively and also there is some good comedy in it.

"ON THE DANGER LINE" (Powers), Oct. 11.—A pretty picture on the love triangle formula. It is fairly dramatic; but is not wholly free, in its delineation of passion, from what is or may be to some, suggestive. The danger line is the line across which it is not safe to go in a flirtation. Florence Barker plays the role of interloper between the first girl, Fritzi Brunette, and the man, Glen White. The backgrounds are as fine as can be.

"IF DREAMS COME TRUE" (Rex), Oct. 10.—The girl had read an advertisement for a beautiful young lady to play a leading role. Her parents object to her answering it and she dreams a glorious dream of a world which she, the great star, has at her feet. Then she wakes and tries the reality. It isn't quite like the dream; but for a while she still hopes. It comes to rail walking homeward, she gets a lift on a hand car. This gives us a sad contrast, but it has a happy ending. The picture has an interesting atmosphere, is well acted and pretty. It will make a fair offering.

HEADED SOUTH.

The comedy section of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, under the direction of Arthur D. Hotaling, will leave for Jacksonville to-day to take up quarters in their permanent glass studio at that place. Included in the company are Miss Mae Hotely, Misses Frances and Marguerite Ne Moyer, Miss Leola May, Mrs. Calhoun, Robert Burns, Walter Stull, George Reehm, Gus Kohler, Roy McKee, Charles Ridgeway, William Hopkins, Garry Hotaling and others. A special car will be moved, carrying some eighty pieces of scenery and a heavy list of properties. Mr. Hotaling returned last week from Jacksonville and the East Coast. There was some idea of settling at Miami for the winter, but Jacksonville seemed to offer greater advantages. Unlike most field companies the players will not occupy a house together, but will seek such quarters as suit them best.

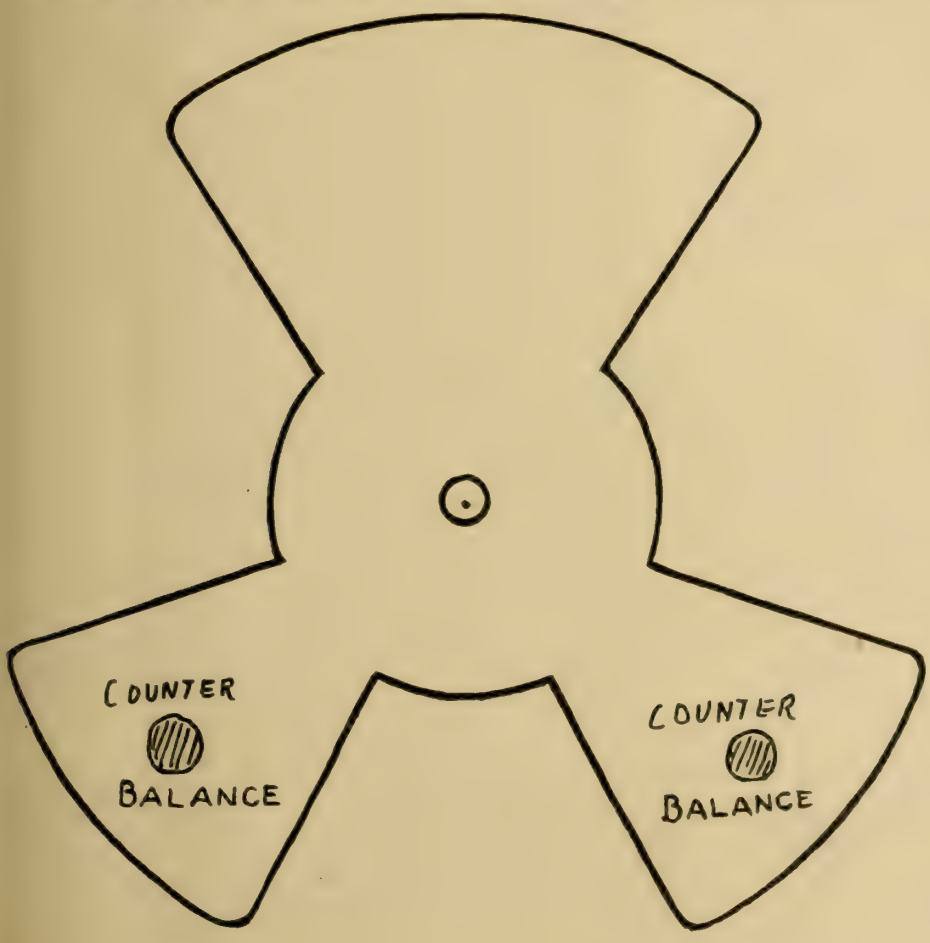
An English Hand-Book.

WE are in receipt of a copy of "The Modern Bioscope Operator," published by Ganes, Limited, London, England. It is a somewhat pretentious book of 185 pages, neatly bound and printed on heavy paper. A careful examination of its contents, however, fails to reveal any large amount of really practical help to the operator. The matter contained in "The Modern Bioscope Operator" may be considered excellent in England, but it would hardly pass muster in this country, where we want genuinely practical instruction, instead of generalities. The book was apparently written by one who was not himself a practical moving picture operator, and that tells the whole story. I don't find within its pages any mis-statements, but the things that are told are not told as the practical operator would tell them, and there are too many exceedingly important points which are overlooked entirely. However, it does not need all these remarks to say that the subject of operating could not be possibly treated thoroughly in 185 pages of rather large type. Our own new book will run almost four hundred pages, each page containing as much or more matter than a page of the English book, and still we feel that fully as much more space could be easily filled, without anywhere near exhausting the subject.

Three Wing Inside Shutter.

From our old friend, J. T. May, Bartlesville, Okla., who, by the way, seems to be an exceedingly live wire, comes the following:

Enclosed find pattern of a three wing inside shutter for use on an Edison machine. You will find that this shutter will cut a scant 50 per cent. of the light, which is, I believe, a little better than most three wing shutters. My main wing is a little wider than the two wing shutter blade, but I get better results that way. The shutter, as shown, will not balance. To remedy this, put a large drop of solder on both interrupters (small wings) and use a small drill on them until you get the correct weight. I use the shutter on 60 cycle a. c., and have no trouble whatever with it. I can run a reel as slow as twenty-seven minutes without flicker, and can (but don't make a practice of doing so), run one in eleven minutes. While all those compliments on Selig's "Coming of Columbus" are being printed, why not hand them a few roasts on the sprocket holes showing? I noticed a letter from Council Grove, Kan., a few weeks ago, and in your comment you seem surprised to know that a town of 2,500 people would support three houses. Let me tell you, friend Richardson, there are towns of over three to five hundred people, out here in Kansas, which not only can, but do support a show much better than the average city house puts up. The projection in the smaller towns in this part of the country is very much better than in most of the city houses. Wages, however, are poor, one house paying $12 for matinee and night, one house $15.50 for matinee and night and one $15.00 for night only; no Sunday work. I am glad to say that I am the one getting the $15.50. I would like your opinion of the shutter, especially when used for 60 cycle a. c. A very good ink for writing on glass may be made by dissolving aniline colors in wood alcohol. This ink will write perfectly on plain glass, but the glass must be thoroughly dry or it will spread.



As for the shutter, friend May, I could not express an opinion without seeing it in actual operation. However, this much I will say: I would consider anything of this sort coming from brother May to be worth at least a trial, by operators using an Edison inside shutter machine. Brother May's letters to the department so far have been sensible, and he has advanced some valuable ideas. However, if you are using anything like a bright light, I don't think you could run as slow as twenty-seven minutes to a reel without flicker, with that shutter or any other shutter. I see no reason why this shutter should not get into synchronism with 60 cycle a. c. the same as Power's shutter does. But without going further into the matter I would recommend a trial of the pattern submitted, and I have made it full size with this end in view, so that the brothers can sketch the outline as follows: Lay a piece of paper under the sketch, and on top of the paper lay a piece of carbon paper, face downward, then trace the outlines of the sketch, and you will have the thing transferred to the paper. You can then cut it out of the white paper and use it as a pattern in cutting out the metal shutter. In this way, it will be but a comparatively small job to try out the proposition and I should like to have reports. As to the town of three to five hundred people supporting a show, I cannot credit that unless the prices are pretty stiff. It might be done if ten or fifteen cents admission be charged and the people are willing to pay it in sufficient numbers and often enough to produce the revenue. As to the aniline dyes and wood alcohol, I believe, that proposition would work all right, but the glass would certainly have to be clean and dry.

Window Glass.

Ontario contributes the following:

It is a long time since I wrote you—over a year I believe, but I have been reading the department carefully and hope I have benefited by it. I should like to know why there is so little Canadian news in The World. We are not dead up here and most of us are World readers. I noticed a few weeks ago a letter concerning the putting of glass in the operating room openings, and that you commented unfavorably on that proposition. I think, however, you missed the main point. I have used glass in my operating room ports for about two years and believe I have saved my eyesight by so doing. In a great many theaters there is a strong draught between the exhaust fan and any ventilator in the theater, especially when there are open exits near the screen. I found this made my eyes burn and I got the best possible grade of ordinary window glass and put it in the observation and lens ports. I noticed no difference in the projection. Of course, it is important to have the glass good where the light beam passes through, but this is easy since the space is so small. It also deadens the sound of the machine a great deal and, worse luck, we cannot all have noiseless machines, as all managers do not see the need of new parts, especially when they have an operator who keeps his machine adjusted and projects a fairly steady picture. I notice you gave a knock to operators in small towns in your answer to Massachusetts, but some of us have not always worked in small towns, and sometimes are glad to get a position where we only have to work two or three hours a day and get the same money we received for eight hours in the city. I have been in Ontario for about three months and find that projection, taken as a whole, is a little better than in the United States. I think this is largely accounted for by the fact that the films are kept in better condition. Most of those I use are six months' old and I very rarely get a misframe or break. I have used three and four week film service in Massachusetts and Connecticut, which was almost impossible to put in decent condition. Other conditions here are not so good. The union scale (Local 173) is only $15, although we hope to get twenty this year. The operating rooms, or "boxes," as they call them here (box is nearer the truth) are mostly very small—about 4 x 6 feet—just room for the operator to squeeze into. The operator has to rewind by motor while he is running the machine by hand (no motor allowed on machine). Operating rooms are made of metal, and this doesn't tend to keep down the temperature in summer. The license fee for operators is five dollars a year and every machine has to be licensed at seventy-five dollars a year, consequently managers will use only one machine. They expect us to work eight hours a day (in Toronto) and as there is no vaudeville to give us relief; it is a hard grind. All union operators use the union slide and in addition we hang a framed card in the ticket office, stating that the theater employs a union operator.

There will be plenty of Canadian news in the paper just as soon as the Canadian boys wake up and send it in. There is lots of news from the United States for the very simple reason that it is sent in. That matter is entirely up to Canada, my dear sir. As to glass in operating room ports, I am willing to admit that I have never seen the thing actually tried out, but it does seem to me, that glass in the look-out port would be a very decided detriment in several ways, the main thing being that, owing to the reflection from its inner surface, it would obstruct the view. However, if glass can be used without any objection, it would in many cases be an advantage in that it would shut off the direct draught through the port. Will be glad to hear from others who have tried the glass port scheme. Your remark about the manager not getting repairs for the operator who manages to get along with old parts hits my funny bone. There is a good deal of truth in that too, but oh! how foolish such "managers" are. I don't remember having knocked the small town operator, except that I may have intimated that he, as a rule, is not a high class operator, which is only natural, since he has very few opportunities to learn, as compared to his city brother. I did not mean what I said as a knock, you may rest assured of that. When one considers the difference in opportunity for the acquisition of knowledge presented to the city operator and the country operator, one is surprised at the relative efficiency of the latter. It is to be hoped that Local 173 will be able to raise the scale to twenty dollars in the immediate future, and that you will get some operating rooms in place of those iron lined dry goods boxes. We again see how the representatives (?????) of the people insure the public at large by exacting an outrageous fee, for the imposition of which there can be no possible excuse. We readily concede the justice of a reasonable tax on a theater, since the legitimate expenses of government must be collected, but there is no authority on earth who can convince me that it is right or just to impose a tax of seventy-five dollars a year, or any other sum for that matter, on the ownership and use of a moving picture machine. They might as well impose a tax of seventy-five dollars on each suit of clothes the operator owns, or on each chair in the theater, or on each piano or each stick of gum the cashier chews. In cases of this kind, it is not a matter of justice, it is simply a matter of "we need the money," and in this instance it is the public and the operator who gets it in the neck, since the operator's work is made much harder and the public does not get as good a show as it otherwise would. If the Ontario authorities are so hard up for money, we would respectfully suggest that instead of working a holdup of this kind, they get a good revolver or bludgeon and go out and get it in the regularly accepted holdup style. These are rather strong words I know, but imposing a seventy-five dollar tax on a projection machine is nothing but good, old-fashioned highway robbery, masquerading under the name of "tax."

Department File.

Bartlesville, Okla., writes:

Glad you called my attention to the apparent error I made in my letter, published on page 1282, September 28th issue. The vent holes in the top of the lamphouse are over four inches above the condensers, and this distance allows very little immediate ventilation to the lenses; that is to say, they are too far away from the condenser to bring the current of cool air right up past the condensers in the proper way to be effective. Since I put those holes around the mount I have not broken a lens, and that was three months ago, whereas, before, I broke on an average of two to three Opto C condensers every week. In the cone there is probably sufficient ventilation provided, so that the holes do not help greatly, though they do a little good I think, and certainly do no harm. In regard to Mr. Stewart's letter in the same issue, concerning rectifiers and motor generators versus the compensarc, I want to say that operators here who have worked for three years in their respective houses, thus demonstrating their ability, have 35 ampere rectifiers held in reserve, and are using their compensarcs. Our own house put in a 40 ampere, 60 volt Robbins & Myers generator and find that it would not hold the arc unless the carbons were almost froze. We had two electricians working on it and finally, the first day the city plant cut off the d. c., this generator burned out on a 32 ampere load. The generator was compound wound. My own experience with the compensarc is that, properly handled, it will give results equal to d. c. I have a scheme for filing the department. It is as follows: We get two copies of The World and file one complete. We take the department out of the other one and bind it separately, numbering the pages with a pen. I have been looking over each individual letter and writing the various points in it on the margin. I next take a small note book and index each subject, giving the page where it is to be found. You will readily see what a benefit this is to me. And now a kick on our exchange, and incidentally on some operators, too. For nearly a month almost every program (three reels) has had one, and often two reels covered with oil. I cannot see how any operator can possibly get films thus smeared with oil if he takes any care at all of his machine. Neither can I understand how any self-respecting exchange can send out films in such a miserable condition.

I am obliged to admit, Bartlesville, that there seems to be something in the holes-over-the-condenser-mount stunt, since several operators have reported similar experiences, though I do not think the holes in the cone are at all necessary. As to the rectifier-compensarc proposition, I am sure the difference is due entirely to the lack of capacity in the rectifier. I have repeatedly told the General Electric people that 35 amperes is not sufficient maximum capacity for their rectifiers, and they have finally recognized this fact by constructing a 45 ampere machine. I cannot agree with you that a. c. is equal to d. c. under any conditions, provided sufficient d. c. is available to make equal illumination with the a. c. There is a harsh appearance to light projected from an a. c. arc not present with the d. c. Do not ask me why this is. It simply is; at least that has been my experience. I will concede this much however, that there is a big difference in the softness of the light, emanating from arcs controlled by different kinds of reducing apparatus, for instance: While I don't say it holds good always, yet I have never seen projection light emanating from an arc controlled by a choke coil which did not have a harsh, bluish color. I have found that even with d. c. there is a big difference. Connect on to a set of lines from one generator and you will have a smooth-working arc and a soft, beautiful illumination. Connect on to another set of d. c. lines and the arc doesn't seem to act the same at all. I think all operators who have had road experience have noticed this. Exactly what the answer is I cannot say. Your scheme for filing the department is most excellent. I am myself working at indexing the department, but it is a slow job. As to the generator which burned out, there certainly must have been something wrong with it, and it should have been returned to the manufacturers, at their expense, for repairs. The oil on films is largely, I believe, due to the use of very thin oils. An operator wrote recently saying that he liked a certain advertised oil very much, and that his machine had run for a year without repairs. Said he oiled it seven times a day. This simply meant that he was flooding his machine with oil, and it naturally followed that the films which went through that machine would receive the "benefit." Do not use thin oils is my advice. Go to an oil dealer and get a pint of a good grade of light dynamo oil. Oil for projection mechanisms must have a body, and very thin oils, such as are suitable for typewriters, etc., must either be used in excessive quantity or else there will be excessive wear of the mechanism, due to lack of proper lubrication. I have, in my possession right now, letters from all the leading machine manufacturers condemning the use of a certain much advertised oil on their mechanisms. I am thoroughly convinced that the use of this oil is causing at least a thousand dollars' worth of damage to projection machinery of this country every day in the year.

Edison Stunt.

Sault Ste Marie, Ont., comes across the line with the following:

I have noticed in different issues of the department quite a few operators have trouble losing their lower loop on Edison Model B machine. The cause of this lies in the spring on the lower sprocket idler, same not being properly adjusted at the factory. When a heavy splice comes along, it raises the idler up, the spring not being tight enough to force it back, it remains up, thus leaving the film free to climb the sprocket teeth. This matter is easily remedied as follows: On the hub of the casting which holds the bracket, a screw will be seen (2801, plate 2, page 822, June 1st, 1912), which holds the tension roller bracket shaft (18941, same plate). By examination you will find that the lower roller bracket spring fits in a flat place in this shaft, and by grasping the end of shaft 18941 with a gas plier and loosening screw 2801, and turning the shaft slightly so that the top of the shaft moves towards the sprocket, you will supply more tension to the bracket. You must of course set up screw 2801 very tightly when you get through, since it is this screw which holds the tension on the spring. I had lots of trouble with losing the lower loop myself, until I discovered what the trouble was, as above set forth; since then everything has been O. K. Another trouble often met with is the buckling of the film as it passes the aperture. I find that the ordinary Edison gate will not allow the tension springs to come as close together as they should. In pulling down the film the intermittent sprocket has a tendency to bulge the film in its center on account of the tension springs being too close to the edge of the film. To remedy this, take a small three cornered file or any file which is narrow enough to fit in the hole where the tension springs come through, and file out from 1/32 to 1/16 of an inch of the end of the square hole next the aperture. Put in the tension springs and keep moving them closer until the film stops buckling, after which set up the holding screws tightly. It is to be understood that all four holes must be filled.

Many thanks to you Sault Ste Marie, for your suggestions. These matters have been spoken of before by several correspondents and we would respectfully suggest to the Edison Co., that the matter be looked into, and, if a fault exists, that it be remedied. Most certainly the lower tension roller is not always properly adjusted when the machines leave the factory. There have been too many complaints of that kind to allow of any other conclusion. As to the other matter, I cannot say. I think it has been spoken of two or three times before, but I am not sure.

Unfair Treatment.

Jackson, Mich., writes at some length, setting forth the fact that a certain theater of that city offered him a position as operator, the hours to be from 1:30 to 5:15, and from 6:30 to 10:15, but when he arrived in Jackson he found he had to go to the express office in the morning, hang around for a couple of hours, and then lug a big box up to the show and put up posters. He then could go home, grab a lunch and rush off to open the show, and after the evening show he had to lock up the house and lug the stuff back to the express office again. He asks me if I think this is fair or honest treatment, when the agreement was to begin work at 1:30 and quit at 10:15. The manager also made a promise to give two weeks notice should he discharge the operator and the brother agreed to do the same if he intended to quit, but instead of doing this, the manager came up in the middle of the week recently and handed him the money for three days and discharged him without a moment's notice. He also says this manager called him a thief because he forgot to put a sheet of music in the shipment on one occasion, and spoke of how generous he was not to have had him (the operator) arrested for stealing the same.

I really didn't know whether to laugh or swear when I read the foregoing. If the brother is relating the facts as they were, then I have not any large amount of respect for him for having worked for such a man for a matter of sixteen months. That manager didn't want an operator; he wanted a combination operator—janitor—bill poster—errand boy. It is a wonder he didn't make you grow whiskers, brother, so he could use your face for a door mat when you were not doing anything else, or maybe for a pen wiper if he didn't need a door mat. I am surprised at one thing however, I believe they burn wood mostly in Jackson, and I should have supposed he would have had you put in your morning hours, say from 5 A. M. to 9 A. M., chopping wood for his (the manager's) cook stove. It is a pity that you were not a good cook so that you could relieve his wife sometimes in the kitchen work. And after having you do all that extra work for nothing he had the nerve to talk about arresting you for stealing a twenty-five cent piece of music when it probably was a professional copy and didn't cost anything. He would have put up a great howl if you had quit in the middle of the week, without any notice. You would have been held up as a horrible example and he would have been talking yet, about how irresponsible operators are.

I am saying all this on the assumption that the facts set forth in the brother's letter are true. The letter reads that way. Managers of this type do not deserve the title of manager at all. They are a rank imitation.

Small Town.

L. C. Ross, Cotulla, Tex., writes:

> After reading Brother George A. Bleich's letter, "Kind Words," page 978, September 7th issue, I thought possibly he or some other brother might be able to give me the information I have been seeking for the past year. Brother B. speaks of being warned against attempting to start a picture show in Hopkinsville, a town of less than 10,000 population. This is not very definite, but if it is less than 10,000 it must be more than 9,000 or he would have so stated, and he thinks he has done well to make a show pay in a town of that size. Now the information I am after is: can anyone tell me of a town in these United States of less than 8,000 and more than 6,000 population, which has not one or more picture shows? I am looking for such a place. I am now located in a town of 1,880 people, and have been showing for almost a year, making my living expenses. My family consists of myself, wife and three children. I hire an operator besides, who has a position in a store and works from 7:30 P. M. to 9:30 P. M., six nights a week. My plant consists of a brush lighting set, 10 h.p. gasoline engine, direct connected to a 4 k. w. dynamo. I was told by several exchanges that there was not a town in Texas, of 3,000 or more, without a picture show, and that in the larger towns and cities the number of shows would average one to every 3,000 or 3,500 population. I know that these figures hold good in S. W. Texas. Foulerton has 1,000 pop., Dilly 800, Pearsall 2,500, Asherton 1,200; each has a picture show; so I think brother Bleich is fortunate in finding a city of 10,000 which has only from two to three shows. The plant I am using is larger than any I have seen mentioned in the department. I consume 2½ gallons of store gasoline on a two hour run, for which I am paying the exorbitant price of 17 cents per gallon in barrel lots—less than barrel lots twenty-five cents per gallon. This is higher than it sold for in the North a year ago. The only way I can account for the raise is the fact that the state of Texas put a heavy fine on the Standard Oil Company and that company is compelling the consumer to pay the fine. We are right in the oil producing territory and have refineries at our very doors.

In the first place let me say that when an article in the department is referred to, if the brothers would give the page or the date of issue, it would save me a lot of trouble in looking the matter up. I have received letters referring to something quite far back, and it has taken me sometimes fully half an hour to dig it up, whereas they knew exactly where it was and could have set forth that information without trouble. I think you have entirely misunderstood Brother Bleich. I don't read his letter the way you do at all. What he meant was that there was not any lack of people there to support his show, but that the previous failures had been on account of poor management, lack of good projection and proper advertising. You will not in all these United States find a town of 6,000 people without it has a picture show—or at least if you can you can sell the information at a good price, since there are a good many people looking for such a location. The statement that the cities will average one picture show to each 3,500 population doesn't hold good, since, according to that, Greater New York would have considerably over 1,000 moving picture shows, whereas there are only between five and six hundred licensed places. The same figures would give Chicago between eight and nine hundred M. P. shows, where it has but five hundred. I think you will find that your exchange men are a little too strong on that point. It would, however, be interesting to know just how the thing does even up, and I believe myself that in the smaller cities there is possibly one picture show to possibly each 4,000 population, but in the large cities it doesn't run so high. In Greater New York it will run about one show to between seven and eight thousand population as there are many other theaters and counter attractions.

In Chicago I think it runs a little lower than that—that is to say, one show to probably between five and six thousand population. As to the price of gasoline, while there is no doubt at all but what the public will pay the fine of the Standard Oil Company, still one cent a gallon would do that in about a month's time. The raise in the price of gasoline, friend Ross, is due to the enormously growing use of that commodity for power purposes, particularly for automobiles, and it is not at all unlikely this price will mount even higher in the not distant future. In closing let me say that you could not [illegible] there are [illegible] city in which you desire to locate. Your success would depend on the number of competing, but upon the kind of a show you [illegible] put on. If I desired to locate in, let us say, the [illegible] I would hardly even bother to [illegible] I would get the best location I could find, [illegible] a theater, with the right kind of an operating room, do the right kind of advertising, get the best operator I could find in the country, provide him with [illegible] service, and guarantee each week to [illegible] the screen, and then [illegible] themselves. Why, for one I would [illegible] in town and attending to [illegible] leave the result with the public.

Salt Lake Operators Organized.

Mr. E. O. La Gran, Recording Secretary, Local [illegible], I. A. T. S. E., M. P. M. O., writes as follows:

> The operators of Salt Lake City, Utah have organized under the I. A. T. S. E. The following list of officers were elected: Willard Martin, Pres.; Robert Worthen, V. Pres.; E. O. La Gran, Rec. Sec.; C. A. Lester, Fin. Sec. & Treas.; O. F. Fasbender, Business Agent, and W. A. Lord, Sergeant at Arms. The boys are all coming our way now. We all appreciate the department very much, and wish both it and its editor good things for the future.

Glad to know the Salt Lake men have organized. I feel you will be able to accomplish much good work in the improvement of conditions of Salt Lake operators. But don't organize today and expect to rip the world over to-morrow—you cannot do it. Get thoroughly organized first and then spend a little time thinking over what you really want most and take up the matter of getting it in a business like way. Proceed cautiously and deliberately just as you would in any other business proposition, remembering always that the strength of an organization does not depend so much on its numerical strength as on the good sense of its men.

South America.

Philadelphia, Pa., propounds the following:

> Please advise me, through the department, as to whether or not there are any moving picture shows in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, S. A. If there are any, do they use vaudeville? Is the English language used? Are there any film exchanges near there, or would films have to be shipped from the United States?

Yes, there are moving picture shows in Rio de Janeiro—several of them, but I could not advise you as to whether or not they use vaudeville. The language of Brazil is Portugese and I presume any performance would have to be in that tongue, although Spanish is creeping in there considerably. Some English is spoken of course, as is the case practically all over the world, but I doubt if you could give performances in English. I am not sure, but my recollection is that the shows in Rio de Janeiro, and all the country thereabouts, are owned by one company, and that it purchases its own films. There is an exchange in Havana, Cuba. I would suggest that you address an inquiry to the United States Consul, Rio de Janeiro, enclosing Brazilian return postage. He will, I believe, give you the desired information, and it will be official. Brazilian postage may be obtained from the nearest Brazilian Consul to your city. There may be one in Philadelphia.

Lining The Machine—Slide Coating.

Kansas City, Mo., writes:

> Having gained a mass of information through the department, I feel that I should make known my method of lining up a machine, since I believe it would be a great help to many. Begin by removing all lenses and cut cardboards to fit in their place. Punch a small hole in the exact center of the cardboards. Cover the aperture the same way, then looking through the projection lens tube, line the condenser cardboard to suit. This I find gives better results than any other method I know, and I believe many will find their outfits to be badly out of line if they make the test. I make my own scratch slides, twelve to fifteen ahead, so I can write on one on short notice. The slide coating is made as follows: one tablespoon of Spanish whiting, about one good drop of Le Pages Glue, and sufficient water to make a thin paste. This will make a thin, even coating on glass, and with a little experimenting you can make an excellent slide which needs no cover glass and will not readily break from the heat. Apply the coating with a soft brush and write with a sharp pointed instrument. Used slides can be washed and recoated. Five cents worth of whiting, to be had of any druggist or paint store, and a 10 cent bottle of glue would coat enough slides almost for a lifetime. In conclusion let me report that Local Union 170, I. A. T. S. E., is in flourishing condition.

Kansas City didn't make his method of lining the machine quite clear. As I understand him, he removes the two factors of the objective lens from the lens barrel, or if a tube is used he removes the tube from the jacket and substitutes, at each end of the barrel or jacket, a pasteboard, cut to fit the tube, in the exact center of which he punches a small hole, possibly 1/16 of an inch in diameter (one could hardly look through anything smaller); he also fits a piece of pasteboard in the aperture and makes a similar hole in its exact center. He then removes the condensers and proceeds likewise with it. Then either by looking through, or stretching a fine cord through, he lines the whole combination. This is a variation of a method previously described in the department, and it is undoubtedly effective. Kansas City sends a sample slide, coated after his method, and I find the coating to be excellent. It doesn't chip, and is opaque enough for all purposes. Many thanks, Kansas City. If all those who have reaped benefit through the department would take the same course you have, and describe any valuable process they may have discovered, the department would quickly become of even greater value than it is at present. The trouble is however, there are too many who read the department, absorb every word in it and profit by and through it, but never contribute any of their own ideas to its pages.

Among the Picture Theatres

News and Views of Houses Here and There.

MAJESTIC THEATER.

NO moving picture theater erected recently in the South has been more demonstrative of the growth of the business than the Majestic Theater of Louisville, Ky. In beauty, comfort and other respects, this house surpasses the big majority of legitimate theaters in the South, and compares favorably with any in the country.

The Majestic Theater Company, which operates this showhouse, was formed in 1908, with a capital of $15,000, and in December of that year the old Majestic was opened to the public. The original officers of the company are still serving. They are as follows: George G. Fetter, president; Charles H. Bohmer, vice-president; A. P. Bernard, treasurer, and Louis J. Dittmar, secretary and general manager. Mr. Dittmar supervises the new playhouse, as he did the old, and to him is due a large share of the credit for the erection of the new house and its popularity with the public.

In November, 1911, the Majestic was closed, and six weeks later it was reopened, marvelously improved in every regard. The cost of the theater was above $50,000, the capital stock of the company having been increased to $30,000. The old Majestic was probably the largest in Louisville in seating capacity, but the new house extended that reputation to cover the entire South. No photoplay theater south of the Ohio River is larger, and few can rank with it in other respects. The theater now has a seating capacity of about 1,200. The house is 68 by 125 feet, its height being 40 feet.

Although the construction of the place is out of the ordinary in more than one respect, the feature is perhaps the splendid illuminating system in force. Joseph & Joseph, Louisville architects, designed the building with various important ideas in view, among them the indirect system of lighting. In this respect the theater is without a parallel in Louisville. By means of the indirect illumination, a soft, even glow is diffused throughout the building. The fixtures utilized are inverted, the light being thrown against the ceiling. It is reflected back from this point, the rays being mellowed and diffused in returning. The illumination is restful to the eyes.

The style of architecture in the interior is Louis XIV. This is pursued in every appointment and detail, and the effect is remarkably satisfactory and exquisite. The color scheme involved is largely responsible for the beauty of the interior, being cream, pink and gold, a combination so rare and warm that the most blasé connoisseur could not fail to be startled out of his lethargy. At all events, Louisville theatergoers have pronounced it perfect.

The stage is another feature of the theater deserving of more than passing comment. In size, it is one of the largest in the Bluegrass metropolis, the dimensions being thirty feet in depth, fifty in width, with a proscenium arch of thirty feet. This is sufficiently large to accommodate any vaudeville or other acts, and if the Majestic Theater Company ever decided to convert its house into a legitimate theater, few changes would be necessary.

An elaborate foyer is one of the successful efforts of the designers. This is suitably decorated, the floor being marble and the walls in keeping. The floor of the theater is covered with the best linoleum, copper bound. The seats range in size from eighteen to twenty and twenty-two inches. They are so arranged as to give an excellent view from the rear, the incline being sufficiently marked to give all a good vision of the screen.

The outside of the theater was not changed with the transformation of the interior. No particular style of architecture was used, a large arch liberally studded with electric lights being the feature. More than 300 lights are used on the exterior, exclusive of the big electric sign which beckons to pedestrians on Fourth Avenue in the evening. Electricity is, of course, plentifully used in the interior, the indirect lighting system necessitating almost twice the normal amount of current.

The new Majestic Theater is absolutely fireproof, the roof and floors being of concrete, with masonry walls. The operating room is unusually large and well protected by fireproof booths. The throw from the operating room to the stage is no less than 105 feet.

Vocal and orchestral music have done their share toward making the Majestic a resort for discriminating theatergoers. The arrangements for the orchestral music are similar to those in effect in the best theaters throughout the country. Those pertaining to the singing, however, are distinctly unique. Instead of appearing on the stage in the regulation fashion, the soloist is seen in a box to the right of the stage. From this point of vantage, sweet tones seem even clearer, and this method has met much favor. Other practices at Louisville's newest theater are in keeping.

The orchestra numbers ten musicians, all of known ability and of long experience. This feature has increased the popularity of the house with its patrons. The orchestra renders not only a daily musical program, but also numbers by request, and lovers of music are able to satisfy their desire to the utmost. The employees of the Majestic number twenty-two. Besides the ten-piece orchestra, there are three operators. There is one soloist, two cashiers and several ushers.

The ventilating and heating systems in use at the Majestic conclude the arrangement of the high-class theater. Ventilators are installed both in the floor, the walls and ceilings, and the house is as cool in summertime as some grotto in the country. The heating is all that could be desired, low-pressure steam providing a comfortable temperature regardless of the conditions in the open. These important features are ideal and are largely responsible for the splendid attendance.

The admission price is ten cents. The usual program calls for about a dozen daily performances, but on holidays this number is often increased to fourteen or fifteen, while in dull or extremely cold weather it may be decreased to suit the management. As a rule, however, the machines are run steadily. The Majestic follows the policy of having no interruptions, and taboos advertising slides of all descriptions.

Alamo Theater.

THEATER REMODELED AT A COST OF $6,000.

Herewith is a good photograph of Arson & Browne's theater, the "Alamo," at Raleigh, N. C., which was remodeled at a cost of $6,000. The front is constructed of marble and plastic work. The "Alamo" has a seating capacity of 400 persons and the music emanates from a Wurlitzer orchestrelle costing $1,500. The proprietors state that they are doing a very profitable business.

Mr. C. L. Preston, of Heuvelton, N. Y., is building a moving picture theater in the Preston Block to seat 300. The dimensions of the structure are 21 feet by 94 feet. The best of equipment will be installed, among which will be Power's No. 6 projection machine. The admission price will be five cents.

PURITAN THEATER, BOSTON.

The Puritan Theater opened on Washington Street, Boston, on October 30, 1911, and immediately found favor with the photoplay theater patrons. The house is owned by the South End Amusement Company, C. H. Ballard being president and treasurer, and F. A. Hawes, secretary and general manager. The Puritan has a total seating capacity of 799, the balcony holding 400 people. The accompanying photograph gives a good idea of the exterior of the Puritan, and the interior decorations are red and gold, the colors being blended in most attractive style.

Puritan Theater.

This theater shows a remarably clear and well-defined picture, and uses two Power's No. 6 machines. Tile work and stucco finish is used to good effect in the exterior of the house, the appearance being striking. The Puritan boasts of an efficient four-piece orchestra and uses Licensed service; also eight acts of vaudeville.

The success of this house, opening as it did in a location having a good share of motion picture theaters must be laid at the door of Mr. "Charlie" E. Heath, who has built up a very profitable trade for his house. Manager Heath has had plenty of experience, as he was connected with the Pastime and Beacon theaters, Boston, before taking over the Puritan. Mr. Heath believes in good, clean programs, and always makes a point of seeing every picture before he books it for his house. The Puritan caters to a good class of trade, and is getting it, judging from the audiences. All in all, the Puritan may be called one of Boston's representative photoplay theaters.

BEAUTIFUL LITTLE SOUTHERN THEATER.

M. L. Hofheimer, proprietor and manager of the "Empire," a vaudeville theater of Richmond, Va., has recently opened in Broad Street, that city. "The Little Theater," a first-class moving picture house. Both houses are adjoining each other and Mr. Hofheimer states that he is receiving a goodly share of profitable business. The house is fitted with all the latest improvements and the appointments are in order. An attraction of the house is the large pipe-organ, which Mr. Hofheimer finds of great value in providing suitable musical accompaniment to the films. The admission prices are five cents for matinees and ten cents after 7 P. M.

A contract has been let for the erection of a new theater in Des Moines, Iowa. The structure will be built at the N. E. corner of Fifth and Walnut streets.

THE PRINCESS, A HANDSOME THEATER AT PROVO.

Anyone looking at the cut which we print herewith of the Princess Theater, Provo, Utah, will remark that it has a very pretty exterior appearance. Although we have not seen a photograph of the interior of this house, we have every reason to believe that it is just as nice in the inside. The size of the building is fifty feet by eighty feet and it seats 550 persons. It was completed at a cost of $25,000. It was opened to the population of Provo, which is about 10,000, on the first day of January, 1912, and has been doing a capacity business ever since. The operating room of the Princess is fitted with Power's No. 6, an Edison Model B and an Enterprise spotlight. Four reels of Licensed pictures, changed three times each week, and a four-piece orchestra constitute the performance, for which admission prices of ten and twenty cents are charged. Mr. John B. Ashton is the manager of the house.

Elite Theater.

KALAMAZOO HAS NEW PHOTOPLAY HOUSE.

We reproduce herewith a photograph of the Elite Theater, Kalamazoo, Michigan, the newest and largest motion picture house in that city. It is sixty by one hundred feet in dimensions and will seat 700 persons. The front is most attractive, being of terracotta and Italian marble. The doors and windows are fitted with French plate glass. The building and ground represent an investment of $40,000. The owners and managers are Harry Waterman and Charles Palmer. Mr. Waterman also conducts successful photoplay houses in Benton Harbor, Mich., and Waukegon, Ill. Universal Film Company productions will be exhibited at this new picture theater.

MONTGOMERY'S NEW COLUMBIA HOUSE.

The Montgomery Amusement Company has opened its second house in Columbia, S. C. The name of this theater is the "Ideal" and both Columbia houses will be managed by Mr. George Warner.

The decorations are most pleasing, being done in several tints of red with all fixtures of bronze. All the exits and the entrance are draped in rich tapestries. The seating capacity is 600, and the chairs are from twenty to twenty-two inches wide and are set thirty-four inches apart, giving ample room for patrons to pass without disturbing those seated. The seats are arranged in a semi-circle and, with the floor being sloped, a person, no matter where he sits, can see the picture with just as good a view as though he were sitting directly in the middle. The first row of seats is twenty-three feet from the curtain, which does away with the objection to patrons to taking that row of seats.

Ideal Theater.

There is also a commodious stage with dressing rooms on each side, which makes it possible to convert the house so that it can play to vaudeville on very short notice. The acoustics of the house are excellent. The orchestra pit is eight by thirty feet.

Contrary to the usual custom, the exhaust fans are located in the rear of the house at the floor level. The ceiling has numerous ventilators and it is claimed that the air of the auditorium is renewed every ten minutes. Numerous wall and ceiling fans keep the air in circulation. The house is situated well back from the street and is approached through a well-lighted arcade, the floor of which is tiled and the walls are decorated with beautiful panels of embedded glass. The architect's plans were drawn throughout from the suggestions of Mr. George C. Warner. President Frank T. Montgomery and Vice-President Henry C. Dorsey were present at the opening. E. Dorman will be the assistant manager and Roy Koler is chief operator. This is the ninth house of this company.

Dixie Theater.

FINE PICTURE HOUSE AT GALVESTON.

Above we publish a view of the Dixie Theater, 2120 Market Street, Galveston, Texas. Mr. A. Martin, the manager of the Dixie, claims that it is the finest equipped motion picture theater in the South, and he exhibits nothing but first-run Licensed pictures. It seats 565 persons.

"The Vengeance of Egypt"

A New Kind of Horror in a Three-Reel Gaumont Special.

"THE Vengeance of Egypt" is a tale of a scarab ring. The scarab was a sacred beetle in the Nile Valley and, 2,000 years ago, rings cut to represent it were worn by people of rank. A few are being dug up, and to people with imaginations, they seem uncanny. The story covers over a hundred years of disaster, brought about by a vindictive mummy from whom, in the first scene, the ring is stolen. Her ever hungry vengeance falls again and again on the posessor of the trinket until, in the end, it is restored to her withered hands.

One only needs to hold the ring to invite the catastrophe. Only the first two victims were guilty, or even remotely connected with the thief. The picture's unity depends largely, and in some parts solely, on the scarab. Yet such a relic carries its sense of mystery with it; it is always distinctly Egyptian, always in a sense, horrible. If some scenes seem loosely connected, others ring right in the center with the impression desired and build up a horror that grips in the strongest way. Also the producer has not depended wholly upon the ring; but, by means of a strange dream of an Egyptian charnel house, in one place, and by using museum scenes full of old Egyptian relics, in others, he keeps in the right atmosphere.

The story is in the Maupassant school; its object is horror, always a new horror and, in many of its scenes, it is astonishingly effective. Words can describe and make the mind see, but the seeing of the thing transpiring before one is far stronger in its effect. Maupassant might have told us how a dread plague painted its spots on the arm of a man who had put on the ring. But when a good actor holds out his arm in consternation, and we see the blotches grow, we surely feel that it is real.

In the first scene, we see Napoleon at the foot of the pyramids. A mummy case has been dug up and the great general has it opened so that he and the savants with him can look upon it. Lieutenant Birard is much interested. That night he comes for a second view of it and, when none is looking, quietly slips from one of its dried fingers a fascinating ring. This he sends to his fiancée in France. The scene now changes from the sandy Egyptian land to France and to a beautifully furnished home of a pretty girl. She has received the ring and her lover's note in which he says that it is to be their engagement ring. A terrible dream comes to frighten her in the middle of the night. She sees a hideous collection of Egyptian mummy coffins. They are standing in a row and blink at her with strange eyes, full of baleful white gleam, like a cat's eyes. The dream is brushed aside with difficulty, but when morning comes, the girl is happy again and is writing to her sweetheart, the lieutenant. Her parents enter and we see at once that something is wrong. This is skillfully suggested and we are prepared for the news that the sweetheart is dead.

Time passes, and we find the unwed widow, grey-haired. Other characters are introduced. Her nephew and ward takes the mummy's ring without her knowing it. This young man gives it to his sweetheart who, that night, is murdered by a burglar. The ring is now carried to an antiquary and left with him. The scene that follows is very strong. The atmosphere of the antiquary's museum is in perfect accord with the story and, when the old man slips the ring on his finger and is pricked by it, we fear for him. Quickly our dread comes true in an awful way, for the poison works up his arm, painting [illegible]

The ring is now auctioned to a young [illegible] who [illegible] it for his sweetheart. His rival [illegible] him [illegible] a beautiful, quiet stream and the ring sinks with him. Years pass and two lovers, picking water lilies, find it. These [illegible] lovely. But ill luck still haunts the holder of the ring. This time an aeroplane is wrecked and both lovers go to their deaths in a very realistic scene. The mother of the girl puts the ring on her finger as she sits by the death-bed of her only child and a day or so later, is killed by the running away of her [illegible] which dashes over a high cliff into the sea.

The automobile accident is fair, but it is the weakest point in the picture. Yet immediately afterward, the atmosphere is once more strongly suggested. A fisherman finds the ring and [illegible] it to an Egyptologist who knows, by its inscription, that it belongs on the finger of the withered princess whose mummy he also knows, in the national museum. With impressive solemnity it is placed again on the finger that had worn it for so many thousand years. Night comes. In the deserted, gloomy museum, we see, by the satisfied gleam in the eyes of the mummy, that the vengeance has been accomplished, and that the tale is done. The picture is likely to discourage stealing scarab rings from mummied princesses.

Teddy Roosevelt in Pictures

Pictures of Roosevelt's Transcontinental Tour Bring Out Enthusiastic Cheers at Carnegie Hall.

The two-reel series of Roosevelt pictures, made and released by the General Film Publicity and Sales Co., were shown for the first time at Carnegie Hall in New York City on Saturday night, Oct. 5. The audience greeted them warmly. It saw Teddy on his "way to the White House"; laughed with him in his humorous moments; worked itself up into fervor when he was plainly in earnest; and laughed delightedly when, as occasionally happens, something comical peeps out of the surging throngs. One of these happy moments shows a suffragette in an unconscious gum-chewing contest with herself.

The series takes up two full-length reels. The first reel picks him up at Fargo, N. D., and carries him on through Billings, Mont., where we are shown a large crowd in motion. It was after leaving Billings that Roosevelt drove the locomotive across the Continental Divide. He is seen leaning from the cab window on the lookout for danger. This group of pictures tickled the audience greatly. Shouts were sent to him from the gallery. "Good boy, Teddy, on your way to Washington," or something like; "Going to the White House, Teddy, hurry up!"

The pictures indicate that when he reached Spokane, Washington, a vast and enthusiastic crowd was on hand to give him welcome. There was an automobile parade through the streets of the city to the Masonic Temple. From the balcony of this Roosevelt spoke. It was in Spokane that a big committee of suffragists greeted him. At Seattle, the next stop, in a parade that followed his motor car, we remember one good sign carried on a pole. It had a moose-head on the left, and on the right it read, "The Woods of Watconic are full of 'em." A lot of Uncle Sam's Jack Tars were in the crowd and gave three cheers when the candidate stopped to laugh with them and shake hands. The rest of this first reel shows the stops and the speeches and the enthusiasm in Oregon. The cities where he stopped are Huntington, La Grand and Portland.

The second reel begins with Roosevelt in Southern California, at Los Angles, and carries him along the eastward trip. At Laguna, N. M., he makes a speech to cowboys, Indians and men and women in Mexican costume. There is a good bit of humor at one of the Texan stopping places. He stands talking with some of his old comrades of the Rough Riders and, as he turns, he notices the camera man and mimics the constant grind. The scenes that close the film were taken over a year ago. They show Col. Roosevelt's reception in Berlin on his way home from the African hunt with natural history specimens. We see Emperor William and his court meeting him in state at the railroad station.

It was a flash of genius that prompted the filming of this tour. Its great value comes from the manifest enthusiasm shown by the crowds that greet their chosen candidate. An editorial may say that he can't carry California. These pictures show a warm-hearted attitude toward him there and their truthfulness can not be gainsaid. The series can be shown anywhere and everywhere, what it shows must be believed.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE WARNING HAND" (Essanay).

A wonderful and startling dramatic subject is this production by the Essanay Eastern Dramatic Stock players, and is unquestionably one of the month's most extraordinary features. The plot is the last word in novelty, and the interpretation by Essanay's well-known artists is worthy of the highest praise.

Jack Wayne, a dissolute young fellow, staggers into his home one evening in a state of intoxication, to find his father on his deathbed. Before the aged man dies he warns Jack to beware the hand of evil, and points to a shrouded painting on the wall depicting a jeweled hand suspended from a sword by a chain. Jack is dazed at the sight of the painting and hurries from the room. After the death of his father, young Wayne loses heavily at cards and one evening is about to appropriate some funds from his mother's private safe, when he is startled to see the shroud fade from the painting and the hand of evil points directly at him. Frightened, he watches the shroud return into place, then staggers from the room in a panic of fear. Several months afterward, he calls one evening upon his sweetheart, Grace, only to discover his rival, Morrell, seated close beside her. In a frenzy of jealous rage, Wayne whips out a gun and is about to murder Morrell, when suddenly a ghostly hand appears in the air before him holding a hangman's noose. Recoiling from the apparition, Wayne realizes the folly of such a step, recovers his composure, enters the room and finds Morrell extending an apology to Grace for not having noticed the engagement ring upon her finger. Five years later Wayne has married and is beset with business difficulties. He attempts to secure a loan from a banker, but his securities are worthless. Seizing upon an opportunity, he takes a blank check from the banker's desk and that night is about to forge it when the warning hand again appears to him and drops ghostly handcuffs upon his wrists. Leaping up wildly, Wayne discovers they are vanished as quickly as they appeared. A moment later he receives a letter offering him a fortune for some mine holdings. The warning hand has proved his salvation.

It will at once be seen that this is a most unusual and enthralling story. Francis X. Bushman does splendid emotional work in the role of the dissolute Wayne; Helen Dunbar and Frank Dayton are his parents; Lily Branscombe is his sweetheart; Harry Mainhall portrays the rival; Harry Cashman gives an excellent study of the banker, and Wm. Walters is the doctor. The double-exposure scenes are wonderfully effective throughout, and the entire production is a distinct feature.

It is booked for release October 18th.

A CANADIAN FILM MANUFACTURER.

The accompanying illustration is a scene from the Parade of the Sovereign Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows' Convention, which was held in Winnipeg, week of September 16th, 1912. A 1,000-foot reel of the convention, parade, etc., was taken by the Starland Limited and they are marketing the picture on a state right basis or selling outright.

The Starland Limited are also advertising in this week's paper a still more interesting film, "The Calgary Stampede." This was held at Calgary September 2nd to 7th, and was undoubtedly one of the greatest gatherings and contests of cowboy and Western sports ever held.

The Starland Limited are confining their efforts at present to Western Canadian topicals, but they expect to make regular releases in the near future. Their productions will be of special interest to the rapidly increasing number of moving picture exhibitors throughout the Provinces.

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH IN THE SCHOOLS.

"THE HIGH COST OF LIVING" (Solax).

For men must work and women must weep
And there's little to earn and many to keep.
—Kingsley.

If the tariff had been revised ownward—if instead of protecting by an equalizing tariff such "infant" industries like the Standard Oil Company, the American Tobacco Company, American Woolen Company, the Armour's Beef, and U. S. Steel Corporations and such other "weak little" combinations, the poor man would perhaps be contented and be able to look the landlord, butcher, the grocer and the baker square in the face. As it is, within the last few years prices on the necessities of life have been soaring while the scale of wages has not kept pace with the increased cost of living.

This condition of affairs is the thesis of the Solax production, "The High Cost of Living," the release of October 23rd. Joel Smith, an ironworker, has given the best years of his life—almost a half a century—to his employer. He rises to be foreman of the foundry but because of mental limitations does not reach an influential or remunerative position. He works steadily and while rents go up and the cost of foods advance old Joel is in a rut. For ten years he hasn't had an increase in salary. Nor have the men who work alongside of him been more fortunate. Joel would have continued in the rut but for the active dissatisfaction of the younger men in the foundry.

They decide to rebel against existing conditions, to strike, if their employer does not meet their demands for a general increase in wages. Because of his age and influence with the head of the firm, Old Joel is sent to the boss. While Joel is received with cordiality the boss is firm. He asserts he cannot meet the demands of the men, and the strike is on.

Poor Joel, although he can little afford it, joins the men. After several weeks of idleness he is in desperate straits. He either has the alternative of starving or else beg—something he is too proud to do. As a last resort, when he sees his suffering widowed daughter and her children before him, he decides to go back to the forge.

Serious consequences develop and Joel finds himself, an object of pity, before a judge and jury. The story is full of heart interest, of poignant suffering, of truth and of wisdom.

NO one had ever heard him speak a word, so they dubbed him "Silent Jim." Then one day he told his story just as Eclair will re-tell it to you in a forthcoming Feature Release.

"MAKING UNCLE JEALOUS" (Eclair).

There is a great deal of the human element underlying this release so it all rings true through its feeling of possibility. The action moves with a spirited gusto thereby supplying the ever dependable Alec B. Francis with just the sort of part he fairly revels in The more we view his work the more we are forced to acknowledge him as the very foremost of straight comedians. He is always diversified, never clownish and he "puts it over."

Scene from "Making Uncle Jealous" (Eclair).

The work of Geo. Larkin, Sheerer, Isabel Lamon, and Muriel Ostriche is of their usual faithful order. Not to forget a mention of the pretty, lovable little "Eclair Kid" who flits into a couple of scenes.

The story concerns the schemes and devious ruses by which two nephews of the old maid aided by the nieces of the old bachelor uncle (Francis) succeed in pairing each of the concerned old bashful lovers off with a new suitor. True to their premises, this awakening of jealousy on the part of uncle causes him to hunt up his sweetheart of years and years and propose and win her gladsome "Yes!" in answer.

The photography is of the usual fascinating Eclair variety, abundant in pretty tints and artistic settings.

KLEINE'S CINES AND ECLIPSE FILMS.

Two first-class dramas and a split reel containing a comedy and scenic subject make up George Kleine's program of releases for the week ending October 19th. For the regular Tuesday release "The Adventure of the Scarecrow" furnishes a unique story which offers excellent opportunity for a successful photoplay. As the title suggests, a scarecrow figures very prominently. The film is replete with exciting dramatic situations describing the waylaying of a farmer by two bold highwaymen and the final capture of the culprits on the part of the police by a clever ruse involving the scarecrow. The principal roles are taken by Chas. Cattaneo, Maurice Anverso and Carlo Moltini, the latter does especially fine work as the chief of police.

For the Wednesday offering "The Missing Locket" makes a very acceptable film. It shows clearly how a trifling caprice upon the part of a child can lead to grave consequences if not prevented in time. The gradual development of the story from the perfectly harmless to the "near tragedy" is very cleverly brought about as is also the change in the character of the husband from the loving, kindly father to the revengeful, infuriated demon.

The Saturday split reel, comprising "An Abbreviated Honeymoon" and "Among the Mountains of Calabria" furnishes a diverting and interesting subject. The comedy is full of action and is filled with many humorous situations. The story deals with a pair of "newly weds" who are anticipating a delightful honeymoon; but sad to relate, their trip proves decidedly brief and ends disastrously. The character of the groom is taken by the well known Cines comedian, Mr. George Gambardelli, who, as usual, gets into all sorts of trouble, but comes out triumphantly after all. The film is a good one and will provoke many laughs.

"A MISTAKEN CALLING" (Essanay).

Here is a bright, sparkling comedy subject from Essanay's Eastern comedy company that fairly bubbles with joy and eruptive laughter. Maggie, the cook, discovers the Muse of Poetry lurking in her dark eyes. Maggie quits her job, writes reams of slush, and the exciting experiences that ensue make a real comic hit.

Maggie, a cook, feels that she is born to write poetry and consults a phrenologist. Among the many knobs on Maggie's dome of intelligence, he discovers one that reveals she will startle the world with her scribbling. Therefore, Maggie resigns her job and starts in to poet. Also she cast off her policeman lover, Officer 444. One morning she invades the office of a publishing house and in the course of a few moments has the editor on the floor by the hair while she pours her slush into his tortured ear. Officer 444 is summoned to arrest her, and the recognition is mutual. He gets her out on the street to the patrol box, but Maggie soon puts him to sleep by reading her poetry and flees, leaving one of the verses attached to his uniform. Reduced to poverty and starvation, Maggie applies at an employment bureau and luckily is re-engaged by her former mistress on taking a pledge never to scribble again. On the way home Maggie runs across Professor Phreno, the bunk phrenologist who put her on the wrong track. What she does to him with her fists and umbrella is plenty, and is only subdued by the inevitable Officer 444, who sends her on her way. In closing we find Phreno humped over his chart, feeling the lump on his forehead and wondering over the fact that its location on the chart is signed "casualty."

Eleanor Blanchard has never been funnier than in the role of Maggie; John Steppling has a character to his liking as Officer 444; Howard Missimer is humorous as Prof. Phreno; Wm. Walters is the besieged editor, and Lily Branscombe and Frank Dayton are Maggie's employers.

The production is unique in a number of ways, and the slush that Maggie writes, when thrown on the screen, will make the most blasé photoplay critics forget their troubles and laugh in the good old-fashioned way. The film is booked for release October 15th.

OPIE READ'S FRIENDS WATCH HIM WORK.

Many friends of Opie Read, the novelist, who is playing the lead in the motion picture dramatization of his famous work, "The Starbucks," called up at the office of the American Film Mfg. Co. to ask permission to see the distinguished writer in his interpretation of Jasper Starbuck.

Permission was given Friday, and a party including Dr. George F. Butler, head physician of Cook County; Frank D. Comerford, former police attorney for Chicago, and a politician of note, Harry Irving Greene, the novelist, and Clement Yore, a special writer for the Hearst papers, visited the American studio. They spent a delightful afternoon and were loud in their praise of Mr. Read's remarkable histrionic abilities.

Scene from "The Starbucks" (American).

Handling so notable a character as Opie Read proved a considerable task. The American, like all other manufacturers, is in constant receipt of requests by person and telephone for permission to visit its plant. The fact that Opie Read could be seen in his most splendid work proved a magnet that drew the many curious that knew him by reputation as well as his intimate friends.

AMERICAN SECURES VALUABLE "PROP."

A stagecoach, formerly used in making the run from Lompoc to Los Alamos in the early days of California, was recently added to the properties of the American Film Manufacturing Company at Santa Barbara, California.

NOTICE TO RELATIVES OF E. V. O'NEILL.

Scenes from "Souls in Torture" (Itala).

"SOULS IN TORTURE" (Itala).

The Itala Company's coming two-reel special, "Souls in Torture," is a feature worth seeing. It is an elaborate society melodrama and would be notable if its lovely scenes were the only good quality to commend it; but we also find in it a strongly developed and effective story. It is set in the atmosphere of pleasure loving high life and its backgrounds are, for the most part, in and around a beautiful country home.

We are shown in the first scene a young and pretty girl and her mother. They have good standing, but have come to the end of their financial resources. An elderly marquis has fallen in love with the girl and wants her to marry him, but she refuses. The marquis buys up her mother's debts and, in a clandestine way, uses them to make the girl willing to marry him for his money. Later, in their beautiful home, she meets her husband's secretary. They fall in love, but she is an honorable woman and will not accept his attentions except as a friend. The villain of the picture, a young blade and friend of the marquis; because the woman spurns his attentions, plays a trick on the old man, who is thereby made to become very suspicious of his wife and his secretary. She had been dictating a drama, the story of their souls. This the old man reads and seeing the truth spread out before him, kills himself.

The plot is carefully made and the interest, which is caught by the first scenes, is held through the entire length of both reels. Almost all of the scenes are full of beautv; but there is what may be called one act, devoted to a hunt on horseback. The action is dramatic; but the backgrounds are lovely. These scenes will excite enthusiasm.

THE AITKENS IN EUROPE.

Messrs. H. E. and Roy Aitken, of the Mutual-Majestic-Reliance companies, are now in Europe making arrangements for feature subjects.

BACK IN LUBINVILLE.

The Lubin Company under the management of General Director Barry O'Neil, has returned to the home plant in Philadelphia. They report a most glorious summer up at Cape Elizabeth, Portland, Maine, and did excellent work on seacoast pictures. There were 31 people in the organization, who were housed in cottages in the fishing village for thirteen weeks.

NO one had ever heard him speak a word, so they dubbed him "Silent Jim." Then one day he told his story just as Eclair will re-tell it to you in a forthcoming Feature Release.

The woman manages to escape, later to accuse the murderer, but the lover is mangled to death by the infuriated lions.

Vitagraph Release July 15, 1912. Three Reels

This is a story of a conspiracy on the part of the Money Kings to involve the United States in a war. A representative of the United States government starts for the peace conference at The Hague, with the President's signature on an agreement of peace. The Money Kings employ a clever woman, as their secret agent, to trap the young representative and steal the precious document. A little dinner "for two" is arranged, during the course of which the woman conspirator removes the document from the young representative's coat and replaces it with one that resembles the original. The daughter of one of the Money Kings learns of the conspiracy and that the original document is in her father's safe. On a pretense she opens the safe, extracts the original message and, in turn, replaces it with one to resemble it. She sends a wireless message to the young representative on his way to The Hague, telling him of the conspiracy and to watch for her cousin in his hydroplane, bearing the original message. The Money Kings are foiled.

The Adopted Child

Pathe Release July 8, 1912. Two Reels.

A little child, whose father is lost in a foreign country seeking his fortune, becomes bereft of her mother and is adopted by some kind-hearted ragpickers. When she reaches budding womanhood she falls in love with a young physician, who reciprocates her affection. This physician is in turn loved by a young woman, married to an elderly man, and she does her best to win his affection. She makes her advances so pronounced that her husband discovers the situation and challenges the doctor to a duel, which is fought by the flickering light of a passing ragpicker's lantern. The latter recognizes in the outraged husband a remarkable resemblance to his little ward's father's photograph, and, following up this clue, he succeeds in establishing the young girl's identity and she lives out her life happily with the man of her choice under her father's roof.

A MISTAKE IN SPELLING (Oct. 18).—Fred Manning, the European buyer for a large department store is engaged to Mabel Moore. On the eve of his trip for Europe, he takes Mabel to see the flat he has rented and partly furnished for them to occupy on his return, when they are to be married. He gives her the key to keep. He leaves for Europe via New York. At the first station out, he telegraphs Mabel, "I love you." Later on at another station, he wires, "I love you forever." From New York he wires again the same message, but the operator, a new man, gets things mixed and sends to Mabel "I leave you forever." She faints at the shock, while poor, unconscious Fred sails for Europe. He is miserable because he has received no letter. Two months pass. Mabel has been very ill and is recuperating at a health resort. When it is time for Fred to return, she sends all his letters, ring, key of house, etc., back, care of the firm. Fred arrives and finds them. He gets her address starts off to the health resort, sees Mabel, the mistake is explained and everything ends happily.

THE SPRIT OF THE RANGE (Oct. 22).—Matty Dorlan has always looked upon the head of the family with whom she has lived, as her father. One day, he acquaints her that he is only her guardian, and that she has inherited from her father, the "Bar Z" ranch in Wyoming, also that her only relative living is her brother, whose whereabouts is unknown. The young woman goes to Wyoming, and runs the ranch.

Dick Owens, the young foreman of her ranch, is a fellow of excellent qualities, but she, wishing to impress upon him the dignity of her control, refuses to eat at the same table with him. Riding horseback over her possessions, she loses control of her horse. The young foreman saves her life, and she is forced to acknowledge his favor. A bunch of her cowboys are attacked by the "Circle C" ranchers, but following her orders not to use firearms, they ride away with the insult unresented. Matty is looking at the picture of her father when she overhears the foreman say he is going to make an examination of the dividing fence, the "Circle C" ranchers, her neighbors, broke. She appreciates his peril and is about to call him back but hesitates lest she encourage her interest in him. On the range he is attacked by the "Circle C" outfit and in the encounter is wounded. He hastily writes a note, asking Matty to bring him a rifle. She fastens it in the bridle of his horse and the faithful beast brings it to her. Jumping upon her horse, she rides to his rescue. Together they fight the enemy and when the foreman falls exhausted, she steps from cover and faces her opponents, who cease their attack and retire.

A few days later, the foreman of the "Circle C" ranch calls to apologize for encroaching upon her preserves. His eyes light on the photograph on the table. He tells her it is a picture of his father. She then learns that he is her long lost brother, and throws her arms about his neck. At this moment her young foreman enters the room. She introduces him to her brother, confiding to him they love for each other.

SCENES OF IRISH LIFE AT DUBLIN (Oct. 23)—Dublin in itself, has characteristics that are extremely odd but when we take the tram car which is one of the institutions of that city, being built on entirely different lines from most railway conveyances, a two-story affair, and ride to the outskirts we get an idea of life among the poorer tenants of the metropolis. We see the people as they live on their small estates, and the recently built tenements, with many of the modern improvements and advantages. An occasional interview with some of the older inhabitants are very interesting studies. On our way, we stop at the Glenda-kan Inn, the oldest in Ireland, and meet the prettiest barmaid in all Ireland, who entertains us with her winning smile and her Irish wit. All the inhabitants seem to be blessed with good health and happy hearts, and while their manners and customs are a little different from our own, they are certainly a treat to behold and a pleasure to meet.

AN EXPENSIVE SHINE (Oct. 23)—Being the happy possessor of a handsome diamond necklace, a rich young widow, living at a fashionable hotel with her sister, is always anxious about its safety. She places it in the toe of her shoe for the night, thinking it a very safe place. According to the custom of the Hotel, the maid, seeing the shoes on the floor, places them outside of the door to be shined. Bill Schenck, a sport, living at the same hotel, places his shoes outside his door. Tom, Bill's friend, comes along, and as a joke, changes Bill's shoes for the young widow's. Bill finds the widow's shoes at his door and does not know what to make of it. He takes them in and finds the diamond necklace. He confiscates it, to present to his girl, Sadie. The widow and her sister report the loss to the clerk, who tells the hotel detective. Tom, standing near, overhears their complaint, and rushes after Bill, catching him just as he is presenting the necklace to his girl. He grabs it and returns it to the widow, who gives him five hundred dollars reward, which he gratefully accepts.

THE TOYMAKER (Oct.24)—An old German toymaker, Hans Greyburg, living in a little flat on the east side of New York, while engaged one day making and dressing dolls, is visited by Dot Avery, the little girl from the flat above. He is fond of children and makes friends with her and gives her an old doll. Dot is the child of Bert Avery, a crook and his wife, Nell. Nell does not approve of her husbands mode of life and lives in constant fear of his arrest. Avery returns from making a haul, his pockets full of stolen money, but has to get out of town for fear of detection. He wishes to leave the stolen money with his wife, but she refuses to take it. He leaves her and flees the country. She drags on a life of hardship until her health, never too good, gives out and she dies. Finding her cold and motionless, the child goes to her old friend, the toy-maker and when Hans finds what has occurred, he adopts Dot as his own child. Shortly after, he has a legacy left him. He leaves his work, invests his money and goes to live in a little country place, where he prospers and is looked up to by everyone.

Avery returns to the country and passing through the country place, hears exaggerated rumors of Hans's wealth. He breaks into the house intent on robbery and while trying to intimidate Hans, is brought face to face with his own child. He hears what Hans has done for her and repentant, swears to lead a better life leaving Dot to the care of her adopted father until he shall have proved himself more worthy of her.

FAITHFUL UNTO DEATH (Oct. 25)—Assigned to duty in India Colonel Maxim is living there with his family. On-good to take a short journey, Gurlah Khan, his native servant, is taken sick. The Colonel dismounts from his elephant and makes Gurlah take his place. He is hurried home where the servant is carefully nursed by the Colonels wife and daughter.

A rebellion breaks out among the Sepoys in the Herut District, and all the inmates of the British Post are massacred. Some of the natives hasten to Colonel Maxim's headquarters and notify them of the victory they attained over the British. They tell Gurlah and he pretends to be in sympatey with them, telling them he will rob the family and join the rebels as soon as possible. Lieutenant Wilson who has escaped the massacre of the English garrison, comes to warn Colonel Maxim of the uprising. Gurlah Khan, in gratitude for their kindness to him, tells the family to do as he instructs and he will save them. He takes their jewels and places them in a small bag and then tells them to escape to the attic. He tells the sepoys, who insist upon entering the house, it is killing its inmates. They enter and find it empty. They then set fire to it, notwithstanding Gurlah's protest. In order to carry out the plot, the grateful servant flees with the two rascals. While the house is in flames the elephants go to Colonel Maxim's rescue and lift the family one after the other from the attic. Lieutenant Wilson writes a note to the Commanding General of the English troops at another garrison and attaches it to the ear of one of the elephants, and sends him with it to notify the English soldiers of their danger.

In the meantime, Gurlah Khan returns and tells Colonel Maxim to escape to the Sacred Temple where they will be safe. He leads them into the house, closing the door, and places his arm through the large staples, thus barring entrance to the clamoring pursuers on the outside. Unable to hold out longer, Gurlah Khan lapses into unconciousness just as the British, who have received the message by the elephant, enter the door, after repelling the besiegers. Colonel Maxim supports Gurlah from the door and tenderly places him on the floor. Mrs. Maxim and her daughters kneeling at his side. He hands them the bag of jewels which he has saved and with a parting word of gratitude, expires.

IN THE FURNACE FIRE (Oct. 26)—Through a chance meeting, John Penell and Mary Nelson become acquainted. He is very courteous and she invites him to call to see her at her home. He meets Mary's sister, Kate, and falls in love with her. After this, Kate and John meet frequently and one day when Kate calls to see John at the express office, where he is employed as a driver, he introduces her to Frank Johnson, the shipping clerk, who is very much taken with her and later manages to meet her. He tells her that John is a thief and so poisons her mind against him that she throws John over for Johnson. Kate tells Mary about John's dishonesty, but she does not believe it and does not rest until she tells John of the aspersion which Johnson has cast upon him.

He gives up his position and takes job on an ocean liner as a stoker. Johnson marries Kate but they do not live happily together. Mary feels certain of John's innocence, and she determines to prove it. She employs a detective, who takes a position in the express office, with Johnson, and then discovers that Johnson is the thief and he, to escape detection, has accused John of the thefts.

Mary, after Johnson's arrest, writes John and tells him all about it and says he can come home without fear, as his innocence has been proven. Mary calls on Kate and offers her a home with her, which she refuses. Losing her temper, she roundly denounces Mary and accuses her of spying on her husband for a man who does not care a rap for her. As she says this, John enters. He looks at Kate and tells her that she is mistaken and to prove his statement, he clasps Mary in his arms and takes her from the room.

THE TOMBOY ON BAR Z (Oct. 22).—Pretty Letty King is the tomboy on Bar Z ranch. She fills the washing pans full of salt and when the boys come in from the corral at noon to wash, an awful time follows when they get their eyes and noses full of the smarting substance. Then Letty ties a lariat to the table cloth, attaches the other end to a moving buggy and the boys' dinner is deposited on the floor. One morning, in the town store Letty meets Arthur Springer, an Easterner, and the bond of affection springs up between them. Letty is also loved by Jim Dunn, a cowboy, and it goes hard with him when Letty returns his ring and announces her engagement to Springer. Two months later the stage drives up and Springer prepares to depart to the city with Letty to be married. The assembled cowboys give them a cheery departure, and Dunn watches the stage disappear down the long trail written dull agony written on his brown face. About this time Bob Blake, county sheriff, receives a notice from the Chief of Police of Cheyenne advising him to arrest Arthur Springer, wanted for wife abandonment. Meeting Dunn and the boys on the trail Blake informs them and a wild ride begins after the stage. Overtaking it the boys force Springer to clamber out and confess his guilt while Letty looks on in horror. Springer is led off under arrest and the boys conduct Letty back to the ranch house where she sobs out her misery until a touch on her shoulder causes her to look up into the kindly face of Dunn. Mutely he holds out the old engagement ring and a moment later the repentant tomboy is clasped in his arms.

BRINGING FATHER AROUND (Oct. 23).—Harry Brisk, a healthy young chap, loves pretty Minerva Grumpley. Old Grumpley her father, emphatically declares, however, that Harry cannot marry his daughter until he has a bank account of $10,000. Now Harry has little over $2,000 and begins to plan how he can get the much needed masuma. Rounding a corner he sees a merry-go-round whirling away at full blast on a vacant lot. Also he sees that the two lots next to old Grumpley's home are vacant, and conceives a great scheme to bring the old man around. Hastening to the real estate dealer's office he purchases the lots for his $2,000, then gets the merry-go-round owner to move his concession over on the newly acquired property for free rent. Next morning old Grumpley is discovered raging in his palatial library with the gout and the sounds of pandemonium coming in through the window from the crowds on the merry-go-round. Unable to stand the racket he rushes down and receives no satisfaction from the merry-go-round owner who shows his permit all perfectly straight. In desperation Grumpley goes to the real estate dealer and attempts to buy the lots, but finds the price asked is $10,000. This he refuses to pay and is forced to spend another night of torture with the awful racket. Next morning he changes his mind, buys the lots for the exorbitant price and restores peace and quiet to his home. An hour later Harry enters, shows old Grumpley a bank account of $10,000 and asks for Minerva's hand in marriage. Old Grumpley is amazed, but is entirely knocked out when he finds that Harry owned the lots. However, at this moment the representative of the syndicate calls and purchases the lots for a big price, consequently the delighted old man gives his consent willingly and happiness reigns once more.

THE THRIFTY PARSON (Oct. 24).—Rev. Jimson, pastor of the Little Flock in Cragville, loves Samanthy Spriggins, the village spinster, and the two are engaged to be married. One morning old farmer Tightwad misses some wood from his pile and cannot account for it. That night the cause of the shrinkage is revealed in the person of old uncle Ephraim, an old darky. Next night Tightwad loads one of the pieces of wood with gun powder thinking to catch the thief when the explosion occurs. As ill luck would have it Uncle Ephriam sorts out this very stick as bad wood and throws it in Jimson's back yard. Good parson finds it and, of course puts it in the grate and starts a fire. The powder explodes and the room is wrecked, likewise Jimson. He is found by the terrified neighbors and several days later is barely able to hobble around on crutches because of his injuries. Meanwhile old Tightwad suspects Jimson of having stolen the wood and, being chairman of the church committee, draws up a petition demanding his resignation. Determined to catch the real thief and save his job, the thrifty parson and Samanthy guard old Tightwad's wood pile that night and succeed in capturing Uncle Ephraim. The old darky confesses to the thieving and is lodged in jail. Some time later the thrifty parson and Samanthy, now man and wife, return home from their wedding ceremony and are beseiged by the neighbors who fill the room with presents. Among these is a big chocolate cake and the kind parson feels certain it would be relished by the poor old darky languishing in jail. So the whole wedding train flocks down to the jail and delight the old fellow's heart with the big cake, then start back up the road toward home while Ephraim eats away contentedly.

SUNSHINE (Oct. 25).—In his library Father O'Brien is reading the morning paper which states that Joe Roberts, a condemned murdered is still silent as to the motive for his crime. The old priest searches the pages of his baptismal record and smiles as he finds that he took Joe and his pretty sister Sunshine into the church when they were little babies. Visiting Joe in his cell Fatner O'Brien finally prevails upon him to tell the story of his crime. Joe recounts his life's story, and we see him as a young lad promising to care always for Sunshine upon the death of their mother. As the years go by he toils bravely for her and she comes to meet him at the close of each day, while his fellow workers watch with envious eyes. Then one evening Sunshine does not come and Joe hastens home in an anguish of fear, only to find a note on the table from Sunshine saying she has gone away to be married and have fine diamonds and clothes. Joe sets out on search for his lost sister. The months go by and still he haunts the dives and saloons but without success. Then one day he is crossing a bridge when he sees a ragged desolate girl about to plunge into the black waters. It is Sunshine. In the quiet of their little sitting room the poor girl reveals the cause of her misery—a photograph of her betrayer. Crazed by the thoughts of revenge Joe watches for the man and one day tracks him to his apartments, and when they lead Joe away to jail he exults over the fact that the dead scoundrel will never steal another girl's smile. Returning home next day Father O'Brien sorrowfully enters these two facts in his record: "Joe Roberts died August 13th, 1912. Sunshine Roberts, entered convent August 13th, 1912."

THE RANCH GIRL'S TRIAL (Oct. 26).—Pepita, proprietress of the town dance hall, is loved by Big Moose, an Indian. Jake Harding, a worthless cowpuncher, also pretends love for Pepita in order to get an occassional drink of free whiskey. Big Moose swears to kill Harding, and is only prevented from carrying out his treat by Pepita. A dance is now scheduled for the town hall and pretty Millie Farnum, of the Three 6 ranch, is invited to go by her sweetheart, Dave Price. That afternoon Harding finds Millie alone, asks her to be his partner for the dance and, when she refuses, attempts to steal a kiss. Breaking from his arms the infuriated girl secures a revolver from the ranch house, but is seen by Dave who questions her and learns the truth. That night, in the crowded dance hall, the old Virgina reel is in full progress when Pepita goes to the barroom for refreshments. A moment later Jake Harding enters and has Pepita in his arms when they are discovered by Big Moose who kills Harding with Millie's revolver which is lying on the bar. Pepita assists Big Moose to escape and places Millie's revolver on the floor beside the body. Determined to save himself Big Moose summons the sheriff, who arrives in time to find Millie standing over the dead body with the gun in her hand. The innocent girl is accused of the crime, is brought to trial and is about to be convicted when Pepita, unable to endure the tortures of her guilty conscience, springs forward and confesses Big Moose' guilt. The old judge is just about to dismiss court when Dave, with Millie in his arms, declares that they wish to be married. The ceremony is performed and all ends happily.

THE INVITED GUEST (Oct. 22)—Mr. Stout is highly flattered by an invitation to dine at a friend's house. After arraying himself in his "very best" and procuring a huge bouquet, he arrives, receiving a most cordial welcome from his host and hostess and their two children. The children take it upon themselves to see that not one dull moment shall break into the pleasure of their honored guest and by all manner of pranks make life miserable for him.

After enduring it as long as possible, he starts to make his departure, but finds that the youngsters have smashed his hat and filled the pockets of his coat with water.

Upon reaching home Mr. Stout takes solemn oath to "regret" all family dinners thereafter. And incidentally the children receive a hearty thrashing and a long lecture upon the proper conduct of children when company is being entertained.

ASCOLI PICENO (Southern Italy)—(Oct. 22)—An extremely interesting travelogue subject showing the Aqueduct, the Cemetery, the Bridge of Cecco De Ascoli and a series of views of the famous lime quarries in operation.

ECLIPSE.

A PERSISTENT FLY-SWATTER (Oct. 23).—Charlie, like a good many other bald-headed men, is greatly bothered by the flies. One of the pesky creatures so annoys him that after attempting to capture it in every possible way, he seizes a broom and begins to lay about him, wreaking destruction to nearly everything but Mister Fly.

He even pursues the pest out of the window determined to kill it and after a series of adventures, too many to enumerate, he is successful. There are to be no flies on Charlie.

MAKING BRIAR PIPES (Oct. 23).—The briar is cut from the stumps in Corsica and shipped to St. Claude, France, to be manufactured. The entire process, including weighing, cutting, sorting, turning of the bowl and stem, scraping out the bowl, polishing and packing is shown.

IN THE OSSAU VALLEY (Oct. 23).—A fascinating travelogue film spreading before us many beautiful landscapes and places of interest in this valley of the Pyrenees (France) and several exciting scenes in a bull ring where the fierce animals are being trained for fighting.

MELIES.

WRONGLY ACCUSED (Oct. 21).—When young Baird arrives in the West he meets and falls in love with Mary Jennings, but unfortunately Mary's father, the sheriff, takes a dislike to the young man and orders him to keep away. Baird discovers a good friend, a former sweetheart, in Dr. James' wife and reveals his predicament to her. She plans to help the young couple out by arranging an elopement. The doctor, however, misconstrues his wife's friendliness toward Baird for love and becomes jealous. On one occasion the two are seen quarreling publicly. Returning home the doctor discovers a dope fiend robbing his medicine cabinet. The two men grapple, the fiend pulls his gun and the doctor is shot. Baird is the first to arrive at the house and gives the alarm. Circumstantial evidence is against Baird, for he had been seen quarreling with the doctor only a short time before. He is taken into custody by the sheriff. Jake, the doctor's brother wants vengeance and by a forged letter decoys the sheriff to a distant ranch, in order that he and his cowboys might lynch Baird. But Mary keeps guard at the prison door, and when the mob descends on the place, she threatens to kill herself if they approach her. Her father, after learning Jake's trick, returns in time to preserve the law. The dope fiend forced by his craze for drugs comes back to the doctor's house and this time is caught by

BIOGRAPH.

THE ONE SHE LOVED (Oct. 21).—Roy Norris, a young author, proposes to pretty little Mary Ford and is accepted. This is the golden dawn of their life, while the first year or more of their married life is the sweet noon time, made all the sweeter by the arrival of their first born. The little trio—father, mother, baby—are bound together by the ties of that most holy love, until unreasonable jealousy possesses the young couple. While at work in his studio, the young author is visited by his wife just as he is complimenting his stenographer on her valuable aid, and from this the wife sees grounds for suspicion. On the other hand, the young husband, seeing his wife talking to a stranger, is a bit suspicious, although the stranger is simply returning a bottle of smelling-salts his wife had borrowed. Later on, the young wife thinks she has further grounds for her suspicion and so when the author returns home he finds the house deserted and a letter addressed to him from his wife. It simply reads: "I have left here forever with the one I love." Both are innocent of any wrong, but a tragedy is narrowly averted.

THE PAINTED LADY (Oct. 24).—The elder daughter has always been her father's favorite because of her strict adherence to his rigid precepts. The younger daughter is rather gay and frivolous, though innocently so, and horrifies her elder sister when the latter catches her in the act of powdering and painting her face. To the mild reprimand of the elder daughter the younger exclaims, "Well, you have to do it if you want to be attractive." The strength of the assertion is proven at the church lawn festival, the younger sister being surrounded by a host of friends while the elder passes the time in almost absolute ostracism. However, a stranger appears at the festival who pretends to be attracted by the elder daughter, she, in turn, being surprised and flattered. This is for a sinister purpose, however, for the stranger is a crook. Under the pretense of affection for the girl he gains her confidence regarding her father's business affairs, and with the knowledge he has acquired, he attempts to rob the house. This attempt works disaster for himself and the girl.

PATHE.

PATHE'S WEEKLY No. 42—1912 (Oct. 14).—Moreni, Roumania—A burning oil well explodes and kills fifteen people, injuring many more.

Lancaster, England—The Duke of Lancaster, who is also King of England, visits this city. It is 51 years since a reigning monarch made a similar visit.

Sydney, Australia—The Director of the Zoological Gardens has succeeded in the almost impossible task of making playfellows of a Kangaroo and a Fox Terrier. These terriers have always been considered implacable enemies to the Kangaroo.

New York, N. Y.—The last game of the season, in the National League, at the Polo Grounds, is poorly attended but supplies some interesting thrills. Score, New York 4; Philadelphia 2.

Berlin, Germany—The Imperial family witnesses the fall manoeuvres.

Quincy, Mass.—The foreign delegates to the International Congress of Chambers of Commerce inspect the Fore River Shipyards.

Omaha, Neb.—The annual Ak-Sar-Ben Floral fete draws crowds from all this section of the country.

Baltimore, Md.—The steamer Nantucket, which recently caught fire and was sunk to prevent total destruction, is successfully raised.

Helena, Mont.—Gov. Edwin L. Norris, with Louis W. Hill leaves the State Capitol to attend the State Fair where he leads the procession of prize live stock.

THE SIMPLE LIFE (Oct. 23).—Gwendoline Nealon, daughter of the well-known millionaire, purchases a gypsy camp with all its paraphernalia and invites her friends to live the simple life for a week as her guests. The simple life is not so quiet after all for the sheriff has received instructions to arrest for horse stealing a band of gypsies which is moving in his direction. He, of course, coming to perform his duty finds Miss Nealon and her friends in full possession of the camp. He does not recognize them in their disguise and refuses to believe that they are disguised. The whole party is lodged in the county jail. Mr. Nealon is summoned from his office and he considers it a good joke. After his daughter's friends are released they journey back to the Nealon mansion where, to their surprise, they find that the real gypsies have been enjoying the simple life and have departed with enough of the expensive house-furnishings to enable them to continue it for a while.

LITTLE RAVEN'S SWEETHEART (Oct. 24).—Little Raven, an Indian boy, is in love with the baby daughter of a white settler. An Indian woman is accidentally killed while passing a saloon in which a fight is in progress and the Redskins swear vengeance and lay an ambuscade for the caravan which conveys the wives of the white men to market. The party is massacred, with the exception of the driver, who escapes to the army post, and the little girl who is taken prisoner by the Indians. At dawn, after laying awake all through the night, Little Raven steals to the wigwam where his little lady is confined and escapes with her. The little couple is pursued by the Savages and they are about to be recaptured by them, when the soldiers intervene and the Indians are routed.

THE LIGHT THAT FAILED (Oct. 26).—Melvin Brooks, first officer of an ocean liner, falls in love with Betty, the daughter of John Sterling, an aged lighthouse keeper, who is opposed to Betty's getting married, reasoning that she should stay with him for the few years of his life remaining.

Melvin's steamer is ready to sail and at their trysting place near the lighthouse he meets Betty to say farewell. The old man from his conning tower sees them embrace and flies into a rage that verges upon insanity. He vows to be revenged upon the man who is trying to take his daughter away. Knowing Melvin's steamer depends upon his light to guide it safely past the reef, he shatters the lens with a blow. Betty tries to save the steamer, but her efforts are unavailing. Hurrying to the station she warns the life savers, who rig up their breeches buoy and save all hands in a scene which is very realistic and extremely exciting. Brooks is the last one to leave the sinking steamer and when he reaches the land he falls exhausted into the arms of Betty.

C. G. P. C.

THE END OF LOUIS XI (Oct. 22).—A nobleman, the victim of a king's power, when on his deathbed, charges his young son with the duty of avenging him. When the boy has grown to manhood he sets about fulfilling his mission and his adventures in completing his task make a powerful drama.

OLD TOLEDO (Oct. 22).—A beautifully colored cinematograph showing various points of interest in this old, old town, including the prison of the Inquisition.

TOM THUMB (Oct. 25).—The fabled adventures of a very small man are herein presented. Although this film is essentially a children's story, the older folks will have an interesting time trying to determine how the remarkable effects are obtained. One scene worthy of special note is Tom Thumb at the age of two years, comfortably seated in a walnut shell.

THE HERMIT CRAB (Oct. 25).—An entertaining and educating study of the life and habits of the least known member of the Crab family.

LUBIN.

JUST MAINE FOLKS (Oct. 21).—Out in the farm-lands near Portland, the Widow Walters lives with her daughter Ethel. As far as affections are concerned, those of the widow are confined to her daughter, until Squire Lang, a fat, old widower, with his son, moves onto the adjoining farm. Harry and Ethel prove mutually attractive. One day Harry leaves his plowing, when he catches sight of Ethel. They rush to the gate to exchange felicities; but the squire wants Harry to return to his plowing, and the widow desires Ethel to resume her housework. With the squire, it is a case of love at first sight. But hardly had his affections reached the budding stage when he discovers that he has a rival, Bart Cullum, a prosperous farmer. The squire sees Bart give signs of affection. Meanwhile Cornelia Bloodgood, a spinster, tries for the hand of Bart. But she uses an ear trumpet, and is homely, so Bart directs his energy towards the widow. There follows a period of rivalry between the squire and Bart to gain the widow's favor. Bart wins a point at an old-fashioned moonlight husking bee given by Uncle Dick, a fiddler. There Bart finds a red ear of corn, and promptly claims a kiss from the widow, then triumphantly selects her for his partner in the dance. The squire, completely outdone, is forced to dance with Cornelia. After the dance Uncle Dick gathers the guests about him and tells stories of ghosts. The widow expresses fear to go home alone? Bart offers to escort her. The squire determines to test his rival's bravery. Uncle Dick hurriedly produces a sheet and the squire hikes for a dismal lane. Reaching there ahead of Bart and the widow he throws the sheet over his shoulders, steps behind a large oak tree, and at the proper moment, steps out. Bart, terror-stricken, breaks all records in a mad flight, while the squire, delighted reached the widow just in time to have her faint in his arms. Next day the squire, quick to take advantage of Bart's display of cowardice, proposes to the widow and is accepted. At the same time Harry proposes to Ethel and as they pass through the gate, they come suddenly upon the old folks. They startle them with a loud whoop, and the squire, much abashed, explains his engagement. Harry then breaks the news bethrothal to Ethel, and a joyful, four-cornered reunion follows.

IN THE SERVICE OF THE STATE (Oct. 22).—Joseph Vance, a prospector, has built a home near the mountain regions of Southern California for the reception of his mother, father and sister, whom he expects. Upon going to the railroad station to meet them, he learns that a wreck has occurred on the line and that his parents and little sister were among the killed. He loses interest in life until one day volunteers are called to form a posse to hunt down a desperado who killed the sheriff of the county. He is sworn in as a deputy and receives his badge. Determining to bring the desperado to town dead or alive, he leaves on his man hunt. Burt Hawkins is hiding in the hills in a deserted log house. Every day his daughter secretly brings him food. It was on one of these trips that an accident befell her while Vance was in the vicinity. He assists her to her cabin and his admiration for the pretty girl is shattered when he learns that she is the daughter of the man he has sworn to capture. He tells her why he came into the hills and Molly is called upon to choose between the lives of the two men. Vance decides to do his duty. He trails Hawkins to his hiding place and Molly follows, rifle in hand to protect her father. A desperate battle takes place. Hawkins tries to kill his opponent, but in the effort the gun is discharged and Hawkins falls with a bullet from his own gun. Molly believing Vance has killed her father, fires at him wounding him in the shoulder, but when she learns that Vance had not fired a shot from his revolver her heart goes out to him. She hurries away to obtain assistance and meets the posse, who went out to help and protect Vance. They find Hawkins beyond human aid and Vance wounded. They assist him to Molly's cabin where Molly tenderly nurses him back to health. Vance has fallen deeply in love with the little angel who daily ministers to his wants.

The cobbler and his wife have a daughter. Their places of business are near one another and after their day's work, Brand and Stern spend their evenings in their favorite game of chess. Three years elapse when Brand's wife dies. This incident binds the friendship of the two old men stronger and likewise their children become inseparable. A little later, while the two old men are at a game of chess, the boy and girl come in and tell of their engagement, which overjoy the old men. After kisses and congratulations have been passed, the game is resumed. Soon, however, an argument ensues over a move and finishes in a bitter quarrel. The children try to soothe their respective fathers, but fail and after more bitter words, the pawnbroker takes his son and rushes home—estranging the two families and breaking the young people's engagement. A short time later the girl, worrying over the loss of her lover, becomes sick. The cobbler is at her bedside and his money is gone. He has parted with many little treasures which have been sent to the pawn shop. Needing a few dimes, he bethinks of the chess set, which for weeks has now been out of commission. His pride will not permit him to take it to Stern himself, hence he solicits the aid of a young friend. The pawnbroker recognizes the chess set and gives the messenger some money, refusing to take the game. He then calls his son, and together they go to the cobbler's home, where reconciliation is affected and all are happy once more.

THE NOODLE INDUSTRY (Oct. 25).—Everybody eats noodles and probably few know how the little flakes are made, for they do not grow. The picture shows the process in a big bread-making plant where all is done by machinery. Very interesting is the enormous mixer which makes the dough; next is the rolling process, slicing and cutting into flakes; drying and packing for the market.

DOWN WITH THE MEN (Oct. 25).—Mabel Mordant is a militant suffragette and when the men wont let the agitators hold their meetings in peace, she gets real mad. Determining to fight the issue, she secures a detective's badge from a correspondence school of detectives. She has a uniform suit made and when Paul Arthur, one of her tormentors, gets gay she pinches him. The police guy her and the justice tries to flirt and gets sore when Mabel refuses to respond. As a last resort she tries a Justice of Peace to listen to the ridiculous complaint. To end the farce, Paul proposes marriage and persuades her that it is a much better game than trying to be a man. Mabel is won over and gives up the fad much to the disgust of her associates.

THE FOREST RANGER (Oct. 26).—Mary, a mountain maid, is courted by Jim Black, a wood contractor, and a forest ranger named Bob Miller. She prefers the ranger as is easily seen by the manner in which she leaves Jim to go for a ride to Lookout Point with Bob, who is on duty. Part of the ranger's duty is to measure up the wood belonging to Black. Black attempts to bribe the ranger, but Bob cannot be bribed. The contractor insinuates that he will take Mary away from him, as she can be easily had by anyone. Bob promptly knocks Black down. Black, desiring to be revenged, sets fire to the forest. Bob sees the fire, and reports same to headquarters. He calls his fire-fighters and goes to battle with the flames. Mary, who has remained behind, looks through the glasses and sees two men in the flames. One falls and cannot get up. She immediately hastens home, gets a horse and rides to the fire in time to learn that Bob has gone into the flames after one of the men who is severely injured and unable to help himself. A Mexican wood-chopper, who has been persecuted by Black, has witnessed Black setting the fire and goes to the supervisor and reports. After Bob and Mary have rescued the injured man the supervisor tells Bob what the Mexican reports. Bob asks for permission to arrest Black and the supervisor grants it. The ranger runs Black down and after a struggle captures him. The general inspector of the Forest Service, who has returned, takes information and after hearing all witnesses, recommends Bob for promotion to the position of supervisor. Mary and Bob are much elated and forgetting themselves go into each others arms much to the amusement of the supervisor and general inspector.

THE COUNTY FAIR (Oct. 21).—Jim Burke, a side-showman, is attracted by the pretty face of Mary, a country girl who has come to visit the fair. He sends her a note proposing a meeting. The inexperienced country girl, flattered by the attention of the showman, joins him and they arrange to elope. Lazelle, the sweetheart of Burke, overhears the conversation and tells John, Mary's suitor, of the proposed elopement. John goes to warn Mary's parents but finds they have gone to the fair. Running down the road, John meets Mary's father and mother on the way back from the fair. He tells them of Mary's proposed elopement and states that a strange buggy has just driven down the road toward the depot.

A wold ride toward the railroad station takes place and Mary's parents arrive just as the young girl is about to board the train. The error she is about to make is impressed upon Mary and she agrees to return home. Just as the train is pulling out, Burke arrives and seeing his plans have been frustrated, he boards the last car. Realizing her fortunate escape, Mary concludes John is a safer companion than a travelling showman.

THE PERIL OF THE CLIFFS (Oct. 23).—Rhoda arrives at the wayside inn to spend her summer vacation. The next day while out walking Rhoda falls into the lake and is rescued by Dr. Boswell. The doctor and Rhoda become fast friends. A few days later while she and the doctor are out walking, he reaches over a cliff to obtain some wild flowers for her, loses his balance and rolling down the hill, lies unconscious among the rocks. Rhoda calls for help but getting no response she runs back to the inn and tells of the accident.

In the meantime a tramp, who has been sent out by a party of hoboes to secure a pail of water, discovers the doctor. He carries the insensible man to the hut where the tramps are located and all of the doctor's valuables are removed and divided among the hoboes. Rhoda and a rescue party arrive at the cliff and find the doctor has disappeared.

That afternoon one of the tramps comes to the inn and offers to sell Rhoda a locket and chain. She recognizes the locket as a memento she has given the doctor. Informing the tramp she will go to her room and get her purse, she runs into the hotel and tells the story to the guests. Money is given to Rhoda and she is instructed to complete the purchase, which she does. The tramp is followed by the guests of the inn and the entire band of ruffians is captured and the doctor released.

Dr. Boswell, realizing his prompt rescue is due to Rhoda, tells her of his gratitude and asks her hand in marriage.

THE GIRL IN THE CABOOSE (Oct. 25).—A travelling salesman attempts the conquest of Eve, daughter of the railroad construction boss, who is known as The Caboose Girl. She offers him no encouragement and the persistent drummer sends her a note, asking her to meet him. Eve shows the note to some of the trainmen who declare that the drummer should be taught a lesson. The drummer is therefore advised by Eve that she will meet him near the water tank and when he arrives the girl induces him to stand under the spout. Eve steps back as the trainmen turn on the water and the drummer is given a severe ducking.

Next day while walking down the track, the drummer discovers the caboose at the top of a steep grade and he determines to be revenged. He releases the caboose, expecting to alight but it gains headway and dashes down the grade. The trainmen seeing the runaway car, uncouple the engine and dash in pursuit. After a thrilling chase the runaway caboose is overtaken and proper punishment is meted out to the drummer.

NEW YORK PUBLIC SCHOOL DRILLS AND DANCES (Oct. 25).—These unique and entertaining exercises take place in the East Side New York Public Schools. The children who take part are eleven and twelve years of age and the nationalities represented are Italians, Russians and Roumanians. The free-hand drills and the dances of the Boys' Dancing Club are highly interesting to the visitor.

DEATH VALLEY SCOTTY'S MINE (Oct. 26).—Scotty, the hero, reaches Blind Canyon in time to save his old friend Pedro from a bunch of frolicsome cowboys. Scotty has previously advised Pedro that he has blown in his last thousand dollars and instructs him to get the pack train ready for another trip to the mine.

The villainess and her bad bunch appear on the scene. Scotty is grub-staked by Nell, the "chuck house" girl, (the heroine). The villainess and the bad men plot to silence the heroine forever. Nell is kidnapped, taken out on the plain and tied to a stake. A fuse is placed in a barrel of powder and the barrel is set beside Nell. The villains light the fuse and ride away. The heroine works around to the lighted fuse, which she utilizes to burn the rope that binds her arms.

Nell having liberated herself makes a wild ride across the desert to warn Scotty. In the meantime Scotty reaches the mine, secures a bag of gold, and prepares to start back to town. The villainess and her bad men appear and Scotty and Pedro are made prisoners. Nell reaches the mine after the departure of the bad men and quickly realizes the situation. Taking up the trail, she follows to the place where Scotty and Pedro are bound. Nell releases the two miners and all three ride for the sheriff's office. This fearless officer and his brave posse come to the robbers' rendezvous, where the bad men and the villainess are quickly overpowered and placed under arrest.

JOHNNY ON THE SPOT (Oct. 23).—Johnny Weston is a young Englishman in love with Lady Rose Tilda. The father forbids Johnny admittance to his house and decides to take his daughter to America. Rose writes and tells Johnny that they are leaving for America. Johnny makes up his mind that he will go, too. By bribing a sailor he becomes a sailor on the boat on which they are traveling, and through the guise of a custom officer he is constantly by the side of his lady love. They visit the Navy Yard and other places of interest, finally returning home. He disguises himself as a baggage man and wins her heart and hand and father's consent.

HOW JACK WON OUT (Oct. 23).—Jack is very much in love with Nettie, the daughter of a banker who does not approve of Jack's attentions to his daughter and orders Jack from the house. The banker goes to his office, finds his stenographer has left and advertises for one. Jack sees the "Ad" and decides to masquerade as a girl and takes the position. The banker falls in love with Jack, thinking him a girl and gives a ball in his honor. There, in a little love scene, Nettie removes the wig from Jack's head. The father sees he has been fooled and Jack tells him that if he will let him marry the girl nobody will ever know what an old fool he has been.

A WIRELESS MIRACLE (Oct. 26).—Old John Deane, with his daughter and her husband and their little daughter, Lucy lives a secluded life on an island where the old man has charge of the lighthouse. One day he hears that a wireless station is to be erected on the island. He does not believe in new inventions and feels a great antagonism toward the young operator Johnstone, and his assistant, Hogan. But the little girl becomes a great friend of the young man. One day she drops grandpa's telescope over the rocks, much to the old man's dismay. She runs to her new friends, and to help her out they give her a copy of their chart of passing vessels. Later on little Lucy becomes quite ill. Johnstone visiting her, discovers she has diphtheria. There is no doctor on the island and all are at a loss as to how the child can be saved. Johnstone knowing that a famous child specialist is on board a passing liner, gets an idea. He has the child carried to his wireless cabin, and from there he gets into communication with the doctor who is in midocean. From the steamship the doctor gives the young wireless man full directions. Finally he bids him to prepare to operate upon the child, and, with his rude tools—under instructions coming from miles away Johnstone operates successfully. A tube is inserted in her throat, the baby is once more able to breathe and her life is saved.

THANHOUSER.

PETTICOAT CAMP (Oct. 20).—Several young married couples, all intimate friends, decide that it would be fun to have a camp of their own for the summer. One of the party discovered an ideal little island, they lease it, and joyfully proceed there. The men were thoroughly happy. They arose early, ate enormous breakfasts, and then went fishing and hunting. Finally the wives began to ask themselves where they came in.

"It is a picnic for the boys," remarked one woman, addressing the others. "We do the cooking, the washing and the general housework."

Finally they agreed that the best thing for them to do was to institute a lock out. That evening when the husbands returned, there were no wives or supper to greet them, just a note informing them that their "ex-slaves" had taken up a camp for themselves on the next island.

It struck the husbands as a good joke—that is, it did until they sat down to a frightfully prepared supper—then they saw the sorrow of it. One of the husbands had an idea and the others cheered as they adopted it.

Late that evening, while the wives were supposedly sleeping, two "vicious tramps" crept into "petticoat camp." They expected that the women would shriek with terror but they didn't. Later when the "tramps" were picked up far from shore.

"When we screamed," they said, "all those girls got up at once, pulled revolvers and fired at us. They didn't know us, and we had to run for our lives. When we took to the water, they stood on the beach firing at us."

Their plot having failed and starvation staring them in the face the husbands waved the white flag which was graciously received, and terms of capitulation arranged. All the wives wanted was a share of fun, and the transfer of some of the work to the broad shoulders of the husbands.

THROUGH THE FLAMES (Oct. 22).—The farmer's daughter was ambitious but unhappy, because she thoroughly believed that she was destined to shine upon the stage. This opinion of her was strengthened when a "celebrated" actor appeared at the farm. The actor charmed the young woman by telling her that he thought with training she could easily discount Maude Adams and promised to look up a good job for her when he got to the city.

In course of time the girl heard from the actor. He had found the place for her, and all she needed was to appear and claim it, bringing his fee ($50) with her. The girl hastened to the city, paid over the money and hastened to the theater. Not until then did she find that she had been tricked by an adventurer, and there was no chance for her to lead the life she had hoped to lead.

She hunted for work, but failed to find it. At last her money was gone and she was threatened from her hotel room with eviction. Penniless, the girl determined not to return to her old home, and was in a frame of mind where she would gladly have welcomed death. Consequently when the hotel caught fire that evening she said to herself that it was a good solution of her problem and quietly sat down waiting for the end, probably she would have been burned to death, had it not been for a drummer in the next room, who, while about to go down the fire escape happened to look into her room and saw the girl kneeling in prayer, waiting for death. Being a brave man he forced his way in through the window and in spite of the girl's entreaties to be allowed to die he dragged her to the fire escape. The delay almost proved fatal to them, for just as they reached the fire escape it collapsed. Only the reckless daring of the fire department saved them with many others from the fire-trapped building.

Her champion found the man who had swindled her and forced him to return his ill-gotten money. On the midnight train that evening there returned to her country home a girl who had learned wisdom in a bitter school, and on the platform in the city as the train pulled out stood a young drummer who hoped that it would not be long before he could claim the country girl as his bride.

IN A GARDEN (Oct. 25).—This is the story of a gardener whose whole lifetime had been spent in the one place. He loved the flowers, petted them, and gave them the detail of the only romance he had ever witnessed.

"You see, little pansy," he said, "when I came here, many years ago, Miss May was a little girl. There was a nice little boy who lived right over there, and they were great chums. They played together, day after day, and were childhood sweethearts.

"Well, they grew up, and one afternoon I saw them talking earnestly over on the old bench there. She nodded her head, when he kissed her, and taking a ring, put it on her finger.

"For a time they were happy, then they quarrelled. It was a silly dispute, and in my opinion, both were to blame. I hoped they would make up but they didn't. He went to the city, she remained here. Other suitors came, but she would not have them. Her heart was with the man she had loved when they were children.

"You know, little pansy, how Miss May has thrown her garden open to the poor children. Well, to-day I was standing out under the big sign that says all children are welcome, when an auto came up. I looked at the man in it, and recognized the chap Miss May loved. I called a greeting to him, he stopped and we shook hands.

"It had been many years since the boy had played about here, and I had to be careful. If he had known Miss May was here, I doubt if he would have come in. So I talked about the children, and he stepped in to see them. Then, before he realised it, I had led him to the old bench.

"It must have called back recollections, for it was there that as a boy he had wooed his tiny sweetheart; it was there that as a man he had won her promise to be his bride. Better than all, she was sitting there now, all alone and forlorn. I just led him up to the bench, and left him. I knew that my work was successful when I saw the glad light in their eyes. It was only stubbornness that had kept them apart all these years. The job was to bring them together and I did it."

HIS NURSE (Oct. 18).—In this drama we are introduced to a young lady who is nursing the uncle of the man she loves. The nephew gets into debt and his uncle is so enraged upon discovering this that he disinherits the nephew and transfers his fortune to his devoted nurse. As the young nurse fears that the nephew will not return her affection now that she is wealthy and he is poor, she hides the will and the money would still go to the nephew who, thinking that he is still a rich man, proposes to the young nurse, and thus they both inherit the fortune to their mutual satisfaction.

THE TIE ETERNAL (Oct. 10).—Another woman, beautiful, seductive, has tempted the husband and father from the path of constancy. The wife learns of this liaison through an anonymous letter. She traces her husband's visits to the home of the temptress where, as woman against woman, the scene ends with the adventuress ordering the wife fro mthe house. In despair at the violation of the love troths, she takes her child and goes to her mother's home, leaving a note telling of her grief and the cause of her action. A divorce follows and the wife is given the custody of the child, the father being permitted to see the little one, one day every month.

Several years have pased and the father is preparing to visit his estranged baby, marshalling his many tokens of love in the form of toys. As he is arranging them a letter arrives saying that the child is critically ill and that he cannot see her this day. In his frenzy of apprehension he implores his one-time wife to allow him to see the little sufferer. Although feeling the deepness of the wound of his act in the years gone by, and in the toils of a new passion for a suitor whom she is soon to wed, she permits him to come. The other man happens upon the scene as the father stands by the sick-bed, and the little one responds to his caresses. With jealousy and fear he watches the child brighten under the warmth of her father's presence and with a sinking heart the rival sees the little hands reach out and bring together the heads and hearts and lives of those who had parted. The bridegroom-elect, although feeling that his bride-to-be would honor her promise to marry him, steals away leaving a note behind telling of his sacrifice and the renunciation of his own joys in compliance with the principle regarding those of whom 'twas said, "Whom God Hath Joined, Let No Man Put Asunder."

BEETHOVEN (Oct. 15).—Episodes vital in the life of the great symphonist in the heyday of his powers, when master creation after master creation flowed from his pen, a perfect river of inspiration, glory shone upon him. Love as well as art engages his mighty powers. There is another man, younger than he, with more of the gallantries dear to the feminine heart. He surprises the rival and the girl in a love tete-a-tete and the door shuts upon his happiness. The grief of his unrequited passion preys upon his mind, which in turn affects the strength of his body. Then comes the affliction of deafness. He is fearful lest the world know of this infirmity and he guards the secret jealously. It is at last discovered. In spite of his deafness, his genius will not down and although unable to hear the melodies which surged to his soul, he wrote them down in the great silence, in the thought that the world might happily hear what was denied to his ears. As the Angel of Death hovers near, he sees a vision of the characters and scenes portrayed in his operas, the "Pastoral" and "Joy." Mortality is accomplished upon a body whose soul and works knew naught but immortality.

NO one had ever heard him speak a word, so they dubbed him "SILENT JIM." Then one day he told his story just as Eclair will re-tell it to you in a forthcoming Feature Release.

THE LEGEND OF CAGLIOSTRO (Oct. 17)—Cagliostro, a youth of great mental promise, receives the Divine Afflatus, as with his sweetheart, he stands before a painting of the Christ, whose closed eyes open to look at him with a light mystic. Thrilled, he flees into the dark with the maid of his choice to fulfill his great destiny. At the roadside inn they pause for refreshment. As there they stand, garbed as monks, a blind gentleman, led by his son, enters. Cagliostro sings a song so appealingly effective that tears long dried in the sightless eyes, gush forth and carry with them the obscuring films. Onward on his career of healing and wonder-working he goes bringing strength to the withered limb and driving disease before him. Marie Antoinette, the Austrian Princess later to be the consort of the fated Louis XVI of France, comes to him to test his powers as a seer and clairvoyant. As she desires to behold her future, and in spite of his warnings that it will appall her, she looks into the vision of her tragic end by the keen blade of the guillotine. Hidden in an alcove is the Cardinal Rohan, who struggles against his desire to then and there declare his love for her.

Cagliostro, grieved by the subsequent death of his beloved mate, attracts such attention that he is brought as a prisoner before the Inquisition of the Church to defend himself against charges of sorcery. He laughs at their intimations of death at their hands and before them conjures the vision of Cagliostro Immortal, whom death cannot touch, whom walls cannot confine. To refresh the sanctuary of his soul, he permits himself to be imprisoned, awaiting the resurrection of the spirit of his loved and lost Lorenza. Through hours of meditation, there he remains until the shade of his departed love passes through his cell and as by magic the walls part to grant him entrance into his world of significant works. The shade had summoned him to his great activities.

AMERICAN.

THE PROMISE (Oct. 14).—How often has life's cup been filled with bitterness because of a promise that should never have been asked nor given. In this touching drama, the central figures are an aged fisherman and his daughter. Naturally the thought uppermost in the old man's heart is the future welfare of his daughter, and he unwisely chooses as a husband for her the man he believes will be the best provider, regardless of the heart interests of the two most vitally concerned. The chosen young fisherman promises the old man to marry the daughter and the fishermaiden calmly tells her lover that she is to marry another. Possibly the two young people would have learned to love one another and all would have been well had not the fates willed it otherwise. As it was the beauties of the coast attracted others, and Dan Cupid shot his darts in diverse directions. Complications arose and the fishermaiden soon found her heart too full for utterance.

THE BORDER DETECTIVE (Oct. 16).—Uncle Sam has many representatives in various vocations, paid to guard his interests. This story deals with the intrigue of an official in the customs office. The ingenuity of a secret service man in apprehending the guilty culprit and his confederates is as essential to the story as it is amusing. Love also enters and plays an important part in the unravelling of the perplexing mysteries. Just how the chapters indicated dovetail can be better witnessed than explained in the space available.

THE NEW COWPUNCHER (Oct. 17).—A stranger in a strange land does not always experience the most delightful sensations and in this instance the principal character finds himself the adored one of a charming maiden and the most despicable of men on the plains—a horsethief. Fortunately for him, he is unjustly accused and Dame Fortune comes to his aid in disclosing the real culprit.

THE BEST MAN WINS (Oct. 21).—All the world loves a lover, and in following this story we are almost inclined to wish young Neilan luck in making love to the heiress of the ranch on which he is an employe, wishing that he were not the tool in the hands of an unscrupulous companion who desires to enrich himself.

Possibly the scheme might have worked, but the arrival of an old schoolmate revives a smoldering love in the heart of the heiress and the cowboy loses all interest for her. Our friends do not submit without a struggle nor does the heiress calmly accept the old-time love. The excitement, due to changed conditions and disappointments, furnishes material for one of the most delightful productions.

THE WAY OF THE TRANSGRESSOR (Oct. 23).—George Stanford, a ranchman, has occasion to experience how it feels to "marry in haste and repent at leisure" and is exceedingly anxious to break the ties that bind him to his Indian wife. He is infatuated with a Gypsy girl who is suspected as being the sweetheart of a suave young ranchman in love with the daughter of the owner of the ranch. For a time the plot thickens and every convenient nook seems to adapt itself to a love affair. The sheriff interests himself in behalf of the Indian woman and soon her husband pays the penalty for his crimes.

THE WOOERS OF MOUNTAIN KATE (Oct. 24).—An odd character, this Mountain Kate; living in the hills, rather unkempt but strikingly attractive to three suitors who live in habitations identically the same as the object of their adoration. Kate selects the man of her choice, but one of his rivals soon manages to secure her for himself. A triangular struggle ensues, and after the excitement has subsided, Mountain Kate is again left to lead the lonesome life of a hermit.

MAJESTIC.

CAPTAIN BEN'S YARN (Oct. 20).—Captain Ben Bobstay, a retired mariner, is fishing from the dock of a seaside resort. Mrs. Brownlow sends her two little children Tommy and Molly, down to have him spin a yarn to them. Captain Ben begins and recounts the story of his early love (in the same village) for beautiful Mehitabel Lee. He tells of her father's opposition to his love, and the intention of forcing Mehitabel to marry a rich man. The old salt then spins the tale of his running off to sea, his adventures with the Hottentots, after a ship wreck, where he is about to wed the princess who saved him when the vision of Mehitabel Lee comes to him and makes him remain true to his love. Then he escapes by a daring ruse. He is captured by pirates, and they are about to slay him when the chief's daughter offers to marry him, and make him a partner with her father. Again Mehitabel's image appears, and he stays steadfast. He flings himself into the sea, where he swims for hours, and is rescued by a British Admiral who has a beautiful daughter. This damsel falls a victim to the salt's fatal gift of beauty, and her father is persuaded to offer her to Ben. Mehitabel's image intrudes once more, and Ben refuses. At last he lands safe and sound back in the quaint village, and he goes to Mehitabel's house to find that she has indeed married the rich man, and he is taunted by her cruel father.

As he is finishing his romance, the mother of the two children walks down the dock, and observes the portrait of Mehitabel which is in old Captain Ben's watch. She shows him a duplicate of the picture in an old fashioned miniature in her locket, about her neck. The old captain is dumbfounded but she laughs and insists that he come up with her to the veranda of their summer cottage. He follows her, and as he gets on the veranda a big limousine whizzes up, out pops the young husband, helping a quaint little old lady from it, with band boxes and he leads her up the steps. "It is Grandma," cry the children, and the daughter kisses the little old lady rapturously. Then she leads her to old Captain Ben. It is Mehitabel Lee. The old man rubs his eyes, and the two wipe their eyes. Captain Ben gallantly leads her to a seat on the veranda, and the daughter whispering takes the children inside, and beckons her husband to follow. The old one-time sweethearts are left alone to tell each other the tales of their past. "Where have you been?" asks grandmother Mehitabel.

LOVE AND WAR (Oct. 22).—Robert Carlisle and Nell Stark are southern sweethearts and he asks her father for her hand, which he gives. On this occasion Nell presents him with six linen handkerchiefs in which she has embroidered the letter "R," reminding him that it is his birthday.

The civil war is declared and when Robert announces his intention to join the Northern forces, he is ordered off the Stark premises and Nell, prompted by her southern heroism tells him to go never to see her again. He leaves and in her tears she remembers his ring and tearing it from her finger, throws it in the direction taken by him. Her anger cools, however, and regretting her hasty act, searches in vain for the ring. Nell's brother Will arrives home from Richmond and before joining the confederate forces, Nell gives him a photo of herself.

Will is assigned as a spy and is about to enter the Federal lines when he is discovered, pursued and wounded. He eludes his pursuers by crawling in a thicket, but crawling onward he comes upon Robert, who has been assigned to picket duty. Weak from the loss of blood Will resigns his fate to the Union soldier, who is about to give the alarm, when he spies the picture projecting from Will's coat. He extracts it and is shocked to find Nell's photo. At once thinking he is her sweetheart he is tempted to kill him, but fortunately drops the photo which alights back side up and his gaze rests on the words written thereon "From Sister." The truth now dawns upon him and binding up the wounded man's arm with his handkerchief, carries him within a short distance from the Stark home and succeeds in returning to his post without being detected.

Will crawls home and Nell on removing the bandages recognizes the handkerchief and on inquiring, her brother tells her the story. She at once decides to enter the army as a nurse in hopes of being of some assistance to Robert in this capacity and later on after a battle finds Robert badly wounded. She prevails on the Confederate soldiers to take Robert to the hospital and she nurses him back to health. The war is ended and Robert comes to the Stark home where he is given a warm reception and the lovers renewing their troth under the old tree find the discarded ring in the grass, which is replaced on her finger.

THE HIGH COST OF LIVING (Oct. 23).—Old Joel Smith is charged with murder in the first degree. At the trial he pleads in opposition to his own lawyers. He explains that he is now too old to be of any assistance to his widowed daughter and his grand-children who are dependent on him for support. He says he prefers death to a life of poverty and wretchedness. In telling the judge and jury his pathetic story (which is shown on the screen)—old Joel betrays a love for his grand children and his fellow laborers that is poignant with pathos. He tells how he had been sent by the men to tell the boss that they were dissatisfied. Although Joel was a favorite with the boss, his representations while listened to with respect were productive of nothing. His employer simply said, that if he raised salaries to meet the present "high cost of living" he would be compelled to close up shop.

When they receive the answer from the boss, the men vote to strike—much against Joel's advice, and although he liked his boss, Joel is with the majority and walks out with his fellows. A long period of lean days ensue. Joel's grandchildren and widowed daughter are starving. He is too proud to beg. He goes to the headquarters of the strikers and finds them all drinking and carousing. This is too much for Joel. He announces his intention of going back to work. One of the ironworkers call him a coward. All of the old man's pent-up anger comes to the surface, and before he knows it, he has killed the insulter. The jury weeps at the old man's pathetic story—they cannot find heart to convict him.

THE IDOL WORSHIPPER (Oct. 25).—Maud Merriwell is a charming girl, but fond of romantic novels. She disgusts her father with her sentimentality, especially when the old gentleman has his ankle broken and is forced to remain home in a wheeled chair. One afternoon as he is sitting by his library window, Maud and Tom Harland, think the old gentleman is asleep, and Tom proposes to Maud for the hundreth time. She refuses him, again declaring that "No man but a hero can win my hand."

Tom is disgusted, and walks away, but gets a signal from the old gentleman to come inside. He does so, and the father proposes a plan to make a hero out of him. This is to fill about six coal buckets with leaves and set fire to them—right there in the library. Then Tom can rush in and save his life. Tom agrees, thinking it will be a good joke to play on Maud. The old gentleman follows out the plan.

Meanwhile, Tom walks outside, sees Maud entertaining a crowd of girls, and so goes into the garden to smoke his pipe and await the signal. The smoke is now rushing out of the window; the girls see it and scream with fright. Maud and the rest of them are transfixed to the spot with horror. Maud strikes a romantic attitude and cries out: "I swear that I will marry the man who saves my father's life!"

She naturally expects Tom to be on the job, but it happens that the Chinese laundryman is coming up the walk with a bundle of wash on his back. The girls see him, but Maud has fainted. Tom rushes up, and sees his sweetheart fainting. This frightens him more than the smoke, which he knows is a fake fire. So he stays with her chafing her wrists and kissing her. The girls force the Chinaman into the window of the smoking room.

The next scene shows the Chinaman trying to rescue old Mr. Merriwell who resolutely resists all attempts to rescue him. He is in his wheeled chair and he has a great combat with the Chinaman. At last the Chinaman pulls him out on the porch. Maud has revived and the girls tease her about her vow. Tom hears it and tells his father, and they secretly determine to teach her a lesson. Tom goes to the Chinaman, gives him five dollars and offers him five more, if he will obey orders. Then Maud's father tells her that to save the family's name and honor she must marry the Chinaman. The girls have been tipped off, and they all back him up. Tom pretends to be a heroic martyr. Maud is frantic, but the girls hurry upstairs and make her pack her suit case. Tom sends for a minister, in his automobile, and the man arrives shortly, very mystified.

Tom and Mr. Merriwell dress the Chinaman in an old frock coat, with silk hat, etc., Tom sits down at the piano in the library to play the wedding march in rag time, while the girls bring Maud in, weeping and sobbing. The poor chink is led in (by the chauffeur) frightened to death. At the last instant Mr. Merriwell rolls in on his wheeled chair leading the minister. This, too much for Maud throws herself on Tom's bosom. That young man slips the Chink his final five, and the laundryman dives out of the window, to escape from the white devils. The minister bewildered at the fuss, has sense enough to marry the two.

THE HOMECOMING (Oct. 22).—A prologue sets forth how Langdon, junior member of a brokerage firm, shifts the blame of a criminal offense on to the shoulders of the senior partner, Tilford. Tilford is found guilty and sentenced to a ten year term. The treachery of the junior partner fills Tilford with a deep-rooted hatred. He refuses to see his wife when she comes to ask his permission to the marriage of Langdon to their daughter. He tears up his mail unread. Thus he never knows that the man who was responsible for his disgrace and his deprived liberty finally married his own daughter and that a child was born to them.

The sentence expires and he is released, being given the customary suit of clothes and sum of money. With the money he buys a revolver; then writes Langdon a letter warning that he is coming to kill him. Langdon is fear stricken when he reads it. Just then his wife and daughter chance to enter the office and Mrs. Langdon, noting his pallor and nervousness, persuades him to step out to see a doctor. They go leaving the child to play with her dolly. Tilford enters. The child appeals to him and he talks to her. The doll falls and breaks. Her sorrow over its breakage so touches Tilford that he promises to go get her a new one. He leaves and then comes the return of Langdon and his wife.

The child wants to wait for her new doll, but her mother insists on her leaving. They exit leaving Langdon alone. Tilford now returns with the doll, which by the way, the child has seen him return with. Tilford sees Langdon and his hatred and revenge is revived instantly. He makes little waste of denunciatory words before he aims the revolver at Langdon's heart and about to pull. Now the child rushes in asking for her new dolly and followed by her mother, Tilford's own daughter. So is a murder averted and revenge throttled by paternal love.

AN EVENTFUL BARGAIN DAY (Oct. 19).—Josephine, a young wife, plans to go to a bargain sale and, as her baby's nurse is away and her husband at work, she decides to take the baby with her. She leaves the baby asleep in his perambulator and hurries in the store. Smithers, a bachelor, passing the store hears the baby crying and seeing no one in sight picks up the child to comfort it and absentmindedly strolls away still with the baby in his arms. Kate a spinster happens along with her dog and seeing a sign "No Dogs Allowed" and wanting to enter the bargain sale, places her dog in the carriage belonging to Josephine. Josephine comes out of the store, places her bundles in the carriage and wheels the dog home where to her consternation she discovers her baby is gone and the dog in its place. She phones to her husband who rushes from his office to the house and his wife and himself hike to the nearest station house, wheeling the dog, where they report their loss. In the meantime the spinster enters from the store and finds the carriage gone and with it her dog, which causes her to rush madly off in search of it. A stranger whom she questions directs her to the police station to which she immediately goes, meeting Josephine and her husband with the dog, which they refuse to give up until their baby is restored to them. While all this is happening, old Smithers has returned to the store; finding the perambulator gone he enters and inquires of all the women buyers if the baby is theirs. They leave in a huff and old Smithers not knowing what to do takes the baby to his home. Becoming alarmed he decides to take it to a police station, but is stopped on the street by a policeman who has been sent out in search for the baby and taken by him to the same station that holds Josephine, her husband, Kate and the dog. Explanations follow. Josephine clasps her baby to her breast as does Kate her dog. Old Smithers apologizes and the "Bargain Day" ends happily for all.

GEM.

WHAT THE BELL TOLLED (Oct. 15).—During his mother's severe illness Bobbie Brown reads in a fairy legend, that rust taken from a church-bell after midnight will restor a sick person to health. At midnight he goes to the church and while taking rust from the bell, rings it accidentally. The town is aroused and the villagers swarm to the church. The minister finds Bobbie who explains. They return to Bobbie's home and find the mother has passed the crisis in her fever and is out of danger.

NESTOR.

PATSY'S MISTAKE (Oct. 16).—The prologue shows Cyrus returning from his club with some of the members, and the next morning, he finds the following note on the table: "Cyrus: I have endured your intemperance for the last time. I am taking the twins and going where you will never see me again. Matilda." Little Alma, his favorite twin, entered as her father was reading the note, her mother having returned to get the other twin's hat, and so Cyrus hurried her to the train with him and they were soon on their way out West. Matilda searched diligently for Alma, but hearing nothing from either Cyrus or the child, decided that they were both dead. Many years later, Cyrus and Alma, now "full grown" are seen in the West, while Elma, the other twin (also full grown) now married, starts West on a visit with her husband and mother. Chance brings them to the same town and trouble begins. Alma's friends mistake Elma for her sister, while Patsy, Elma's husband, after quarrelling with his wife on this account, follows Alma home, and enters her abode to beg forgiveness. Her screams bring Cyrus to the scene, who throws Patsy out and turns him over to an officer. The next morning the twins and their father and mother arrive at court and a general reunion takes place.

HER FRIEND, THE DOCTOR (Oct. 18).—Jane Carston was to return to-morrow from Ohio, where she had been for the past three years in school, and the ranch was all agog with expectancy and cleanliness. Bob Evans, head cowboy, was most eager and most anxious of the lot. To-morrow finally became to-day and Pa had gone to the station in his best linen duster and the buckboard to meet Jane. Finally, in a cloud of dust, Bob discerns them on the brow of the hill. Arriving at the house Jane greets mother with a rousing smack. She was effusive and kind to all the boys, until Bob. Then was it possible Jane could be shy? Anyway her greeting was different from the rest.

Things progress nicely until Bob is asked to mail a letter for Jane to Dr. J. C. Bronner, to whom Jane refers as "her darling old school friend Jack." Jealousy on Bob's part makes him very miserable, but is intensely amusing to Jane. Jane decides to clean up that "nasty messy old Bunk house." She discovers a caricature of Dr. Jay Bronner on Bob's bunk and it incites her to further increase his jealousy. Jane flirts with Buck, another cowboy, and he promptly falls in love with her.

The crowning blow comes to these boys when Jane tells them that Jack, her doctor, is coming out on a visit and shows them a letter from him in which it is inferred that Jane and the doctor would take a little tour of the world.

Desperation makes these rivals join forces against this common foe, and they determine by "black hand" means to make him leave the country. The day the doctor is to arrive, all the boys are to go to the round-up and branding, and Bob and Dick both promptly refuse to go to town for the doctor, but all the boys leave the ranch.

Jane goes herself and meets a charming young girl—Dr. Jacque Bronner. The girls are convulsed over the anger of the cowboys, but Jane secretly admits to Jacque her love for Bob. Returning from the branding, they are told the doctor has a headache and Jane was serving tea to the doctor in "his" room. This is too much for the boys.

That night they enter the doctor's room, masked, with the purpose of "blue-checking" him out of the country. In the surprise which follows their discovery of the doctor's sex, they miscalculate her determination, and Dick receives a painful but not severe flesh wound from the doctors silver derringer. Doc keeps them covered and yells lustily for help. Discovery and confusion not unmixed with mirth, follows. During convalescence under the Doc's attention, Dick heals his arm and breaks his heart. Bob sees silence may be golden, but learns that a speech in time saves many heartaches. Dick's heart and arm are healed simultaneously.

STAR EYES' STRATEGY (Oct. 15).—Star Eyes, a Sioux maiden, is in love with and loved by Eagle Feather, a Cheyenne Brave. They have clandestine meetings. Crow Face, a Sioux warrior, brings presents to the Sioux Chief and asks for Star Eyes as his squaw. The Chief consents but Star Eyes fights the proposal. She is delivered over to a squaw, who is instructed to guard her closely.

At dusk Eagle Feather awaits her at their meeting place, and when she doesn't come he tetheres his horse and creeps into the Sioux camp. Star Eyes peeps out of the tepee and sees the guarding squaw is asleep. She also sees Eagle Feather and motions him back. Star Eyes chokes the squaw into insensibility and joins Eagle Feather. They run to the horse, mount and ride away. Crow Face sees her going in the dusk and follows, detects Eagle Feather, returns and rouses the camp and the couple are pursued to the Cheyenne camp. The Sioux are not in sufficient numbers to attack the Cheyennes, so they retreat.

The Sioux declare war and surprise the Cheyennes when they are going through the wedding dance to celebrate the joining together of Eagle Feather and Star Eyes. Eagle Feather persuaded Star Eyes to escape. She does this and is joined by the fleeing Cheyennes, but Eagle Feather and others are captured and taken to the Sioux camp, where Eagle Feather is bound and insulted by his Sioux rival, Crow Face, and ordered to be burned at the stake.

Star Eyes and Cheyennes steal up to the Sioux camp in the dark in an effort to rescue Eagle Feather, and the other captives. Star Eyes sees the preparations for the burning of Eagle Feather. She chooses an open space between two clumps of trees and has a hole hastily dug there. It is finished just as the Sioux Chief is about to order the fuel heaped around Eagle Feather to be lit.

Star Eyes sends a message to Crow Face, the Sioux Brave, stating she will submit to him if Eagle Feather is spared. She then orders the Cheyennes to conceal themselves in the trees. Crow Face peers through the darkness and distinguishes the form of Star Eyes with her arms outstretched. He goes to her, and lured by her smile and open arms he falls into the trap, the grave prepared for him. The Cheyennes sweep out to avenge their wrongs, and taking the Sioux unawares, put them to rout. Star Eyes is in time to stamp out the fire just ignited and to rescue Eagle Feather.

EARLY DAYS IN THE WEST (Oct. 19).—The period is 1876—trains of settlers are moving Westward. It is the time of pioneers and prairie schooners. Dan is leading one wagon train and his party fall in with another led by a stalwart Indian, Mahomena. They proceed together. Amongst the latter party is a young girl, Eunice and she and Dan are immediately attracted to each other, a proceeding viewed with disfavor by Mahomena. Eunice is independent and fearless and Dan sees her go off alone on her horse. He sees the Indian follow, and being suspicious he follows.

Mahomena overtakes Eunice and tells her that she must be his squaw, and when she cuts him across the face with her whip, he binds her and is leading her horse off, when Dan steals up, cuts the leading lines and drives the Indian into camp at gun point. Mahomena is bound and thrown near a camp fire. He manages to release himself by holding the thongs over burning embers. He escapes and his absence is discovered, but though they follow him, he is not caught. He joins the Sioux. The immigrant trains arrive at a military post and depart. Soon after a scout brings news to the Fort that the Indians are on the war path. Mahomena watches the immigrant from point of vantage and keeps the Sioux acquainted with their movements. Dan, on scout duty, discovers signs of Indians, and finding one of Mahomen's feathers, warns the immigrants to move with caution.

The wagon trains are attacked and the situation is critical when Dan rides through the Indian lines. He is followed, but climbs a tree until the Indians pass, when he resumes his ride to the Fort, secures help and rides back with the troop in time to save Eunice from Mahomena and the pioneers from the Indians.

THE CROSS ROADS (Oct. 18).—A baby is discovered in a basket hanging to a tree at the cross roads. Mary Spaulding, a washerwoman, passes the spot. She takes the infant to her home.

Fourteen years later, Annabel has grown into a bright winsom creature. Mary has sent her to public school and she has therefore not grown up in ignorance. The love between Mary and Annabel is true, both of them seeking only the welfare and happiness of the other. One day Annabel delivers a basket of clothes at the home of a wealthy but childless couple named Austin, who have always admired and petted Annabel on the occasion of her visits. They desire to adopt her. They meet with the most strenuous resistence on the part of Mary and Annabel, who refuse to be separated. Finally Mr. Austin succeeds in obtaining Mary's consent.

Two years go by and Annabel has become a society girl. She has two admirers, Harry Owen and Bert Matthews, both of whom love her devotedly but between whom she is unable to decide. Bert one day invited the entire party to go on an automobile tour. They suddenly meet old Mary, now helpless and feeble, a miserable human derelict. Mary falls helplessly in front of the machine and Bert jumps out and scolds her for her awkwardness. Annabel not recognizing Mary at first comes to her rescue only to discover her long lost foster mother. Bert is filled with repulsion and draws aside, but Harry rushes forward and greets Mary most cordially. Annabel now knows whom she loves the better. Room is made for Mary in the automobile, but this deprives Annabel of her seat and she and Harry decide to go on foot to the next stop, and the journey they begin together promises to continue through life.

NO one had ever heard him speak a word, so they dubbed him "SILENT JIM." Then one day he told his story just as Eclair will re-tell it to you in a forthcoming Feature Release.

MILANO.

THE BLIND MAN'S DOG (Oct. 19).—Victor Berti, is a young blind man, who lives with his sister Rosa in the Italian city of Milan. They are happy and contented with their lot, even though they are quite poor and have been orphans for many years, for haven't they a friend in Don, their faithful dog, who can guide Victor through the gay cafes and boulevards, while he plays on his violin. But there is one care which clouds their complete happiness and that is the infatuation of Ricco, the Apache chief, for the pretty Rosa. One day while Victor and Don are off on their rounds, Rosa receives a visit from the bandit Ricco, who boldly presses his suit. She repulses his advances and hearing the approach of the returning brother, he slinks out with threats of vengeance. Rosa bravely hides her trouble from her blind brother, but he instinctively notes her agitation and resolves never to leave her alone again.

The outlaw is not to be so easily put off, however, and calling together some members of his band, he plans to seize the girl and carry her off by force. A few days later the men waylay the couple, seize and gag Rosa and spirit her off. Poor Victor, helpless to follow the villains and deserted even by Don, gropes his way homeward and there gives way to his grief. But there was reason in Don's desertion, for with almost human sagacity, he silently shadows the band of Apaches until they disappear into an abandoned house. Soon they return, having secreted Rosa within. Don circles the den and in the rear finds a way to climb to the shed roof and gains access into the room in which Rosa is confined. She manages to scribble a few lines on an old envelope, places the message in Don's mouth and bids the faithful dog carry it to the master. He gives the paper to Victor, whose friend reads the message of distress. With the aid of help, Victor's friend soon liberates Rosa.

THE GIRL IN THE GINGHAM GOWN (Oct. 14).—Jack Bartling and his mother are people of wealth and take up summer quarters at their home in the country. One day while looking over their vast estate, Jack meets Mary, the daughter of a farmer whose land adjoins the Bartlings. One day the young people are brought to a realization of their love for each other, when Mary attends to Jack, who has fallen from his horse. Dave, one of Mary's country admirers, had witnessed her kindly attitude towards Jack and scolds her for receiving the attentions of a rich man's son. Mary refuses to listen to Dave and leave him.

Some days later a house party is given at the Bartling home. Among the guests invited is Muriel Van Osten, who, it is rumored, is about to become engaged to Jack, although he has shown very little attention to her. Muriel learns of the love affair between Jack and Mary and shows her the newspaper announcement of her rumored engagement to Jack. Mary decides to have nothing to do with him thereafter, and when he pays her a visit he is treated coldly. Jack, who is greatly annoyed at Mary's indifferent attitude, takes her in his arms and tries to reason with her. Dave, seeing Jack forcibly take Mary to him, and thinking that he is insulting her, intervenes, and a quarrel is averted by Mary who explains and leaves the two men. Jack, not wishing to have any trouble with Dave, leaves, but Dave, whose anger is not so easily appeased, follows. The two men met on a boat landing and a fight ensues. Jack is hit on the head by Dave and he falls unconscious into the river. Dave runs home and tells Mary that he thinks he has killed Jack, who, in the meantime had been rescued by a passing boat. Mary goes immediately to Jack's home and tells his mother of his death, where she comes face to face with the supposed dead man. A short while after, they meet Dave, who is forgiven by Jack and Mary. The young people's parents consent to their marriage and the wedding day is set.

LA TOSCA (Oct. —)—The scene is laid in Rome in the year 1800. Angelotti aided by his sister has escaped from prison. Scarpia, the chief of police, who is in charge of the search for him, is madly infatuated with La Tosca, a celebrated songstress. But it is an infatuation not reciprocated by her, for she is as desperately in love with Mario Cavardossi, an artist of note.

Mario aids Angelotti in his attempt to escape. Scarpia is pursuing them. Angelotti hides in the well. Scarpia arrives and in his search of the residence discovers both La Tosca and Mario, placing him under arrest and holding La Tosca to witness the scene of his diabolical plot. Before her, Scarpia tortures Mario to compel him to tell of Angelotti's hiding place but he refuses to speak, though he writhes in pain. La Tosca is forced to look upon his agony as the torture screws are tightened and tightened, until at last she cries out the hiding place of Angelotti. In further revenge Scarpia arrests Mario and orders him to be shot at next sunrise, hopping to bring La Tosca to his brutal desires her love for Mario.

She beseeches him not to fulfill his order. He tells her his bestial insulting price of liberty for her lover. She prays and then consents to do as he asks. She asks first for transports for her lover and herself that they may safely leave the country. Scarpia leads her to believe he has ordered a mock execution of Mario so that she may reach him as he pretends to fall, then as the soldiers leave they are to escape with the transport he is now writing out for her. But secretly he had sent orders to kill Mario as ordered, for then his own foul designs will have been accomplished. La Tosca thinks of her word as he is seated writing; her virtue absolutely rebels. She will not do it. She will kill him first. He rises and attempts to take her in his arms. She runs from him and he pursues her about the room. He catches her; meekly she seems to permit his beast-like embrace. Her arms are round him; now swiftly she drives her hand in his back. It contains a dagger; she has killed him.

Taking the transport from his dead and tight-clutched fingers she steals away to the tower where Mario is to be shot. He is brought forth and she whispers to him to pretend to fall; that the execution is a mock one and they will leave the country for a land of happiness . The order is given; the soldiers fire. Her lover falls and the soldiers leave. La Tosca rushes to the spot expecting to meet a smile. He does not reply as she speaks. She turns him and looks in his face. He is dead. With a wild cry to the heavens, where into the spirit Mario has but passed, she flings herself over the citadel wall to the stony courtyard below. Such is the end.

AN AMERICAN INVASION.—It was not a foreign army which invaded this Kingdom of Sustania but a beautiful American Girl, with her mother, her maid and a supply of American flags. Into this musty law bound kingdom she brought the breath of youth and freedom. The heir to the throne has grown tired of the musty castle and is leading the simple life in a cottage in the woods. His constant companion is a small book, no more nor less than the Declaration of Independence of America.

Into this wild wood wanders the American girl, is followed by the villain, by name General Wornser. A stone in her slipper causes this fair American girl much pain, and she removes the offender, only to see the general at her side. Frightened, she runs away, bumping into the Prince. It is a case of love at first sight and together they read that Declaration of Independence, the Prince accepting a beautiful flag of the land of the free. The villain sees this and hastens to the pompous King with his news. Furious, the ruler of Sustania signs orders for the arrest of the Prince and the expulsion of the Americans from his Kingdom.

The Prince escapes, is stowed away in a trunk and put into the stateroom de luxe of the Americans, and there, while the General fumes at his inability to find his royal charge, the ships' chaplain marries the fair invader to the heir to a throne, and the ship bears away these young lovers, while the old king has to seek another heir for his Kingdom.

SECRET SERVICE STEVE (3 reels).—John Steven Clifford, known to his friends as Jack, and to the criminals who fear him as "Secret Service Steve," while visiting his college chum Edward Kerrigan, a Lieutenant in the 16th U. S. Cavalry stationed at Fort Erie on the Canadian Border, falls in love with Kerrigan's sister Nance, who returns his affection, but is continually annoyed by Franklyn Fitzhugh.

While canoeing with Fitzhugh one day, Nance is thrown into the water by the upsetting of the canoe, and narrowly escapes drowning, being left to her fate by the cowardice of Fitzhugh who deserts her and saves himself by clinging to the upturned canoe. Jack, being in the neighborhood and hearing her screams, rescues her and is rewarded by her promise to become his wife.

Upon his return to the army post he is handed a letter from his superior in Washington stating that "recent disclosures lead to the belief that much of the smuggling of opium and diamonds over the Canadian frontier is carried on in the vicinity where he is spending his vacation." A series of incidents leads him to become suspicious of Fitzhugh, and he decides to follow him to his Canadian home. There while in hiding he learns all that he has suspicioned is true.

While hidden near their meeting place he learns to his horror that members of the band, acting under direction of Fitzhugh, their leader, have kidnapped his sweetheart Nance, and have carried her to one of their secret hiding places. In an ingenous manner he manufactures a disguise and manages to have himself engaged as a cook for the very camp where his sweetheart is held a captive. He contrives to effect their escape, but unfortunately is overtaken and made a captive, and condemned to be bound and thrown into the waters of the river.

In the meantime Edward has become uneasy at the unaccounted absence of Nance and Jack and asks permission to take a small escort and search for the missing ones. Permission being granted, he searches the neighborhood, and while scanning the surrounding country with his field glasses, he witnesses the attempt of the smugglers to do away with their enemy and abduct Nance in a fast motor boat. The small detachment succeed in rescuing Jack and from him learn that Nance is a captive in Fitzhugh's hands.

Riding very quickly along the riverside they try to overtake the motor boat, but their horses prove unequal to the task and they are about to give up in despair when they see a locomotive on a side track near the river. Paying no attention to the protests of the engineer they board the locomotive and start upon a chase after the motor boat. As the engine rapidly overtakes the boat, and as the soldiers are preparing to fire upon the smugglers, Fitzhugh holds the inert body of Nance, between his pursuers and the boat and has the engineer run the boat to the opposite shore.

Jack and his party bring the engine to a stop and hasten to the riverside where they find a leaky old skiff with which they manage to reach the other side and continue to chase the fugitives. Fitzhugh leaves the main party and with Nance in his arms starts for the hills unseen by any but Jack who follows. On the edge of a great cliff they engage in a combat, but, unfortunately Jack is overcome and Fitzhugh is about to brain him with a huge bowlder when one of the pursuing soldiers who is standing at the bottom of the cliff and has witnessed the fight, fires and kills Fitzhugh who topples over the cliff to the waters below.

Jack is complimented and congratulated for his daring and success, and though rewarded by promotion in the government service found his greatest reward when shortly after he led his sweetheart, Nance, to the altar.

He is called away one day, expecting to be gone for several weeks, and the ambitious butler unfolds a plan to the chef by which he hopes to marry a wealthy girl. A widow and her daughter have just taken a house nearby, and the butler sends the chef with a note inviting them to dinner, signed with the name of a fictitious count. The women accept the invitation, and the butler arrays himself in the frock coat of his master and prepares to receive them. He secures the co-operation of the other servants, whom he has promised to reward handsomely if he wins the rich girl's hand. Everything goes well until the bogus count begins to think he is really a great man, and his arrogance towards the chef arouses that worthy's ire, and he decides to spoil the butler's plan. He gets one of the servants to attire himself in another suit of their master, and he comes upon the scene. Much comedy results and a duel is fought with table knives. Into the midst of this melee Harding comes home, and the crest-fallen servants are discharged.

They flirt with him deliberately, and go to the park with him. Here one manages to make her escape, and runs back to Mrs. Smith. The other makes a fool out of him, and finally gets him to play "Blind Man's Buff" and ties a handkerchief over his eyes. As he is groping about for his fair companion, Mrs. Smith slips into his arms. He tears the handkerchief from his eyes and faces the music.

further intrusion and settlement. Mary, the adopted child, is sent to an Eastern boarding school.

One morning the Indians get excited over the appearance of a long wagon train which wends its way into their territory. The emigrants prepare to settle down. Wild consternation prevails among the Indians. A delegation is appointed to call at the fort to protest against the invasion of their hunting grounds. Colonel Ward sees the justice of the Indians' protest, and receives them kindly. He promises to take the matter up with the Washington officials. The Indians insist upon the emigrants being removed, and to this the Colonel turns a deaf ear. Mary has just come home from college. The Indians meet her in the yard, and the attraction of race overcomes the years of education and civilization. These are her people her brothers, and she listens to their impassioned recital of their wrongs, and then bids them wait while she intercedes for them. Mary eloquently pleads the cause of the Indians to the Colonel, but he is helpless in the premises and can only promise to do his best. It is the first time Mary has ever asked anything which was not granted her by her doting foster parent, and she feels it keenly.

The Indians appeal to the government agent, and as they become excited he orders them from his office. They refuse to move. Angered, he draws his revolver and in the scuffle that ensues the weapon is discharged and he falls to the floor mortally wounded. The Indian police and soldiers rush in and arrest the chief. A court martial is held and the Indian is sentenced to be shot. Mary has overheard the trial and determines to save the chief. She secures permission to visit him in his cell and unfolds to him her plan, which is to remove the bullets from the guns and replace them with blank cartridges. When the soldiers fire he is to fall and feign death, and, when his body is turned over to his tribe, to continue the deception until he is safely away.

That day at midnight, Mary makes her way to the library and extracts the bullets, replacing them with blank cartridges. In her excitement she drops one of the guns. It awakens the Colonel, who starts to investigate. Mary listens a moment, and hearing nothing goes on with her work. The Colonel sees the dark form moving in the room and fires. Hastily lighting a candle he picks up the dead body and sees who it is. Mrs. Ward is frantic with grief, and the Colonel with difficulty controls himself. A glance at the guns explains the situation, and he replaces the bullets and decides to conceal Mary's death until after the execution. The next morning the fort is surrounded by hordes of Indians. The Chief, confident that Mary has carried out her plan, boldly takes his place facing the firing squad. With a dozen bullets in his body he drops like a log. The Indians laugh merrily at what they consider his clever acting. He is placed on a stretcher and given to his tribe. When they think they have reached a safe distance from the soldiers they draw back the blanket which covers their chief, and then, for the first time, they learn that he is dead.

MAKE 50c DO THE WORK OF 80c

Always buy the regular M. P. Machine size 3 in One —½ pint for 50c. You'll save 30c, for you get 8 times as much oil as if you bought the small bottles.

And remember, 3 in One never deteriorates nor turns rancid. The last drop is just as good as the first.

3 in One is so clear and pure that the finest watchmakers use it. It lubricates perfectly every working part of every moving picture machine, star wheel, flywheel, shutter gear, rewinder and everything else that requires oiling. Makes every part run smoothly and much easier.

Repair bills and bills for new parts are chiefly caused by thick, greasy oils which collect dirt, gum and clog the delicate mechanisms, thus causing them to wear. 3 in One is absolutely free from grease—never collects dirt. Instead, it cuts away all dirt and gum and saves wear, tear and expense.

3 in One cleans and polishes all wood and metal surfaces around a theater. Positively prevents rust, indoors and out.

FREE OIL FOR YOU

A postal will bring you a generous free sample. Get yours today!

10c, 25c, 50c (the economical ½ pint size) for sale everywhere.

ATTENTION!
FINAL NOTICE

ON OCTOBER FIRST, 1912, the price of all Deagan Musical Electric Bell outfits advanced 33⅓ per cent. This advance has become necessary owing to the fact that we have added a great many improvements to our Musical Electric Bell outfits, which have greatly increased the cost of manufacturing, and we can conscientiously state that our new improved Musical Electric Bell outfits are greater value at the advanced price than our old style Electric Bells are at the old prices which we asked for same.

Inasmuch as we have a number of prospective customers who contemplate purchasing these Bells, and who have been figuring with us, we will accept orders for the new style outfits until October 10th at the old list prices, namely, $75.00 for our famous No. 310 outfit, consisting of twenty-five Bells mounted on quarter-sawed Oak backs, with resonators, complete with new style keyboard, platinum point contact mechanisms, soft and loud attachments, and many other improvements which have been incorporated in these Bells.

Should you be interested in a set of these Bells, order now, as we will not accept orders at the old prices after October 10th. Any of our various outfits will be shipped C. O. D. with privilege of examination and trial, on receipt of $5.00 to guarantee express charges.

A Smashing Victory For the Universal!

New York Motion Picture Co. Pays the Universal Company Thousands of Dollars Damages, Returns All Bonds and Stocks, and Surrenders Bison and 101 Bison Trademark Forever!

ture exhibitors who have been waiting for the outcome of the 101-Bison fight and to every one else interested in the moving picture business, we now announce a complete and sweeping victory for the Universal Film Manufacturing Co.

Finding that the courts were not to be fooled by false claims and that the Universal Company was prepared to prove every assertion it ever made with regard to ownership of the "Bison" and "101-Bison" films, the New York Motion Picture Co. has signed an agreement with the following results:

FIRST—The New York Motion Picture Co. (C. O. Baumann) pays to the Universal Company thousands of dollars in cash (a sum in five figures) representing damages pany as the result of the seizure of the Bison plant and Bison name by the New York Motion Picture Co., Mr. Baumann and his associates.

SECOND—Mr. Baumann and his associates return to the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. all stocks and bonds in the Universal Co., amounting to almost half a million dollars.

THIRD—Mr. Baumann and his associates forever surrender to the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. the "Bison" and "101-Bison" trademarks.

In other words, the "Bison" and "101-Bison" films belong absolutely to the Universal program and can never be secured anywhere else. This proves once for all that we were exactly right in our con-and "101-Bison" and have owned them ever since the Universal company was formed.

This announcement will also brand as falsifiers all exchanges who may hereafter seek the patronage of exhibitors under the pretense that they can furnish them with Bisons or 101 Bisons. This applies to all exchanges not handling the bona fide Universal program.

This ought to convince you where your best interests lie, Mr. Exhibitor. It ought to open your eyes to the fact that you have overlooked a golden opportunity if you have not demanded that Universal program. It is not too late to mend. Simply quit doing business with any exchange that seeks to fool you. All you have to do is to "THE PICKANINNIES AND THE WATER-MELON." Monday, October 21st.

It opens with a devout camp meeting, and it ends with a watermelon feast. But the melons weren't secured in strict accordance with the doctrine of honesty as preached at the camp meeting. Gee, but it's funny.

"KING THE DETECTIVE AND THE SMUGGLERS." Thursday, October 24th.

Of all the hair-raising adventures in which King Baggot has figured, the ones in this picture are the most exciting. From the moment King sets out to catch the smugglers until he is rescued from drowning, the picture teems with thrills. Produced in the usual efficient King Baggot style.

"JOE THE PIRATE" and "EARLY IN THE MORNING." Saturday, October 26th.

The kids get a wild woolly West book, and they proceed to carry out the dare-devil adventures of the bad men. Most ludicrous kid's picture in a good while. Along with it a merry Johnny Cumpson comedy.

"HUNTED DOWN." Tuesday, October 22nd.

When Dayton left for the plains of the West he hadn't expected that Burton, the famous detective, would be assigned to trap him. The novel method adopted by the police official to bag his man is both novel and exciting. Pretty scenery; splendid interpretation.

Though the college had done much to make Nichia an American lady, the blood of the Indian coursed through her veins, and when the crucial test came she went back to her people; only to sacrifice her life for her white lover in the end. Big cast, sensational situations, splendid production.

BISON - UNIVERSAL LITIGATION ENDED

Baumann and Kessel Retain All Properties, Including California Studios, Actors and Equipment---Universal Gets Trade-Mark We Have Decided to Discontinue.

New York Motion Picture Co. now presents Spectacular, Historical and Dramatic Military, Frontier and Pioneer Subjects in Two Reel Features. Released every Friday under the name of

"Kay-Bee" Films

"Kay-Bee" stands for Kessel and Baumann, and Kessel and Baumann stands for Quality.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE COMPANY has settled its litigation with Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the terms of which are a matter of great satisfaction to New York Motion Picture Company.

Owing to the fact that the Universal Company persisted in selling films under the name of "Bison" and threatened to sell films under the name "101 Bison" which were not made by the New York Motion Picture Company, confusion resulted, and the New York Motion Picture Company had decided to discontinue the use of that name, and to make films of the well-known Kessel and Baumann quality under the name "Kay-Bee" films, in order that the public might again know that our trademark was a guarantee of super quality, and free from imitation.

At this psychological moment the Universal Company made the startling offer to cease all litigation and further complications if we would give to that company our right to use the name of "Bison" and "101-Bison," and would also pay to them a sum of money in liquidation of a cash indebtedness that they claimed.

The New York Motion Picture Company never doubted for a moment that it would obtain a complete victory over the Universal Company in all litigation commenced by that company, as, in fact, it has so far done.

The Universal Company in all litigation claimed title to all of the valuable properties of the New York Motion Picture Company, and sought to obtain them, and also to restrain Messrs. Kessel and Baumann and their associates from employing their abilities in the motion picture field in competition with the Universal Company.

The settlement, therefore, reduces itself to this: That the New York Motion Picture Company GIVES THE UNIVERSAL COMPANY SOMETHING THAT IT DID NOT WANT—the "Bison" trade name.

In addition to this, the cash paid by the New York Motion Picture Company to the Universal Company is less than the cost of litigation would be.

The New York Motion Picture Company RECEIVES IN RETURN the termination of all litigation and annoyances of the Universal Company, ALL OF ITS VAST PROPERTIES IN CALIFORNIA AND IN NEW YORK CITY, and the undisputed right TO EMPLOY THE TALENTS OF MESSRS. A. KESSEL, JR., CHAS. O. BAUMANN, FRED J. BALSHOFER, THOS. H. INCE, Director; CHAS. KESSEL and "DOC" C. A. WILLAT, and their complete staff of artists, in turning out the best pictures in the world, UNDER THE NAME OF "KAY-BEE" FILMS.

The New York Motion Picture Company presents to the Universal Company ten feet of title, and continues to release nine hundred and ninety feet of Kessel and Baumann combination quality.

Facts and Comments

A GREAT friend, helper and spokesman for the exhibitor is the screen in his theater. Advertising experts in all lines are well aware of the power of the screen, and are willing to pay for a little space on it. The screen is likewise a weapon both of offense and defense. Just now we are passing through all kinds of political campaigns from President down to pound-keeper and constable. The three principal candidates for President are all friends of the motion picture, but there are scattered all through the country candidates for smaller offices, whose stand on moving pictures will be important to the exhibitors in their respective sections. Some of these candidates are friends of the motion pictures, others are indifferent and others, again, are its enemies. Here, then, the screen should get into action. Help the friends of the picture all you can by advising your patrons in a nice, diplomatic way to vote for them. It is not necessary to get tangled up in politics in order to help these friends. Simply proclaim on your slides the fact that Candidate Jones or Smith has always been a friend of the motion picture and is in favor of proper Sunday entertainments. Let that fact speak for itself with the voters in your theater. If a man has been really obnoxious in his opposition to exhibitors of motion pictures then refuse to announce his candidacy to your patrons and work in some slides cartooning enemies of the motion picture generally without mentioning any names. The screen, like the page of a newspaper, is more effective in denouncing than in praising. Few candidates have been lauded into office, but many have been kept out of it by adverse criticism.

THE evils of overdone effects are deplored wherever moving pictures are seen and enjoyed. An esteemed contemporary relates that in a fine pathetic play recently a parrot walked across the floor. The "effect-man" behind the screen made a noise like the heavy tread of a truck-horse, and the effect of the scene was of course completely spoiled. "It is true," says the writer, "that the showman who wishes to be up-to-date awakened to the fact that, generally speaking, his effects are not true, and nine times out of ten give dissatisfaction and jar upon the theme of a good plot, distracting the audiences' attention and making one feel that you want to shout, no matter how rudely, 'Shut up, while I look at the pictures.' I think as matters are at present in this line, if votes were taken by the audiences to abolish the effects-man and his appliances, the proposition would be carried unanimously." The "effects," as "worked" by an overzealous trap-drummer, often vulgarize and degrade the picture. Here in New York, where vulgarity and lack of manners seem to be a distinct local characteristic, the trap-drummer and the "effect-man" are at their worst. They develop a perfect talent for spoiling pictures. Where the piano-player alone furnishes the accompaniment to the pictures, he or she, too, try to imitate "effects." The piano is tortured to produce the worst discords possible, and this always wakens the sympathetic echo from a few vacant-minded humans, greatly to the disgust and annoyance of the sane part of the audience. There are theaters in small towns not far from New York where the management would not tolerate such a nuisance for a minute. Music is used to give atmosphere and to help the picture, not to ridicule and debase it. The worst offenders are some of the big show-houses on Broadway.

IN Hamburg, Germany, a voluntary association of teachers looks at all the film releases shown in that city. The object is not censorship, but the selection of reels of educational value. The teachers communicate their selections to the police and the press. Not only the motion picture journals but the daily press as well prints the lists of commendable films sent out by the teachers' committee. We have before us the last list published, and it appears that out of a total of four and fifty reels specially commended by the teachers as being suitable for children only four are of purely European origin. The rest come either from American manufacturers or from producers who maintain a studio or market in America and who are consequently much influenced by American taste and sentiment. We think this fact is quite significant. It bears out what THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has often pointed out—the better morale of the American-made picture. Some of our esteemed European contemporaries took us to task when we ventured to draw attention to this fact some little time ago, but in view of the decisions of teachers who are certainly not prejudiced in favor of American films, it does appear as if we knew what we were talking about. In the list of recommended films Pathe leads, closely followed by Vitagraph and Edison, while the remainder of the "honor" films is distributed among Lubin, Cines, Selig, Rex, Solax, Eclair, Gaumont, Itala and Biograph.

An analysis of the films as to subjects shows that the teachers' committee believes in clean comedy as an essential part of a special children's program. Out of the fifty-four reels specially recommended, twenty are purely comic pictures, twenty-five are either scenic, industrial or topical and the rest are pathetic or mildly dramatic, with two or three fairy tales to complete the variety. We believe that the work of these teachers is of benefit to every exhibitor in the city of Hamburg and to the industry generally. Would it not be well to have such a committee of teachers in every American city? The interest of the teachers would stimulate the interest not only of children, but of the parents, too, and the latters' attitude toward the motion picture would surely become favorable. If lists of these recommended films were hung up in the classrooms and printed by the press it would be bound to increase both the quantity and quality of the audiences in the electric theaters. What a splendid chance for building up Saturday matinees and adding to the prestige of the theater generally. There could scarcely be a much more effective and inexpensive way of advertising both the motion picture and the electric theater. In the meantime exhibitors might take a hint from the composition of children's programs by studying the kind and the proportion of the pictures selected by this teacher's committee.

Whom and How Many?

By W. Stephen Bush

ANY consideration of the motion picture as an educative force must deal with this very important question: "Whom and how many does the motion picture educate?" It teaches the very people whom the stage cannot reach, to whom the library remains a sealed temple and whom the church cannot interest. I have never sought any statistics on the subject, but such personal knowledge as comes unbidden to every dweller in a large city convinces me that a large percentage of pupils never graduate from the public schools and that the percentage of pupils who pass from the common schools into higher educational institutions is exceedingly small. A regular academic training is still the privilege of the few. The struggle for the winning of the daily bread is too intense. Commonly at the age of twelve to fourteen years the regular and methodical training of the mind has to be given up and boys and girls must enter the pitiless school of the world with Bitter Experience as its chief teacher.

"But knowledge to their eyes her ample page,
Rich with the spoils of time, did ne'er unroll.
Chill penury repressed their noble rage
And froze the genial current of their soul."

There are night schools, to be sure, and popular courses of lectures and all kinds of settlement work. All these things, however, impose a greater or lesser burden on the brains, and through the brain, of course, upon the whole body. A boy or girl, a man or woman, who has gone through a severe grind of eight or more hours of work, feels little inclination to attend night schools or lecture courses. Even the visit to the library or the reading of a book entails mental work which, coming at the end of a laborious day, would depress rather than stimulate.

The vast armies of boys and girls, of men and women, trooping home after the day's toil is done crave relief and relaxation. They are tired and cannot bear any further strain on mind or body. To such we know the motion picture is school and church and theater and library all in one. The moment they enter the electric theater "knowledge's ample page, rich with the spoils of time," is again unfolded before them, now speaking to them in pictures that move along the screen. The picture imposes no burden and bestows its delights and benefits freely and without conditions. Not alone scenes from distant lands and glimpses of the past broaden and enrich the millions of minds, but any picture which addresses itself to the normal human heart and the average full-grown human intelligence carries a pleasing and instructive message to our vast audiences. Shut up in mill or factory or office during the day, with little or no chance to give the mind its play and pleasure, the great masses of the people look to the motion picture theater for recreation. Note the word "Recreation." It means a rebuilding of the forces of the mind and body. If, in this process of rebuilding, new images and ideas flow into the mind, we may truly speak of a triumph of the motion picture as an educator of the people.

To sum up, the motion picture teaches the great masses of the people, who are most in need of harmless diversion and entertainment. The picture is a topic of interest and discussion in millions of homes. It arouses curiosity about a thousand things, and makes people think. It is in the motion picture theatre that many who had begun to lose interest in the finer things of life pluck up courage to go to the library or ask questions of an educated friend or neighbor. The pictures not only teach but they arouse a desire for knowledge and develop an appreciation of what is beautiful and good. It is a common experience of librarians, within the personal knowledge of the writer, that whenever a great historic or classic feature film is shown, new and strange faces are seen in the libraries and inquiries are made for books on the subject of the film.

The most important educational function of the motion picture is its strengthening of the imagination. Therein lies the foundation not only of all mental but of all moral progress as well. It is safe to say that one picture out of three has the effect of strengthening the imagination. Now, the healthier and stronger your imagination the greater will be your understanding of life and your sympathy with mankind. Ignorance, stupidity, prejudice, narrow-mindedness, are almost invariably the result of a feeble or deadened imagination. When Macbeth does not know whether the figure looming up before him at the banquet is a real man or merely an apparition, he seeks to assure himself by looking at Banquo's eyes. Then he feels sure that he sees but a phantom: "for there is no speculation in those eyes." Speculation here is but a fine poetic variant of the word "imagination." The motion picture keeps alive this "speculation." The process is exactly the same in every human mind. If we are able to imagine well, if this precious faculty is kept on edge, we naturally strengthen our powers to realize. In his "History of European Morals," W. E. H. Lecky says that the power of realization forms "the chief tie between our moral and intellectual natures."

Let us see how this philosophy would work out in a practical, concrete case. Take two communities equal in every respect except that the one has a good electric theater and the other has not. The members of the one community have seen cinematographic productions for years, while to the other the motion picture is wholly unknown. Now a great social problem or some project for the common good is put before the members of each community. Who can doubt that the community whose intelligence and sympathy have been quickened and highly developed through steady attendance at the exhibition of good motion pictures will be better prepared to deal with problem or project than the community which has entirely missed these wholesome aids and influences?

Thus when we speak of the "educational influence" of the motion picture we want it understood that this influence reaches every man, woman and child who sees the pictures. It is not an obscure or occult influence, but it acts directly and with lasting effect. So great and profound is our faith and confidence in this educational influence that we would very much like to take all the enemies of the motion picture through a selected course of films. Then we think only those unhappy specimens who struggle willfully against the light would remain to scold and scoff.

"Sunshine" (Essanay)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

ADMIRERS of Essanay pictures are assured of a strong, heart-stirring drama in "Sunshine," a regular release that will be given its first public presentation on October 25th. It has been produced by one of the Eastern companies, under the direction of T. W. Wharton, and the scenes have been excellently staged and finely photographed.

THE PRINCIPALS OF THE CAST:

Joe Roberts .....Harry Mainhall
"Sunshine," sister of Joe ....Miss Ruth Stonehouse
Father O'Brien .....Harry Cashman

This film requires a succession of dissolving pictures, which run concurrently with those of the main story for several hundred feet, the dissolving scenes showing the characters and the environment on as large a scale as they appear in the scenes of the main story. There is absolutely no confusion, although the two sets of scenes are running side by side, one to the right and the other to the left of the curtain. I understand that the Bell-Howell camera has been used for these dissolving views.

Harry Mainhall, who just won prominence with the Essanay forces in the role of Jack Tenney, in "The Voice of Conscience," makes another hit in the part of Joe Roberts. The scene in which Joe makes confession to the good priest, of his reason for committing homicide, is a most convincing illustration of the power of the photoplay to reveal clearly a complex story to the spectator. Mr. Mainhall's face serves as a mirror to convey his varying emotions and, in connection with his gestures, almost enables one to follow the confession without the aid of the dissolving views.

Father O'Brien, as enacted by Harry Cashman, is a fine characterization. It possesses venerable dignity, saintly charity and affecting sympathy. The sketch of "Sunshine," the erring sister, is well outlined by Miss Stonehouse.

THE STORY.

Joe Roberts and his tiny sister, Carrie, are cared for by a devoted mother, who was widowed early in her happy married life. Joe centered his affection on Carrie before she was able to leave her mother's knee. Her first smile of recognition affected him so pleasantly that he told his mother it was like sunshine, so "Sunshine," thereafter, was her name.

"Sunshine" had not reached her teens when she and Joe were left orphans. Before her death, the mother called Joe to her bedside and requested him to care for his sister. Joe promised, though there was little need for that, as his life was bound up in her welfare.

In his own words, as given in the subtitles, he proved how stanchly he kept his vow: "As the years passed, gee, how I worked for her. She uster come to meet me every day, and how all the boys envied me! One day she didn't come to meet me, and I went home alone, but couldn't find her."

On that eventful day, after searching every nook in their humble home, thinking she might be playing a joke to tease him, he discovered a note on the table, in her handwriting, which read: "Brother dear, I am going to be married, and have diamonds and wear fine clothes."

As we watch Joe, after reading that note, we feel that the blood freezes in his veins for a time. During these awful minutes, we understand that he fears the worst, and that his innocent, unsuspecting sister has fallen victim to the wiles of some heartless lecherous scoundrel. "Something seemed to snap inside, after I found the note," Joe said in confession to his good friend, the priest.

Then weary, despairing months were spent in searching for her, without avail. He lost his reason during these dark days, but still he continued the search, believing that his love would be rewarded in the end. His friends and neighbors called him "Crazy Joe," when they referred to him.

One evening, while crossing a bridge in the city, he spied a woman, feeble and poorly clad, trying to climb the parapet, so that she might throw herself into the river. Rushing up, he arrived just in time to prevent the suicidal act. To his horror, and yet delight, he discovered in the forlorn creature his own sister, "Sunshine." "I took her home, but she didn't smile no more," he tells the priest in his pathetic narrative.

Weary of soul and weak in body, "Sunshine" longingly waits for death. Joe's deep anguish and unfaltering devotion make her feeble life still more intolerable. All his coaxing and tender questioning fail to make her reveal the name of her betrayer. But chance brings the secret, so persistently kept hidden from him. He finds the photograph of a young man at her feet, one day, when she had fallen into a faint, from weakness. When she regains consciousness, he shows her the photograph, and knows from the fear in her eyes—fear for his own life and future—that he holds the key to the discovery of the man who had wrought her ruin.

And now the fierce search for her betrayer is begun. One day he discovers him. With the smile on his face of a man who has found his heart's desire, Joe follows the stranger to his home. Stealthily he follows him through the door, and when he emerges, after a time, the smile has given place to a look of placid content and satisfaction. A police officer and another man chance to stand near the entrance. Joe approaches them, and, displaying a bloodstained knife, tells them what he has done. They look on him unbelievingly, but the man in plain clothes enters the building and soon returns, confirming the truth of Joe's statement.

The confession finishes here, but the end of Joe is known, when it is revealed that this confession was made the day before his execution for murder. Poor Joe, and still poorer "Sunshine"!

"The Ship With the Lions" (Ambrosio)

By G. F. Blaisdell.

It seems to be an accepted fact among film men that lions are the rage—and the more the lions, and the more in turn they rage, the better they are liked. Among the many lion pictures which the public has recently been privileged to see, probably none has had more thrilling situations than are contained in this latest production of the Ambrosio. Adding to the effectiveness of the film is the superb photography. Good photography these days is a common thing. Poor photography is the unusual thing. So when we see pictures that strike us forcibly, pictures that strike us in such unquestioned manner as to make us sit up in our chairs, we know we have something out of the ordinary. In "The Ship with the Lions" there are many good scenes—and great discretion has been used in the tinting of them. There is one picture that particularly stands out. This is when the man at the masthead sights San Blas Bay. It is a night scene. The sailor, with flag in hand, is shown in the masthead signaling the shore. It is close camera work, and the man and the mast are most effectively silhouetted against the sky. Also it is a thrilling scene where Jeanette, in love with the captain of the ship, and determined to cast in her lot with him, goes to the cage of lions and throws up the bars, releasing the six lions into the hold.

The story opens with Johnson, the "impresario," engaging Jeanette as lion tamer. The lions are to be shipped on the Audacious, a three-masted brig. Captain Stormfield is in command. The lions are restrained in great cages, which are lowered into the hold of the ship. The captain receives instructions that at San Blas Bay he will receive on board four barrels of golddust, but the crew is to be told that the barrels contain lead. In the hold the lions are inclined to be somewhat playful. One of them reaches out a great paw and fastens a claw into the shirt of Jeanette. She is pulled away just in time, but not before the king of beasts has torn the garment.

After the golddust is shipped at St. Blas Bay and safely stored, Johnson notices a few grains of metal which to him do not look like lead. He thinks they very much resemble gold. His manner plainly indicates that he will investigate the matter further.

As Jeanette is feeding the lions in the hold, the Captain speaks to her. He is very much interested in the lion tamer, and in every way possible tries to win her attention. He gives her a flower. The act is observed by Johnson, who at the first opportunity remonstrates with Jeanette. The lion tamer is a clever woman. She laughs at the impresario, and the lion man is in love with Jeanette more than ever.

There is an interesting picture enacted on the deck of the ship. It is bright moonlight. Jeanette is lying by the side of the vessel propped up on cushions. The captain is bending over her and very evidently making love to her. The two leave the romantic spot and retire to a cabin. The captain pours out two glasses of wine, which they drink. Johnson peers through the window and sees the lovers. A reverse scene shows the face of Jeanette through the bars against the window. Johnson retires in rage and goes to the hold. He takes a gimlet and bores into one of the casks. As the yellow metal flows into his hand he is confirmed in his previous opinion that it is nothing other than gold.

Johnson goes on deck. The crew is grouped about the forward part of the ship, at rest after the work of the day. They are drinking their grog. The impresario goes among them. "Mates," he says, "on board this ship is a lot of gold. Let us get rid of the captain, and each of you can roll in gold." The men pay close attention to what Johnson has to tell them, and evidently fall in with his plans. The captain leaves the cabin. He scents trouble and goes straight to the men on deck. There is a short colloquy, but the captain is satisfied that the crew is bent on serious mischief.

Captain Stormfield retires, and taking Jeanette with him goes below, fastening down the hatches behind him. He opens one of the portholes and draws alongside one of the ship's small boats. Then he throws his lighted lantern in among a mass of inflammable stuff. Jeanette opens the lion cage. The beasts come tumbling out. The captain and the lion tamer retreat to the porthole and lower themselves into the small boat.

On deck the crew discover the smoke, and immediately open the hatch in order to get into the hold to extinguish the blaze. As the cover is removed the lions bound to the deck. The crew in terror jump into the rigging. The lions roam about the deck. The captain and Jeanette in their boat watch from a distance the burning vessel. The sea is calm, and the rays of the moon are reflecting in the water. The closing scene is of the crew, but a few moments before bent on the destruction of the captain, suffocating in the rigging.

"From the Manger to the Cross" (Kalem)

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE titles of this production to be classed as the greatest achievement in cinematography are many, but chief among them is the realism of it all. It is not a Passion Play; it is the very story of the Passion and of many incidents recorded by the evangelists. It is indeed a cinematographic gospel. Because of this sublime work it will be easier than it was before to "go forth and teach all nations."

There are only two standards of comparison which I can find: The Passion Play of Oberammergau and the Pathes' Life of Christ. The Passion Play in the Bavarian mountains lasts an entire summer's day, it has behind it the pious endeavors of more than seven generations and it has had the benefit of expert biblical study in even the minutest points. Its dramatic machinery is complete in every detail. The work of its actors is world-famous for its sincerity and its compelling power. In spite of this, if I had to choose between the loss of these films and the abolition of the Passion Play I would with little hesitation decide in favor of the films.

The Oberammergau Play is in the main nothing more than a dramatic recital, while the films reverently avoid any distinctly dramatic display; the Oberammergau exhibition seeks to portray events which happened in places thousands of miles away from Bavaria and which occurred in an environment, which no skill or art of man could re-create, while the films bring before our eyes not only the events and characters of the sacred records, but show them to us in the very places where they occurred. The reels show us the real Lake of Tiberias and the very type of nets in which Peter and the other fishermen of Galilee pursued their ancient calling; they show us the very road on which Joseph, Mary and the boy Jesus returned out of Egypt into their own beloved Nazareth; they show us some glimpses at least of the glorious temple of Solomon, as reconstructed by archeologists; they make the tragedy of the crucifixion stand out in plain but rigidly historic relief, using as far as this is humanly possible, the very ground on which it was enacted; they follow in the journey to Golgotha, the Way of Sorrows (Via Dolorosa), trodden by Christian pilgrims even to this day in honor of a very old and authentic tradition; they show us as it existed nineteen centuries ago the barren and desolate regions about the Dead Sea, where The Voice in the Wilderness was heard; we see the real Bethany, parts of the ancient road that led north out of Jerusalem in the direction of Galilee and along which Mary and Joseph had been travelling, when they became alarmed about the absence of their child; we are led to the very spot where the shepherds tended their flocks and where the first glad tidings were heard.

It would far exceed the limits of this article to enumerate more instances. I can only pause to commend the fine reverent spirit of the master hand which directed this production. In this respect the producers have consciously or unconsciously followed the Oberammergau school. A chaste decorum characterizes every scene. Treading on ground which was full of pitfalls they have not made one single misstep. The treatment of the "Childhood of Jesus" is typical of this rare judgment and perfect discrimination. The records of the childhood of Christ, as they are now accepted by the Christian churches, are very meagre. There are, however, a number of apocryphal or pseudo-gospel, which attempt to elaborate the plain and concise details of the authentic writers. In the miracle plays of the past some of the crude and improbable stories of Christ's childhood were often portrayed. The films show four exquisite scenes, one taken from the recorded events and the others either taken from old traditions or constructed out of the probabilities of the known events. The scenes in and about the home at Nazareth are beautifully conceived and full of a sweet and pathetic naturalness. In taking into the films an ancient Christian belief, that Joseph, Mary and the Divine Child were during part of their sojourn in Egypt near Babylon, the producers have added a charming and instructive scene, which will be new and most interesting to many audiences.

In selecting the actors and the costumes the producers have followed the best Christian traditions, as they have in the course of the centuries become embodied in a thousand paintings and statues. To conclude the comparison with the Pathe production it must be said that while there is more of a dramatic sequence in the Pathe pictures, the Kalem reels have the infinite advantage of giving us the real scenes and the real people of the east.

The exhibition in Wanamaker's Auditorium was attended by many clergymen. This expression was frequently heard at the end of the performance: "We hope they won't put this in the picture houses." With all due respect to these ladies and gentlemen we hope it will be put in every motion picture theater in this and every other country of the world. What story is fitter for human eyes to see than the story of Jesus of Nazareth? To whom did He address Himself more often than to the plain people? To whom did He preach on the shores of Gennesaret? Very much to the same people, who gather nightly by the millions in the motion picture theaters. His religion was for all the people at all times. Where is the missionary spirit of our Christian ministers and priests and churches? These men are indeed hard to please. When the motion picture gave stories of life, not failing to show the seamy side, these good people denounced it for being sensational and corrupting and what not. Now when the noble art of cinematography has produced its greatest triumph and has put itself to the loftiest possible use, there are ministers and pious ladies who raise their hands in horror at the thought of such "glorious pictures being shown in common picture houses." To some it seemed "shocking" that these pictures should be exhibited for money. Is this any more shocking than the payment of money to ministers for their services? An extreme willingness to take money for good and pious purposes has always struck me as a characteristic of most churches. If there are any benevolent and wealthy persons who cannot bear the thought of seeing people pay for witnessing these reels I suppose there is nothing to hinder them to rent a set and exhibit it free of charge. If their religious convictions take shape in that manner they are entitled to respect, otherwise their ideas are purely ornamental.

When five years ago the Pathes brought out their Passion Play conditions in the industry were chaotic and the personnel of the exhibitors was by no means imposing. In spite of this the Passion Play was treated with the utmost reverence everywhere and I cannot recollect any instance where the religious sensibilities of the audiences were outraged or offended. Conditions have vastly improved since that time and the personnel of the American exhibitor to-day compares favorably with that of men in any walk of either commercial or professional life. It may be assumed for a certainty that exhibitors will rise to the occasion and give these wonderful reels a worthy and appropriate setting. A musical program has been compiled which has some merit. It is, however, by no means the last word in musical accompaniment. A little Gregorian chant and music interspersed with classic music of a religious tinge would seem to be at least as fully effective as the singing of a number of hymns. The works of Gounod, Haendel and Bach will be found full of good popular suitable music. The pictures tell their own story and a lecture is scarcely needed. All the quotations from Holy Writ that are used in connection with the titles on the screen have been selected with great judgment and sufficiently elucidate every single scene.

The character of the subject will evoke reverence in every human mind. The work of the producers will increase this reverence.

EXHIBITION AT WANAMAKER'S AUDITORIUM.

By special arrangement with Mr. John Wanamaker, a private exhibition of the Kalem production, "From the Manger to the Cross," was given in the Auditorium of the Wanamaker Stores, New York, on Monday afternoon, October 14th. The exhibition was arranged especially for the clergy of New York and vicinity, and the big hall was fairly filled with ministers and their friends. The members of the Kalem players who took part in the making of the picture and who returned from their long tour abroad the preceding Saturday, were also present to see the effect of their labors for the first time.

There had been considerable preparation by the Kalem Company, in order to give the production a proper presentation before so distinguished an audience. The Schubert Quartette was engaged and, with Mr. Alexander Russell, organist at the Auditorium, held several rehearsals of vocal and instrumental selections of appropriate character. The Schubert Quartette is composed of these accomplished vocalists: George Warren Reardon, barytone; Forrest Robert Lamont, tenor; Mildred Graham Reardon, soprano; Marie Bosse Morrisey, contralto.

A brief word of introduction and explanation was spoken by the Rev. W. H. Jackson, and the presentation of the picture commenced accompanied by an organ selection, continuing without interruption. Suitable vocal and instrumental music was rendered as the various parts and scenes were unfolded, producing a most profound effect upon the audience. Before the second part had been shown there was scarcely a dry eye to be found in the assemblage. Intense interest was manifest throughout the entire production and many were the expressions of praise at the close of the exhibition.

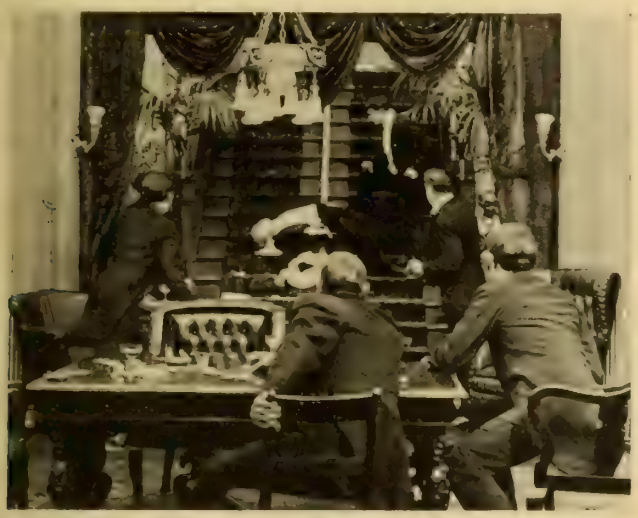
The Kalem Company are to be congratulated upon so successful a presentation of so remarkable a production.

"The Non-Commissioned Officer" (Edison).

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

REMARKABLE progress has characterized the Edison releases this year—this fact is a matter of general comment among those who view hundreds of pictures from a critical standpoint—and in fascinating evidence are the scenes of beauty and grand ensembles of photodramas like "The Non-Commissioned Officer." The interiors are all charming and in some of them the harmonious arrangement and grouping of characters displays a knowledge of composition so fine that it appears to be intuitive. The agreeable presentation of a subject is much slighted by producers, and is so important to the success of moving pictures that it is editorially urged in this issue.

"Picture sense" is badly needed in most photodramas. What is placed on the screen before our eyes night after night is often so lacking in balance and placing of the various parts that it jars the audience instead of producing the agreeable effect we all enjoy in nature or art. Sensation explains sentiment. The more beautiful an object, or the more harmonious the arrangement of detail in a picture, the more enjoyment is felt by those watching it.



Scene from "The Non-Commissioned Officer" (Edison).

The ball-room scene is masterly, and, throughout the drama, the eye feasts on a succession of delights that address themselves to the soul through the eye. I cannot too highly praise such careful and delicately adjusted work, because it marks the dawn of an art that exceeds the drama in its limitless variety of charm.

The story of this release is one of manly chivalry. The men opposed in the clash it presents both exhibit high courage, dignity of soul and the generosity which forms a part of great hearts. The characterization is that of men we love to meet and call friends, those who are incapable of doing what is low and mean. Oakley, an English guardsman, and Lieutenant de Berg of the French army are real men.

CAST OF CHARACTERS.

Oakley .....Walter Edwin
Black, his friend .....Charles Ogle
Colonel de Bellechasse .....Robert Brower
The Colonel's Daughter .....Gertrude McCoy
Lieutenant de Berg .....Augustus Phillips
Members of the Regiment, Guests at the Military Ball, etc.

The photodrama opens in the cardroom of a London club. Oakley is engaged in a game and finds that one of the players is creating. He leaves the table indignantly, not deigning to give his reasons, but is followed by the cheat, in a deep scene, up a staircase, and a swift struggle ensues, with a tragic result. Oakley is advised by his friend Black to leave England at once. We next see him serving as a non-commissioned officer in the French army. He is in company with his Colonel when the latter is attacked by a gang of ruffians and pitches in with such vigor that he scatters them, saving his superior officer's life.

The Colonel is a fine old fellow with a pretty daughter and few French prejudices. Oakley is rewarded by being made the private secretary of Colonel Bellechasse with a result to be expected—he falls in love with the daughter. Notwithstanding the fact that he is compelled to keep his antecedents and "past" a secret, he makes swift progress as a lover and is on his way to better things when Lieutenant de Berg appears and discovers the relation. De Berg is openly a gentleman, outranking Oakley in service and socially, but he is democratic enough to fight in the open, man to man.

In the rivalry that follows, de Berg waives all questions of rank and challenges Oakley to a duel, the survivor to continue his suit without interruption. Oakley accepts—the types are fine looking fellows—and chances upon his old friend Black at a gay cafe. Black consents to act as his second, and a duel with pistols follows.

Every possible precaution has been taken to preserve secrecy because Oakley's act would be construed as a crime under the French military code. In spite of this, two soldiers chance upon the scene of the duel and see Lieutenant de Berg fall badly wounded at the hands of a non-commissioned officer. Oakley is arrested and cast into prison.

A court martial follows, a scene less brilliant than those of the ball-room and the cafe, but as admirably composed. The balance in these scenes is so perfect that it would make a much inferior release worth seeing. The court martial is conducted by the Colonel, but neither he nor the other officers can extract information from the chivalrous contestants.

A recommendation is made by the court of officers that Oakley be sentenced to five years of imprisonment for his breach of discipline in fighting a duel with a superior officer. Oakley's situation is a perilous one until a powerful combination of elements is made to preserve him from lasting disgrace. His friend Black comes upon an English attorney who is searching for Oakley with a notification that he is heir to a very large estate. Pressure is brought to bear upon the gallant old Colonel by his daughter in behalf of the man she loves, and Lieutenant de Berg contributes heavily to the result by a written statement to the effect that he alone was responsible for the duel. He testifies in writing, over his own signature, that the affair was brought about at his own instigation, though he is aware that this confession will lose him the girl he loves.

Scene from "The Non-Commissioned Officer" (Edison).

Very largely on account of the nobility of Lieutenant de Berg Oakley is released from imprisonment and given a free field of action by his magnanimous rival, de Berg causing himself to be transferred to another post.

The simple story ends happily after the old Colonel's prejudices have been overcome. The telling of the story is what counts heavily from beginning to end. The military costumes are not only brilliant but are accurate down to the most minute details; the fortress shown is a fortress, and the exteriors of military life are as near perfect as any I have ever seen in this character of picture. All the pains and care shown in selecting types and scenes contribute to make this photodrama a distinct advance over many others of its kind from an artistic point of view. It is very encouraging to see such splendid work done, as it promises much for an art that is becoming one of the most popular on earth.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

A THIRD of the fall season has passed and a scanning of the photoplay field finds everybody happy. Weather conditions have been very favorable to the picture houses in spite of occasional heavy rainfalls. The tinge of chilliness has worked to their interests and the majority of the box-office reports have been very gratifying. Some of the rainy nights have also worked likewise, I learned from personal observation, especially where the promenading was quite heavy and the change of weather sudden. Many nickels and dimes went over the little board in front of the box-office window from the hands of those who sought entertainment while waiting for the rain to stop, rather than seek shelter in vestibules, hallways, cafés or restaurants. This shows one big advantage the photoplay houses have over the regular theaters. Unless the attraction is a strong one and the advance sale is big, the latter houses have little or no chance against wet weather. I was in the neighborhood of Fox's photoplay house on Upper Broadway one evening when rain suddenly fell and the rush for shelter soon put standing room at a premium. In former days there was a crowding under awnings, or into vestibules until a surface car would come along, or a rush down convenient subway steps, or up the steps of elevated roads; but now the picture houses afford a shelter that is far more comfortable with an entertainment thrown in; and all at practically the same cost as a car-ride in former days.

* * *

Here is a suggestion that every well-equipped picture house should follow: Why not have a parcel and umbrella rental place in each house, especially in shopping districts. and in speaking of such districts those embracing the department stores are not alone thought. In the residential districts the conveniences suggested would attract many patrons and make visits more comfortable for other patrons unfortunate enough to get seats alongside of bundle carriers. This recalls a complaint I heard recently about managers allowing wet umbrellas and raincoats to be carried into the seats.

* * *

In many places these suggestions may be frowned upon because they will involve a checking and deposit system, but it must be remembered that the photoplay house of to-day is the temple of family amusement, and every convenience that will add to the comfort of the patrons and create in them a desire to repeat their visits must be provided. The managers who inaugurated the baby-carriage checking system set the pace and it is surprising that so many of them did not go further and provide conveniences for those who have no baby carriages to push.

* * *

A manager to whom the suggestions were made said, "I am wondering where this thing will end. I suppose the next call will be for a lunch counter. All the available space we have now is taken up by the requirements of the building, fire, health and, the Lord knows how many other departments, and it takes room for storing umbrellas, coats and packages." This is quite true, but it does not diminish the value of the suggestions from a business point of view. There is a good revenue to be had from people who would cheerfully pay the price of admission to have the use of a package room, or secure the temporary use of an umbrella, not speaking of the advantage gained by the management in drawing to the place the attention of people who might otherwise not have visited it. The lunch counter idea is perhaps a little far-fetched, but on cold, wintry nights it might be just as convenient to have the ushers distribute, at a nominal price, cups of hot coffee or tea as ice water is served in the good old summertime.

* * *

The cheaper stock company campaign to draw from the photoplay houses is in full blast, but the latter have not as yet sent out any C.Q.D. appeals. Most of the stock houses are running photoplays between the acts, although they do not advertise them.

* * *

The higher-priced theaters along the White Way are hanging out signals of distress, but studiously avoid admitting that the several picture houses along their line have hurt them. They attach the blame to the building through keen rivalry of an unnecessary number of theaters. A well-known theatrical critic says that the prospects for the future have caused many managers sleepless nights and already there are symptoms that the box-office receipts are not sufficient to make the theaters profitable. Meanwhile no complaint is heard from the old line houses that have gone over to the pictures, nor do the critics make mention of the drift of affairs that are taking the Frohmans, Shuberts and others into the photoplay field; all of which would seem to indicate that the mute drama and comedy productions fit in as a factor somewhere.

I have been following up the photoplay production of "Queen Elizabeth" (Sarah Bernhardt in the title role) in this city and vicinity and the results justify the conclusion that it is a matter of a short time when productions on a similar scale will be in the Broadway houses for runs. The pictures have done big business on the Loew circuit. Standing room the rule, and not the exception.

As I understand it, the Frohman idea on entering the picture field is to have entire reproductions in motion pictures made of their successful plays and produce the pictures throughout the country. To many minds such an undertaking would be a mistake, on the supposition that the reproduction would kill the original. An old-time manager takes a different view. He thinks photo productions will be an incentive to the public to see the play itself and hear the lines. "People will go to see a dramatization of a book they have read, or vice versa. The photoplay will be a self-paying advertisement created without the cost attending the engagement of a specal posing company, or the maintenance of studios. Of course, there is a big problem involved, and a costly one—the artificial illumination of a theater to get the pictures."

"Would not plays in their entirety become failures through monotony?"

"Of course. Eliminations will be made. What I mean by entire production is completely covering all action and not eliminating parts for the sake of restricting the reproduction to a given number of reels. The proposition is the same that has been adopted by many of the present photoplay producers. I well remember when I closed my vaudeville bill with a one-reel production of stories and plays that are now being produced as two and three-reel subjects. The old productions were curtailed for economical reasons and not because the subjects did not afford material for greater length. The demand for lengthy photoplays is increasing in this country as it has already increased in foreign countries and when such productions become more common than they are now the complexion of the film manufacturing field will change completely. It will be a case of the 'survival of the fittest' both as to the manufacturer and exhibitor, and also to the exhibitor. Those who have the big money to invest will be in the lead. Big productions take a lot of money, and there is a lot of it waiting for the arrangement of plans for the handling of big things."

He Found It.

A manufacturer furnishes the following as an exact copy of a letter he received from an Italian motion picture house manager in a New Jersey town:

"How Mr. Bullington Ran the House"

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THIS is one of the most delightful, if not the most, of Vitagraph comedies, and a work of art, besides, in character revelation. With Florence Turner, Flora Finch, Lillian Walker and Kate Price grouped around a jolly newcomer by the name of Hughie Mack—he will be very much of a comer if he does not get the balloon head—almost any kind of shaking up of the dice box is liable to bring a throw of five sixes, and the tight box into which Mr. Bullington—undisguised Mr. Mack—gets himself, offers an abundance of humorous opportunity without horseplay.

Mr. Bullington is burdened with flesh and a weeping wife. He is the adipose head of a small family consisting principally of himself. Though he has an emotional wife, with headaches, tears and nerves, so have other men—that is a mere matter of form. Bullington has something more important than a wife in these strenuous days—he has an appetite—and when it comes to pass that the principal things he comes home to get are not cooked and served to meet his inner cravings he rises from the table and demands a new deck of cards.

Scene from "How Mr. Bullington Ran the House" (Vitagraph).

Florence Turner as Mrs. Bullington enacts the clinging vine, the frail creature of alternating tears and smiles, who leans heavily on sex privilege and her authorized provider during a wedded career largely characterized by genteel inefficiency and delicate evasion of responsibility. Her wifely duties are summed up in deluging her husband's coat sleeve with salt water from the unfailing fonts of her lachrymal glands, or in making a ghastly effort to laugh at his funny stories. The mobile face of the charming young actress, changing quickly in response to her varied emotions, is a veritable study in this new opportunity, and I could not help thinking, as I watched her, that a series of domestic comedies like this one would admirably suit her accomplishments and spice the Vitagraph program with a decidedly snappy flavor.

She is sent down to the kitchen to discharge the cook, to discharge Kate Price. Think of it! All the resolution delicate and refined Florence can summon is destroyed in one blow of Kate's mighty fist—on the kitchen table. The house jumps and weeping wifey flees to hubby. It is now his turn, and the scene that follows is highly amusing without breaking any crockery—for which let us all be thankful. Kate starts Lillian Walker on her way. Lillie's make-up is a triumph in converting her character to one very foreign to her nature, yet giving truth to the representation, making an exaggeration seem a personality from real life.

While she is pursuing her devious way, the funniest dowd that ever walked the streets, Bullington decides that he will do the cooking, and he does. Fat and fussy, he sweats and swelters, scorches himself and scalds himself, seasons retail soup with wholesale condiments, but he sticks to it, and again we are spared any tiresome smashing of china. He and Florence sit down to a self-prepared meal, and the rest is told by facial expression such as moving pictures seldom bring out. Just watching them I thought of the jingle:

"Accept this sage conclusion,
"Man is subject to illusion
"On subjects great and small,
"Say naught—he knows it all.
"There's little use of talking,
"Let him do all the talking
"But the time to get the hook
"Is when he tries to cook."

Bullington's struggle between his egotism and his palate, with Florence watching closely and responding accordingly, reaches the heights of farce comedy and beyond. There is no violent action, no straining for effect, but I am sure the result will go over and reach the very best element in moving picture audiences. It is pure humor. This is the kind of photocomedy the little theaters need, indulging in breadth of drollery through refinement of characterization, going deep into human nature as we recognize it and bringing to the surface its amusing phases. Pure humor pleases all classes and offends none.

Lillie Walker as the new cook is decidedly funny when she is serious. Nearly all pretty girls in moving pictures are perpetual smilers. They can not divest themselves of a winning expression they have practiced before the glass for other—and let us hope higher purposes than augmenting the enormous salaries they are supposed to receive. Lillie has a laugh that is all her own, but she does not use it at all. She does not have to. She blows up the kitchen and appears in the dining room the very last word in frights, her frozen face as streaked as a six-months-old film.

It is said that women never have any sense of personal guilt, and, on this account, are unable to reason logically. I do not know that such is the case, but the "it-was-not-my-fault" expression on the faces of the trembling wife and the stolid servant when they accompany the angry Bullington to his wrecked kitchen strongly tends to confirm the impression. The whole piece is replete with unvoiced truth about common human weakness, and right there lies its subtle merit. As the raw critics say in their first disquisitions, "it is true to life."

After Lillian what? When she is sent on her way, Bullington and his wife are in desperate straits. They try living on Uneeda biscuits and a bottle of milk, but these are properties of the regulation motion-picture "poor room," where mother is fading away from the effects of a racking cough when the landlord comes to collect the rent. They learn over the phone that they can get a good cook, but she is an English woman with three children. In spite of these manifest disadvantages, they take her, and she appears before them, three tit-tat-toe children and all, in the austere person of Flora Finch.

Now follows an entirely new line of comedy of the clean and wholesome kind. The new cook's methods are startling in the extreme, but they are effective in the end. The wrecked kitchen resumes its normal cheer, and the dinner most formally served is without fault or flaw, hence the delightful comedy ends in what might be termed a "reaction of character," after a series of crucial experiences calculated to draw character strongly to the surface. The man, the ladies and the children are all human beings, not actors; the story is one of every-day experience in modern life, with only those slight exaggerations necessary to put the case strongly in a brief period of time. It is all sufficient that their amusing peculiarities are skilfully brought within the scope of our understanding and our sympathies.

By JAS. S. McQUADE

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, has returned to the city after spending nearly a fortnight with the Western company at Niles, Cal. The main object of his visit was for the purpose of completing arrangements for building a permanent plant in Niles. A tract of property, suitable for the purpose, was purchased, and the erection of the studio, developing rooms, carpenter shop, office, stables and garages has already begun. Six 6-room bungalows for the acting and working forces have been completed for some time. Negatives will be printed and developed at the Niles plant.

The production work of the Western company has grown to such proportions that a movable studio would no longer meet the requirements. Niles will be the headquarters for all operations of the Western company, although the entire Pacific Coast and the far Southwest will be drawn upon for scenic backgrounds and environment. The Western aggregation at present includes three producers—including G. M. Anderson, who has entire charge of all Western operations—nineteen actors and actresses, the camera squad, carpenters, etc., making a force of about forty people in all.

Mr. Anderson will always make headquarters at the new plant, and the other producers will be sent out to other sections of the Western country, as occasion may demand. The picturesque canyons adjacent to Niles will be utilized by Mr. Anderson in many of his forthcoming productions.

The output of the Western company, in the immediate future, will consist of Western comedies, of the Broncho Bill and the Alkali Ike type. Several fine scenics have now been made and quite a number are under way. Among these is an educational film giving an excellent pictorial description of the redwood industry, showing the method of handling enormous logs and their conversion into lumber. An expert cameraman is at present in the famous Yosemite Park, and is being assisted in every way, in securing a valuable scenic of Nature's wonders there, by the United States officers in charge of the park, and by Santa Fe Railway officials.

The Eastern companies, during the fall and winter, will engage in the production of dramas, comedies, problem plays, detective stories and melodramas. Mr. Spoor is much gratified over the steadily growing demand for his Eastern product, and is daily encouraged by letters from exhibitors complimenting him on their fine quality and photography.

Pittsburg Company to Build Studio in McKeesport, Pa. (?)

The Daily News of McKeesport, Pa., congratulates that city on the prospect of having films manufactured there, in the near future. The following excerpt from that paper gives particulars, but omits the names of the companies—one in Pittsburg and one in the East—concerned:

"Within a short time the motion picture fans of this city will have the opportunity of seeing moving pictures produced at home, a company now being formed in Pittsburg to open a studio in this section and produce pictures in the Youghiogheny and Monangahela river valleys.

"For some time this product has been under way, and at the present time the plans of the company are being completed. The stockholders include business and professional men of Pittsburg and several of this city, who have become interested, and in a short time the actual production of the pictures will be started.

"From a reliable source it has been learned that this city is being considered as the location for the studio, inasmuch as a studio could be erected just outside of the city limits, along either of the two rivers, and maintained at considerable less cost than one could be erected in Pittsburg.

"Connected with the company is one of the best directors of picture plays in the country. Over 150 persons will make up the company, including the actors, stage hands and others necessary to the production of a picture.

"The idea of a film company was first brought up when a society drama was produced this summer in Panther Hollow, Schenley Park, Pittsburg, and plans have been in progress since that time.

"Dramas, Western stories, etc., could be produced in this section with better scenery than can be secured in many other places, it is claimed by picture men who have visited this section.

"With the installing of a studio in this city, the coal mines, mills and the river valleys will be included in the picture productions.

"One of the largest Eastern film manufacturing companies has also considered bringing a company to this section for a short time to produce special features, and, should they come, it is likely they will locate permanently in this vicinity."

Minneapolis in Moving Pictures.

Plans were made recently by Chas. F. Stark, commercial agent of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, for a complete motion picture record of Minneapolis, including its industries, business center, pleasure spots and residential districts. These views will be presented at the Lyric Theater in that city, during "Made in Minneapolis" week, and will then be shown in theaters all over the country where the Essanay films are featured. A copy of all the films will be given to the Minneapolis Civic and Commerce Association to be utilized by its convention bureau and for general publicity work.

Nearly every activity of the city will be presented in the films. The larger factories will be pictured in operation; factory workmen and girl employees will be shown in groups. The university grounds and the students leaving chapel will be taken; the three leading newspaper offices will be invaded by the camera men, and motion pictures will be taken of the processes of producing daily news sheets. The governor and mayor will be posed at the entrance to the municipal building, a fast run of the fire department will be included; views of Nicollet Avenue and other downtown business streets with their crowds will go into the record, as well as busy interior scenes of some of the larger stores, and the series will be completed with pictures of the boulevards and the city's lakes, with sailboats and canoes moving on them.

By this means Minneapolis will gain the credit for being the most photographed city in the United States. Nothing that is characteristic or interesting will be omitted.

Chicago Film Brevities.

In my review, in this issue, of "Chiquita, the Dancer," I made a pen slip by stating that it was produced by the new Western company. It should have read, "the new Eastern company."

"The Charge of the Light Brigade" has made a tremendous hit in Chicago theaters. Great applause has greeted its presentation at all houses where it has been shown.

Mrs. R. Streeter, owner and manager of the Washington Theater, 22 and 24 North 40th Avenue, this city, was a caller at the World office last week. Mrs. Streeter is a careful and intelligent exhibitor and is doing good business. She has suffered several times recently by the careless booking of her program. She takes service from the General Film Company's branch at 117 North Dearborn Street.

Omer F. Doud, chief of the American scenario department, states that there is just now a dearth of good comedy manuscripts, and that there is a good chance for worthy scenarios of the comedy type. The American is ready to pay good prices for good comedy scenarios.

The American Meat Packers' Association held their annual convention in this city for three days last week. They visited the Selig plant, 500 strong, in autos, on Wednesday, October 16th, and were delighted with the sights and doings there. A motion picture of the visitors was taken as they passed a given point, while en route.

A private exhibition of "Starbucks," a two-reel feature subject by the American, was given at the Chicago Press Club, Tuesday evening, October 15th. Opie Read, who took the leading part, Jasper Starbuck, in the production, delivered a humorous lecture, "The Scarecrows," before the reels were run off, which was hugely enjoyed by all. Following the lecture, and before the presentation of "Starbucks," he gave a description of his experience as a motion picture actor. The droll humor of his remarks kept the audience in a roar. "Starbucks" will be reviewed in the next issue of the World.

Geo. H. Hines, of the Lyda Theater, on West Lake Street, reports a record breaking business for Essanay night, last week. Over 3,200 people attended. "Alkali Ike's Pants" made the hit of the evening. One old lady who could not control her laughter went home, still giving voice to her merriment at the farcical scenes.

Manager Nehls, of the American, showed me a handsome set of photos of the "Flying A" stock company one day last week, which he has just gotten out. They will form an attractive display for any theater using the "Flying A" output.

Louis Freedman, president of the Freedman Amusement Company, Minneapolis, has purchased ground on Sixth Avenue North, near his Milo Theater, for the erection of a new vaudeville house, which will cost $26,000. The seating capacity will be 800. The Freedman Amusement Company owns two of the finest motion picture houses in the Twin Cities.

Edward Deussen has purchased the Arcadia Theater, 430 60th Street, this city, from Mrs. A. M. Cheshier. He took charge on Monday, October 14th. He reports good business.

S. L. Warner, of Warner's Features, is in Chicago, and will remain about ten days. He has appointed Phil Soloman as manager of the Chicago office, which is located in suite 307, 167 West Washington Street. The new office was taken possession of October 11th. The Chicago office will attend to the distribution of films in eastern Illinois and in Wisconsin. The Warner's Features are now handled in 20 offices, which thoroughly cover the United States. The Gaumont people handle Warner's Features in Canada. Mr. Warner informs me that a big military production, three reels in length, is coming and that it will be released in about ten days.

The M. & F. Feature Film Service has secured temporary headquarters in room 1005, 167 West Washington Street. Their permanent office will be located in suite 805-06, at the same address. These quarters will be ready shortly. D. Mundstuk and H. B. Fitzpatrick are the owners. Both men are experienced and well known exhibitors. They have entered the exchange business believing that they know what will best suit their customers in the line of money getters. "Sentenced to Siberia" is the title of a three-reel subject soon to be produced by this company. The story will be filmed as told by an eye witness, Mr. Mundstuk, himself, being that man.

William Ham, of Linton, Ind., who formerly owned and managed the Nicklo and Gem theaters there, is now in Chicago, in company with Aldadore Stewart, booking "Gypsy Blood" on the Illinois state right basis. Both of these gentlemen are well pleased with the courteous treatment received at the hands of Chicago exhibitors and state that their feature is in demand owing to the splendid success exhibitors are having wherever it is shown. Messrs. Ham and Stewart are surprised at the beautiful moving picture theaters in this section and at the vast sums of money invested. Mr. Ham advises any exhibitor from the smaller towns to take a trip to Chicago and get some ideas, stating that, "it is certainly worth a man's time and money."

Deputy Commissioner Knight, of Chicago, in a recent interview, stated that he is at present besieged with plans for moving picture theaters awaiting his examination. He remarked that it seems as if every alternate paper he turns over is a plan for a moving picture house. He said that people seem to have the moving picture theater craze and that, if the rush continues, it will be necessary to keep his force working nights in order to catch up. According to the list in Deputy Commissioner Knight's office, there are 732 exhibitors in Chicago, of which number 650 are exclusive moving picture houses.

The Famous Players Film Company of New York has established a Western branch, with offices at 809-810 Morton Building, Chicago. Mr. Frank Meyer was sent on from New York to take charge. Mr. Meyer will be more readily remembered, when his name is mentioned, as being connected with the Western Film Exchange, St. Louis. It will be the duty of the Western branch to handle all central state bookdren; Miss Helen Lindroth, Mr. Jack Clark, Mr. J. P. McMeyer has met with remarkable success, especially in the case of the Sarah Bernhardt feature, "Queen Elizabeth," which had an unprecedented run of seven consecutive weeks at the Powers Theater, this city, during the summer months. At the Drexel Theater, where it was shown last week, the management showed to capacity houses. It is now being booked for one, two and three-night stands.

KALEM PLAYERS RETURN.

When the big ship "Adriatic" docked Saturday, October 12, at its pier in New York, after a tedious hold-up in the lower bay of 24 hours it landed, among others, the now famous company of photoplayers known as the O'Kalem's— a tired but happy bunch of picture nomads. In the party were Mr. Sidney Olcott, the manager and director of the players; Miss Gene Gauntier, his assistant; Mr. George Hollister, cameraman, and Miss Alice Hollister, with the two Hollister children; Miss Helen Lindroth, Mr. Jack Clark, Mr. J. P. McGowan, Mr. Robert Vignola, and Mr. Allan Farnum, all veterans of the silent drama.

A host of friends were at the pier waiting for the boat to make its landing, and they fairly received the homecomers in open arms. After the usual formalities attending the return of an American citizen to his own country had been performed the little company dispersed to prepare for further exploits in the picture field.

Nearly a year has elapsed since the O'Kalems were suddenly summoned from Florida and started upon the tour which has taken them through Egypt and the Holy Land, to England and again to Ireland, the scene of their first efforts on foreign shores. In their absence they have accomplished an enormous amount of work, the crowning effort being the production of the story of Jesus of Nazareth, known by the title "From the Manger to the Cross." Many of this company's Egyptian pictures have already been seen. To these they have added some more Irish classics which will appear later.

Extensive plans for the future employment of this most capable company of players have already been made and they will soon be as busy as bees.

EDGAR JONES.

Edgar Jones, one of the Liebler & Company players, is now a photoplay actor. His past experience has included responsible engagements with Harry Miller, Viola Allen, Kyrle Bellew, The Holy City, and other high-class companies, in many of which he has been assigned leading roles. He is an exceptionally good rough rider and master of horses. He is now engaged with the Lubin Company, of Philadelphia, and making his mark in the silent drama.

The Moving Picture Educator

COMING EDUCATIONALS.

AMONG the newest releases of educational film, "Through China," Eclair, should prove interesting. China is now spoken of as "awakening." The flowery kingdom is more attractive, horticulturally, than any other land. If America is famous for the fruits of the earth, China is also for its flowers. Its primitive people are also a natural wonder. Its political transition is at this time more widespread than its religious changes; these together, however, are shaping a new China. As it is to-day, will be a splendid film of record as of beauty—may this film reach our expectation.

"The Evolution and Life of a Silk Worm," C. G. P. C., is of double importance. The evolution of the silk worm is one distinct lesson—its silk producing power is another distinct lesson, each of great value. Biology has nowhere bound up two-fold secret powers more wonderfully than in the silk worm. This film, therefore, possesses intrinsic value.

"The Manufacture of Paper," Edison, illustrates a mechanical metamorphosis. An article in daily varied use, such as paper is, often loses its value through its common familiarity. To show its method of production will in itself please; to show much of its origin will be a lesson in the value of that which is often wasted.

"Life in Caucasia," Gaumont, introduces another of those unknown fields of human existence with which cinematography is now making us familiar; truly its explorative and revealing powers are one of its strongest educational aids. "The Eclipse of the Sun," by the same firm, is a combined astronomical and geographical lesson which will enlarge the power of the class-room, as much as it aids the scientist.

WHAT IS THE PROPER RELATIVE POSITION OF A PICTURE SHOW TO A PUBLIC SCHOOL?

In New York City recently a license for a moving picture show was refused because the building to be used was in too close proximity to a public school. Let it not be supposed that the refusal to grant the license was based upon any objection to the moving picture, but only because of the location; it was felt on all sides by those interested (except perhaps the exhibitor), that a sort of rivalry or tempting allurement would cause a degree of detractive power from the full value of the school work. There is no doubt this is true and wise, if there is any relationship between the school and the picture, their objective must be identical. When the schools and the moving pictures have any interests in common, the picture machine must be in the school; when the school and the picture have not one common interest the school building and the picture house must be a reasonable distance apart.

This incident is only another revelation of the growing proof of the need of combining the advantages of the moving picture with the every-day appliances of the school. Only recently did we advocate a "moving picture machine in every school," with the hope that the day is not far distant when, by the production of a suitable machine, this will be possible even in the country school-house.

Moving pictures and public schools must combine and not compete; their work must be friendly and not antagonistic. No two powers were ever made more necessary for each other than cinematography and education; the former is the great illustrator of the latter. Without the cinematograph education has made great strides; with its aid it will increase its power manifold. It is not simply "making two grow where one has grown before"; it is causing results to come forth "thirty-fold, sixty-fold or a hundred-fold."

A LEAP FORWARD.

From an educational standpoint, the new Kalem series of the "Life of Christ" is not only an advance in practical cinematography; it is a distinct leap forward. To those to whom educational cinematography is painfully and tantalizingly slow, this series will come with great encouragement, showing that progress is not herein slow and methodical; but spasmodic, and by leaps and bounds. It would be impossible to find a better subject to secure thorough and widespread advancement than the "Life of Christ"; it will be everywhere welcome and carry with it the proof (which some are slow to realize) of the adaptability of the moving picture; it will also, at the same time, remove the stain of the former stigma, which many allow their minds still to retain, against the early misuses of the moving picture. As an educator and purifier, therefore, it will do much good.

It will also, without doubt, open the door to other similar and stupendous undertakings; showing that cost, time and labor are equally repaid. The merits of the picture are not to be considered here, the writer's sole desire at this time is to draw attention to the value of the fact that this great picture accentuates the educational strength of moving pictures, as none of its predecessors have done.

When full consideration is given to the great difficulties met and overcome in this famous land of the Nile and the Jordan, the geographical and historical importance, the great moral and religious teaching imparted, it surely will cause other seemingly stupendous enterprises to lose many of their obstacles, and make the way easy for anything and everything else; if "The Life of Christ" can be extracted from the necessary combining conditions of to-day, nothing can be impossible that is of necessary and educational value. The Kalem "Life of Christ" is a triumph of the highest educational cinematography.

THE MORAL AND EDUCATIONAL VALUE OF KALEM'S "LIFE OF CHRIST."

The art of cinematography is exalted by the Kalem picture, "From the Manger to the Cross." The moving picture is lifted from the depths to which it has often been cast down. Whatever abuses inferior minds may cause the moving picture to depict, it can never be forgotten that this film exists to rebuke them. The rapidly decreasing ranks of critics will be entirely silenced when they realize the value of its capabilities. The whole moral standard of the moving picture finds its climax in this work. As an educator every church, institution and school (Sunday and day) is given an elaboration of that of which only parts were known, and of which much left to the imagination is now made plain. To the world at large, the unschooled, the unchurched, and the "submerged tenth," all of whom were neglected, yet all of whom see the pictures, this film story will be a great evangelizer.

We noted some time ago that people were reading the books that gave the subjects of the pictures; this being so, the pictured Life of Christ will lead to more Bible reading, and a greater familiarity with that knowledge most valuable to all men everywhere. Furthermore, the example set by this work will lead to many similar ones of kindred value, and the whole realm of educational moving pictures will be increased.

EDUCATIONAL PICTURES IN GERMANY.

[From Consul General A. M. Thackara, Berlin.]

The German Ministry of Education is considering the feasibility of using the cinematograph in certain courses in the curricula of higher educational institutions. During the present vacation period the large manufacturers of cinematograph films were given an opportunity to show to the designated educational authorities films adapted to such purposes.

A well-known philanthropist has donated to the schools of Berlin two fully equipped moving-picture machines. One of these machines is to be used in the Fortbildungs-Institute für Oberlehrer (Continuation Institutes for Higher Teachers) and the other in the high schools of greater Berlin. Cinematograph films are now available for anatomical, biological, and bacteriological courses.

Many schools in Germany are equipped with stereoscopes and also lanterns for stereopticon slides. Pictures for such machines are used in connection with courses in the following studies: geography, mineralogy, zoology, technics, art, and certain courses in literature where pictures of poets and authors are desired.

Doings at Los Angeles

New Picture Company at Los Angeles—Sennet and Mace in Bear Hunt—Briefs.

TWO full reels, completed, represent the first week's work of the new Egan motion picture company which has just been established by Frank Egan head of the Egan Dramatic school of this city. The company is occupying the plant of the Pacific Motion Picture Co. on Temple street opposite Echo Park for the present and will probably remain there until a suitable location can be found and a plant constructed.

Norman MacGregor, an actor and stage manager of many years' experience, has been engaged as director of the company and will have the responsibility of getting out two 1000-foot reels a week. He formerly lived in Los Angeles, but has been away for several years. Last season he was on the road with "The Barrier" company. As soon as the right sort of a man can be found he is to have an assistant.

In one respect Egan will have a big advantage over other motion picture companies, for instead of having a big actors' salary roll to pay out every week he will have money coming in from this direction. A large proportion of the members of his company are dramatic students who are glad to pay from $50 a month up for the experience they obtain from working in the pictures under a competent director. The old fashioned stock company plan is to be tried out with this company. That is, the subordinate parts will be taken by the pupils of the school and the leading parts will be taken by actors and actresses of established reputation who will be brought to Los Angeles from time to time to appear in the pictures. Arrangements have been made with David Belasco, John Cort and Oliver Morosco to obtain the services of the several stars who are under their management. James K. Hackett, who worked in the new company's premier picture last week, established the precedent.

Egan is still unprepared, he says, to disclose the channel through which his productions will be released. It has been definitely announced, however, that the first two reels were not up to the standard demanded by Egan and will not be marketed.

Strong dramatic photoplays just now are the greatest need of the new company and Mr. Egan is planning to hold a photoplay contest in which big prizes will be offered.

Horne Causes Comment.

"Pop" Horne's unique line of advertising for his Spring street theater is still the talk of the town. His chatty, good natured, brutally frank comments on the films he exhibits from week to week have attracted more attention than any kind of an advertising scheme that has been tried in connection with any other motion picture house in Los Angeles. He finds that it pays, occasionally to anticipate unfavorable comments which his patrons might make about the programs the General Film Company sends him, and certainly he has no critic more severe than himself. On the other hand he doesn't hesitate to sound the praises of a good program, as he did this week. Here is the message people stopped to read on the big bulletin boards in front of his house this week: "Three Comedies That Are Not Sad. No. 1—A Selig Comedy. 'An Assisted Elopement.' To the habitual grouch: Do not see this unless you wish your habitual temperament to have a rude shock. If you come out laughing don't say you had no warning. No. 2—A Biograph Comedy. 'The Line At Hogan's.' I'm still warning the grouches to keep out. Perhaps you can find a Broncho Billy picture somewhere. No. 3—Another Biograph Comedy. 'A Ten Karat Hero.' I'm again warning all you grouches not to see these comedies. Please don't come, I beg of you. A Vitagraph Drama. 'Her spoiled Boy.' A well told Western story. Regards to Broncho Billy. Goat Man please write."

Sennett and Mace Meet a Bear.

Mack Sennett, director of the Keystone company, tells a thrilling story about a hair raising adventure that occurred to him and Fred Mace this week. The Keystone company was engaged in making a comedy in Griffith Park, which, by the way, is not a park in the sense ordinarily understood by the term, but a 4,000 acre tract of mountainous territory located on the outskirts of the city limits and maintained by the municipality, to which it belongs, in its original natural state. The services of a bear were required in the picture and Sennett had engaged one from a menagerie. According to his version the bear had a mean disposition and refused to be a motion picture actor. Instead it took after Mace and Sennett who started toward the top of the mountain. At length our heroes reached the summit. The bear was so close behind that they could feel his hot breath. They ran out along a point and then discovered that they were on the brink of a precipice 1000 feet high. Behind them was the on-rushing bear. Ahead of them yawned the chasm. There were only two things to do, and either one was certain death. Mace says that they turned back and were devoured by the bear, but Sennett insists that they leaped. The reader will recall that in the opening sentence of this paragraph it was stated that this adventure had occurred to Sennett and Mace. One suspects that it occurred to them when they were trying to figure out something for the press agent.

Duress for School Promoters.

H. J. Brand, president of the now existed Brand Advanced Motion Picture Co., and Fred Osborn, director of the New York School of Acting, are still in the county jail waiting trial on charges of having violated the state labor laws by soliciting and accepting fees for obtaining, for would-be motion picture actors, positions which did not exist. Osborn's case will be heard October 30 and the disposal of the charges against Brand will await the outcome of the first case. Meanwhile the New York School of Acting has apparently gone out of business for the offices in the Canadian building are closed and the sign has been taken off the windows. The two men were arrested by J. J. Eagan, deputy state labor commissioner, who alleged that Brand advertised for actors for a motion picture company he was "going to" start and that applicants for the position were referred to Osborn who charged them for lessons in acting which were to make them proficient. None of them had ever become proficient up to the time the arrests were made.

Brevities.

D. P. Shull, of Long Beach, an enterprising photographer, is cleaning up a bunch of money on the presidential campaign by selling sets of slides to motion picture exhibitors all over the country. As soon as the conventions were over Shull communicated with the headquarters of the several political parties and obtained copies of the latest photographs of the respective candidates. He has made them into a set of four slides, one of Roosevelt and Johnson, another of Wilson and Marshall, a third of Taft and Sherman and the fourth of Debs and Seidel. An advertisement in the Moving Picture World brought a flood of orders and he was obliged to work nights to fill them. Many exhibitors bought the slides solely for use on election night. For that matter, one of the four is certain to be useful occasionally for four years.

Field work of the various motion picture companies in this vicinity was interrupted one day this week for the first time since last May. The occasion was the first rain of the season. The advent of the rainy season means, according to the experience of other years, that there will be a couple of weeks of rain between now and Thanksgiving and then a couple of months of good weather with the usual Spring rains to follow. However, the possibility of getting five or six months at a stretch each year without a single interruption on account of weather is one of the things that makes Los Angeles the greatest motion picture producing center in the world.

Improvements at the monster motion picture plant of the Universal company at Oak Crest in the San Fernando valley are going forward rapidly. There are now four big stages completed besides a Western town which has been built for the double purpose of backgrounds and utilitarian use. The fixed population at Oak Crest, including the Indians now numbers about 300. The company has about 20,000 acres of land with a sure enough mountain range on the ranch and by the first of the year will have the largest motion picture plant in the world.

Indications are that between now and the first of the year eight high schools in Los Angeles county will be showing motion pictures regularly in connection with the school work. Two high schools already have adopted them. At Long Beach and at Venice moving picture machines have been purchased and installed and arrangements have been made for a regular film service of educational subjects. Six other high schools are at the present time negotiating with the local branch of the General Film Company and if satisfactory arrangements can be made for film service will also install machines.

It is reported here that the Western Lubin company which is now working somewhere in Arizona is to move in about a month and will be located permanently in this city. There is no one connected with the company in Los Angeles to confirm or deny the story but the report is said to have come in letters passing between motion picture actors.

The Novelty theater on Main street displays a large sign in front this week bearing the message "Ice Water Furnished Our Patrons."

Nearly all of the downtown picture houses this week have arranged with one of the telegraph companies for bulletins and are furnishing their patrons with the returns, inning by inning, of the games between the Giants and the Red Socks. Clune's Main street theater went one better and installed an elaborate, expensive and complicated electrical device which showed the diamond and pictured the plays as they were made.

George Kleine Gives Timely Interview on the Copyrighting of Films.

By James S. McQuade.

A GREAT deal of interest has been aroused in film circles by the advertisements of George Kleine, covering copyrighted films, in the trade papers of last week. Several free-lances, who have, without regard to the rights of others, handled duped films, or originals picked up at second hand in Europe, against the rights of exclusive agents in this country, have been made nervous by the evident determination of legitimate importers to prosecute infringers.

In order to secure a further expression of his views in this matter, I called on Mr. Kleine, who was kind enough, in the midst of other pressing business, to favor me with an interview. His attention was drawn to the unusual interest taken by the trade in his advertisements in the trade papers of last week, which warned smugglers and infringers against bringing into this country any prints of the films he controlled. Reference was also made to an advertisement by Eclair, on the same subject, in the Moving Picture World, in the same issue in which his advertisements appeared, and on being asked to assign a particular reason why such action should be taken at the present time, Mr. Kleine replied at length, as follows:

"There are two reasons which make it particularly timely. First—The passage of the amendments to the copyright law, of August 24, 1912. For the first time in the history of the trade, moving pictures are specifically mentioned in a copyright law; reasonable and particular methods of obtaining copyrights are provided, and the nebulous conditions of olden days are no more. The film being a latter day invention, we had a difficult time of it, as did the customs division of the Treasury Department, trying to fit antiquated schedules, both in the tariff and in the copyright laws, to a new product which was practically unknown to the law-makers when the laws were passed.

"Before the tariff of 1909 became law, the government insisted upon classifying films for duty as manufactures of celluloid, at 25% of the foreign value plus 65c. per pound weight, in spite of the tariff provision that specifically covered photographs at 25% only. The government officials maintained that a photograph was not a photograph when it was a moving picture. Mr. Berst, of Pathe Freres, and myself fought these cases before the Board of Appraisers and through the courts for years, and finally received decisions in our favor, admitting that a moving picture is a photograph. Copyrights covering motion pictures were more involved; they were not specifically mentioned in any amendment to the law, prior to August 24, 1912, and public officials were compelled to use their judgment in classifying them. In the rules and regulations for the registration of copyrights, issued by the copyright office in 1910 (page 8, paragraph 15), the copyright office ruled that moving picture films were photographs under the law. This classification was decided by the courts to be in error, and that a moving picture was a dramatic work, under the copyright law. In continuing uncertainty and doubt, many film manufacturers decided to drop the copyrighting of their films and, instead, embodied their trade mark in one or more scenes of each film, so that any duper in copying the film would be compelled also to copy the trade-mark and become liable to a penitentiary sentence—Uncle Sam being much more precise and insistent in protecting trade-marks than copyrights in the past.

"In the fall of 1907, at which time duping had become flagrant, dupers, utterly regardless of appearances or the rights of others, operated almost openly. A number of manufacturers and importers applied to Judge Kohlsaat, at Chicago, for an injunction against a Chicago duper. The law was so clear in the matter and the fact so well established that it did not require ten minutes for the issuance of a temporary injunction, which was later made permanent. This put an effectual check to the duping of films.

"Second—The free lance in the business—sometimes an innocent party, but usually one of those plastic moralities that square their consciences with any act that would not land them in jail—being estopped from duping, succeeded occasionally in picking up, in the European market, a second hand print of some feature subject. These could not be obtained from manufacturers such as Cines, Eclipse, Pathe, Gaumont, Eclair, Great Northern, etc., for this country, each of the manufacturers having important contracts covering exports to the United States, so they were picked up, here and there, at second hand and shipped to the United States.

"As these were few in number they did not interefere seriously with the business except to annoy exhibitors, here and there, who obtained their films legitimately. With the increasing use of special feature subjects, the temptation to smuggle foreign features into the United States became greater; efforts were made to obtain prints for the United States from European agents or manufacturers, and from film exchanges or exhibitors. While every effort was made to protect the American market, an occasional print was brought into this country, in violation of existing contracts.

"The passage of the amendment to the copyright laws of August 24, 1912, removes all doubt as to the proper method of copyrighting moving picture films, and an effectual check is placed upon illicit importations. The penalties are severe, and those who are disposed to treat them lightly may require a lesson such as the man from Philadelphia received, who is now serving a three-months sentence for attempting to smuggle two films into the United States.

"I have contracts with the Urban-Eclipse and Cines companies granting me the exclusive American rights to their films; and, to double-rivet them, although not essential, I have further specific contracts giving me the right to copyright and assume the ownership of all American copyrights, covering their entire productions, contracts carefully drawn by American attorneys, with a view to active prosecution of any violation.

"I am copyrighting every feature I import, and then preparing to follow up any illegal print (that is brought to my notice) of films that I control. That means either dupes or originals picked up in other countries and shipped to America. If the latter pass the custom houses of our principal ports—and I shall keep them all posted from Portland, Maine, to New Orleans, and from Portland, Oregon, to Key West—I think that the reward which I offer for information of the existence of any print in the United States, except my own issues, will bring me the information wanted.

"To remove any doubts, I will state in our advertisements in the Moving Picture World the subjects for which the reward will be paid. I do not want to be swamped with a lot of notifications of the appearance of our subjects which do not bear the copyright mark, as almost all of our previous releases remain uncopyrighted, nor will the reward apply to any copyrighted films that are not specifically advertised as being included in the list for which a reward is offered.

"For instance, our advertisement of "The Lion Tamer's Revenge," which appeared in the Moving Picture World dated October 12th, states that I will pay for certain information giving the location of any prints of this film, in the United States, which do not bear my name and copyright notice.

"Similar advertisements will be printed to cover future subjects in the same manner. Whenever the reward notice is not printed in connection with a definite film, the reward is not offered.

"Do you grasp the effect? Any sweeper, janitor, office-boy, booking-clerk, correspondent, manager, exhibitor, operator or man in the audience, who notifies me of any illegal print, receives $50 regardless of any further action. All I want from him is a report by wire or letter that such a print can be found in some certain place and to locate the print. Then he gets the fifty.

"Next, and in addition, if this information enables me to seize the print, to get the injunction provided by law, to put the infringer in jail, and to sue for damages, the informant gets $500 and one-half of all money damages I may collect under court decisions. I figure this will make it worth while for thousands to watch for infringements. The reward goes once for each print; that is, if more than one print should make its appearance, the first man, woman or child that sends me the information about each print will get the reward as outlined. The offer holds good in every case, for six months after release date.

"You have had a private view of 'The Lion Tamer's Revenge,' and need no comments from me. Other strong features are coming, and particularly one which has been in the making nearly one year past and is now finished. It is six reels in length, but will probably be reduced to four reels to suit the American market, although the necessity of cutting away even one foot is regrettable. You know it is not my habit to exaggerate, but no superlative used to chracterize this coming feature can be excessive or beyond its deserts."

"What is the subject?" I asked.

"Pardon me, but I do not want to make it public at this date, as we will probably not release it before the holidays," was the reply.

"My manufacturers are co-operating with enthusiasm in the matter of copyright protection," continued Mr. Kleine. "I have been laying the foundation conservatively, for some time, consulting counsel and the copyright office, and familiarizing myself with the law. I am now prepared to take action, and to prove to the unholy band of infringers that law is law and that, though sometimes slow, it is based on equity and fair dealing.

If any man doubt its efficacy, let him give me an opportunity to make a test case and establish a needed precedent for the chastening of dupers and infringers generally and for the benefit of the decent element in the business."

A STRONG WEEK FOR KLEINE.

A program of three excellent releases is offered by George Kleine for the week ending October 26th. "The Invited Guest" is the title of the Tuesday subject; the film describes in vivid fashion the warm reception tendered to a gentleman who is invited to take dinner at the residence of a friend. He accepts most eagerly, but is totally unprepared to meet the vociferous manner in which he is received by the children of his host; the youngsters take it upon themselves to see that not one dull moment shall mar his pleasure, and they certainly make life miserable for the poor fellow in every possible way. He stands it as long as he can and then departs vowing to "regret" all family invitations to dinner in the future. Mr. George Gambardelli, the well-known Cines comedian, does excellent work as the "guest." The film will cause a great deal of amusement.

To complete the reel an artistic travelogue subject "Ascoli Piceno" displays before our eyes many beautiful views of this interesting town in southern Italy.

The Eclipse offering is a three subject reel, made up of a good lively comedy, an industrial and a charming travelogue subject. "A Persistent Fly-Swatter" describes the antics of an extremely energetic enemy of "Mr. Fly." He finally accomplishes his purpose but at what a cost! It will provoke many laughs. "Making Briar Pipes," industrial, is very interesting and instructive; the film depicts the entire process of manufacture, from the cutting of the rough briar to the final fashioning and polishing of the finished product. "In the Ossau Valley," is a first class scenic picture which includes the additional attraction of containing several exciting scenes in an arena where fierce bulls are being trained for fighting.

For the Saturday subject, "A Turn of Fortune," is the title of a first class drama which describes the perseverance and pluck of a young man, in the face of overwhelming difficulties. Mr. Alfred Bracci, as the unfortunate but worthy young fellow, looks the part, acts it well and with the help of several others makes the release a very praiseworthy effort.

Dr. L. M. Slocum, Picture Pioneer.

DR. SLOCUM, a live wire in moving picturedom and also one of the old timers in the theatrical business in the Northwest, has been very ill in a New York hospital, but is now well on his way to recovery. For the present he is located at 240 West 52nd Street, New York, and accorded a representative of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD an interview. He is a man of middle life and has the cordial, warm-hearted manner usually found in those who have grown up and expanded with the great West.

Dr. Slocum was coming to New York on a visit when he was injured internally by being thrown against the seat of a Pullman car. This happened on August 2. He paid little attention to it for a day or so, but it grew worse. He became so sick that he was barely alive when he reached the city and was taken to a hospital where he was, at once, put upon an operating table. He attributes the fact that he is now nearly recovered solely to the skillful attention and careful nursing he received. Our representative found him still very weak, but in cheerful frame of mind and full of plans for extended work in the near future.

Born here in New York City, he has not yet had a chance to see the completed Brooklyn Bridge. It was still building when, as a lad, he went to Utah in 1872 to live with his uncle. High Bridge he has seen and a day or so ago, he was able to walk out far enough to see an elevated train pass. Up till now, his illness has kept him from seeing any more of the city, except the faces of his friends of whom he has many.

For almost two hours Dr. Slocum talked, recalling old days here in the city and early times in the West while it was still woolly. He is a most delightful mimic. Now and again, some one else spoke through his voice with characteristic inflexion. This voice, so different from Dr. Slocum's own and so true in the different forms it takes, brings a very vivid impression of personality and pictures the one he mimics far more clearly than any description.

The first moving picture that he ever saw was in Spokane, Wash., in 1895. He was then managing the Spokane Fruit Fair under Herbert Bolster and, as a show, they got a musical program, with one moving picture. It was a comedy called "The Lone Fisherman" and was very funny, but it was very weak on steadiness. The flicker was very annoying. Because of this, it wasn't very popular. "Flicker," said he, "was our one great obstacle in those early days. People got so they'd stay away from any show at all, just because there was a moving picture in it." He would hear them exclaim, "Say there's a moving picture in this. Let's not go in. They make my head ache."

A year ago last April, W. H. Harbeck, who was drowned in the Titanic disaster, asked him to manage his motion picture enterprises for him. For these, he traveled extensively in Alaska and the wilder parts of the Northwest, taking those wonderful scenic pictures, such as that of Child's Glacier, showing great masses of ice crashing down a cliff 300 feet deep into the water and splashing up waves twenty feet high. He also lectured with these films, calling one of his talks, "Alaska, the Land of a Million Marvels."

Speaking of the present status of the motion picture business in the West, Dr. Slocum predicted a big future for it and said that many men were making money at it. He admitted that some were failing, but attributed it to lack of knowing how to present pictures. "It doesn't pay," he added, "to show pictures in the West in the way that makes profits in the East. The West still wants vaudeville."

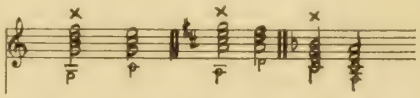
His opinion of the usual shows found on the screen to-day was not wholly favorable. He doesn't think that the ordinary dramatic stories and farce comedies of the present will hold well much longer. "Too often," said he, "they are trivial and trashy." He sees that the people are looking more and more for information and that the topicals and industrials are drawing more strongly. When asked to forecast the popular kind of picture for the immediate future, he said that the simple story used to humanize some kind of industrial work, such as one of another kind of farming or industry would be acceptable, as would pictures of great plays by famous actors and good topicals and scenics. The simple stories would be truthful and informing; they would exist to show how the farmer or the manufacturer and his family really live. No tense dramatic climax would be tried for in such pictures, nor, at first, any high-flying art; they would be truthful, convincing stories to show us what our neighbor's life was like.

Music for the Picture

BY CLARENCE E SINN

TIPS ON IMPROVISING.

THE dominant 7th chord of any key is so called because it is said to dominate that key; it points out or indicates the tonic chord, to which it must resolve. That is, when a dominant 7th chord is heard, the ear expects the tonic chord to follow. The following illustration will make this more clear.



The dominant chord of the three keys shown above is indicated by a cross. The first is in the key of C. The dominant 7th of this key is made up of the notes "G, B, D and F." (The bass is indicated by a small note below.) This chord resolves to C—the tonic chord of the key of C. The next measure shows the key of D (two sharps) and the dominant 7th is composed of the notes "A, C sharp, E and G." This resolves to the chord of D (tonic chord of the key of D). The third measure shows the key of F (one flat), whose dominant 7th is composed of the notes "C, E, G and B flat." This chord resolves into the chord of F—the tonic chord of the key of F. And so forth; a table of the 12 principal keys with their tonic and dominant 7th chords is here given:

Key of C; tonic chord is C. Dominant 7th is built on G.
Key of G; tonic chord is G. Dominant 7th is built on D.
Key of D; tonic chord is D. Dominant 7th is built on A.
Key of A; tonic chord is A. Dominant 7th is built on E.
Key of E; tonic chord is E. Dominant 7th is built on B.
Key of B; tonic chord is B. Dominant 7th is built on F sharp.
Key of F sharp; tonic chord is F sharp. Dominant 7th is built on C sharp.
Key of F.; tonic chord is F. Dominant 7th is built on C.
Key of B flat; tonic chord is B flat. Dominant 7th is built on F.
Key of E flat; tonic chord is E flat. Dominant 7th is built on B flat.
Key of A flat; tonic chord is A flat. Dominant 7th is built on E flat.
Key of D flat; tonic chord is D flat. Dominant 7th is built on A flat.

You will notice that in each case the dominant is built (or founded) on a note five notes higher (a 5th) than the tonic. A glance at the illustration above will explain the expression "built on." The first chord is "built on" G; that is, G is the foundation of the chord—the other notes being respectively a 3rd, a 5th and a 7th above G. All simple chords are built up in this way. Those not perfectly familiar with the tonic and dominant 7th chords in all the keys would do well to make a table of them on a sheet of music paper, first writing the signature, then the tonic chord (built on the keynote, of course), then counting up five notes, beginning on the tonic or keynote and ending on the 5th note, which is your dominant. Write a note on the 3rd above this, another a 5th above and the last a 7th above. After you are familiar with the notes contained in a chord, you may change their positions in any way and still recognize them as forming the same chord. The different positions of the same chord are called "inversions" (see Moving Picture World of Sept. 28th).

In modulating to a foreign key it is always safe to aim for the dominant 7th chord rather than to the tonic of the key in which you wish to modulate. I do not mean that this is obligatory, but that it is an easy and pleasing path of modulation. A common chord has three notes—the fundamental, its third and fifth. Whatever part of the composition you may be playing in, you are striking a chord of this character or within easy reaching distance of it. Any one of these notes will form any one of the four notes going to make up some dominant 7th chord. For example you may be playing on the chord of E. flat. This is formed of the notes "E flat, G and B flat." Its note, "G," is found in each of the three dominant 7th chords given in the illustration above. Wishing to modulate from E flat to either C, D, or F, by way of the dominant 7th chord, an ordinary way would be to strike the note G (which forms your pivot) several times to isolate it from the preceding chord—thus bringing it into prominence, then give the same note a prominent place in the dominant 7th chord chosen; usually let it be the top note as in the second measure—key of D.

The following illustration will exemplify this, showing a modulation from a 6/8 lively movement in the key of C to a 4/4 movement in the key of A flat.

G is here used as the pivot note, it being found in both the tonic chord of C and the dominant 7th chord of A flat, this last being made of the notes E flat, G, B flat and

D flat. The chord as here shown is an inversion—that is. it is in a different position than the original E flat, G, B flat and D flat, though its identity is the same.

Suggestions for Selig's "Monte Cristo."

First Reel.

1. Short moderato for one scene (Love scene).
2. Rather lively, one scene (ship about to leave port).. Slow up a little for "good-bye," then:
3. Long pathetic (death scene). Theo. Bendix's "Longing" (pub. by Witmark) will answer; continue till title: "Dantes Incurs the Hatred," etc.
4. Neutral (moderato); Theo. Bendix's "Meeting" (same pub.) will do. Continue till title: "Dantes Delivers the Letter."
5. A light intermezzo may run through this (Napoleon scene), or you may touch lightly on the Marseillaise, following with "Partant pour la Syrie," both of which are in Carl Fischer's collection of National Airs. Till title: "Dantes' Return Home."
6. Lively music for 2 scenes, moderate 1 scene, then lively till: "Dantes' Father."
7. "Passion" (pub. by Hess & Hager), till: "Dantes Incurs Fernand's Hatred."

9. Lively Waltz.—one scene forte, then subdue one scene, back to forte 1 scene, then subdue again 1 scene. (The scene alternates from the feast to an exterior with soldiers).
10. Semi-mysterious similar to No. 8; till: "To The Dungeons of Chateau d'If."
11. Agitato. Begin softly and work up with action.

Second Reel.

1. Mysterious "gloomy" (watch for knock at door); continue till: "Dr. Villefort The Royal Inspector."
2. Short semi-military (one scene), then:
3. Theo. Bendix's "Parting" (for long story), till guard enters cell.
4. Mysterious till: "Dying, the Old Man Bequeaths the Treasure."
5. Plaintive; similar to No. 3 in first reel, till guard seen.
6. Long mysterious; crescendo when body is cast in water (or change to agitato). At cue: "The World is Mine."

Third Reel.

1. Oriental music (long) till: "Noirtier's Persistent Inquiries."
2. Semi-mysterious (similar to introduction of Suppe's "Pique Dame" overture). N. B.: Watch for knock at door; continue music till title: "To Further His Own Ends."
3. Agitato. Begin soft and work up with action. Till title: "The Reception."
4. Gavotte till: "Edmond Reveals His Identity."

6. Agitato till: "Having Learned The Truth From His Mother."
7. Moderato (neutral) for two scenes.
8. Agitato. Begin softly work with action; forte for dual and double f at finish of picture.

Daniel Frohman and the Photoplay

Well-Known Theatrical Magnate and Practical Idealist Credits Histrionic Evolution to the Progress of Mechanical Invention.

By Hugh Hoffman.

GOING to see Daniel Frohman is like going to see one's doctor. There is an outer room with seats around, and a colored boy in uniform who takes your card in. Then you wait, and while you wait voices can be heard from within, but what they are saying is not understandable, which is very annoying. Finally the voices come near the door. After more suspense it is opened by a tall studious looking gentleman, with Van Dyke beard and nose glasses, who looks for all the world like the family physician. There are parting words between him and the departing visitor, and as the latter steps toward the elevator you can almost swear you hear a box of pills rattle in his pocket. Then the tall bearded gentleman looks over over his spectacles in a benign way at the waiting callers. On his countenance is written a question that seems to ask:

"Now who's the next patient?"

In the days of old Daniel went to the lion's den, but in these days of matinee idols the lions come to Daniel's den. It is a comfortable den occupying the top floor front of the New York Lyceum Theater, and as large as a regulation city flat, but with larger rooms. It is the den of an artist. On the walls are many paintings and large autographed photographs. There are tapestries, queer carpets, and old fashioned tables and chairs with fat spiral legs.

"Do you know," he began, "I never knew there was such a publication as the MOVING PICTURE WORLD until about two months ago. Now I read it every week from cover to cover."

"Does that mean that you are a convert to the motion picture?"

"I am," he replied. "You may put me down as a 'fan,' or a 'bug,' or anything you like that expresses faith in motion pictures."

"How long have you been a 'fan,' Mr. Frohman?"

"I should say it was last spring that I became thoroughly imbued with the subject. I have been studying motion pictures for about a year trying to figure out how a regular theatrical manager could make it worth his while to include them in his line of work. To me the business seemed more trivial than it really is. The subjects were mostly commonplace and the way they were exhibited was far from being ideal. Then, having been associated all my life with the spoken play, I could not see how the silent drama could succeed on a big scale, being shorn of the lines that have made most of the famous plays what they are.

"I went back into the history of the theater and noted carefully all the great changes that had taken place in theatricals, and the causes thereof. The causes may all be summed up in one word—light. The drama, in its earliest days, was acted, usually out of doors, in daylight. That was because the people of those times spent their evenings by the light of fagots. The bard or minstrel was the only entertainer after dark. When candles came into vogue there were indoor theatricals, but no scenery because the light was so dim that scenery could scarcely be seen. Shakespeare made a demand for scenery, by writing the burlesque performance of Thisbe, in 'Mid-summer Night's Dream,' as a satire to show the absurdity of plays without any settings.

"The poor lighting of theaters had its effect upon playwriting as well. It was responsible for the long soliloquy, that even Shakespeare was obliged to write into his plays to make them properly understandable. Facial expression in the early theater was not feasible and it never was thoroughly practical until the invention of the incandescent electric light. The old stages were built with a sweeping circular 'apron' that extended far out into the auditorium. The actors worked out upon this extended platform so that the audience could see and hear them better.

DANIEL FROHMAN.
(Sketch from life by Hugh Hoffman)

"When kerosene or lamps [illegible] the apron of the stage was built shorter. When gas was [illegible] the apron receded much further and the long speeches began to disappear. Another style of plays came into demand and playwriting changed accordingly. Plays with strong dramatic action supplanted those having long speeches. The incandescent electric light made it possible to flood the theater with so much light that the actor could convey his inner thoughts by facial expression instead of making them known by a long soliloquy. The 'apron' disappeared entirely, and most stages now are flat in front, as you know.

"The electric arc light makes the moving picture a practical institution. The tremendous success of animated photography is an indication to me that the drama is about to undergo another of those radical changes, all of which were brought about by some great mechanical invention embodying light as an underlying principle. My doubts as to the photodrama not being feasible on a big scale, owing to the absence of the spoken word, have been set at rest. Playwriting will change. Great playwrights will develop, who will not depend upon the spoken word, but will create masterpieces in pantomime. As a matter of fact, the spoken word will be a handicap. The coming dramatist will have the entire world as an audience and his language must be a universal one; the language of motion.

"It was not my intention at first to do more than furnish famous players for the camera and to lend my name to certain feature film projects, but now I am into it body and soul. Where the drama goes, there I go, but I want to be a leader, not a follower. I believe the public has been fed upon baby-food long enough, and that it is ready for something big and substantial in motion pictures. That is why myself and several other gentlemen are now building a fine large studio and factory for the making of moving pictures in which many of America's famous players will appear."

"What is the attitude. Mr. Frohman, of the most successful stars in regard to the motion picture?"

"They are thinking about it. Most of them are trying to figure out how they can become photo-players with the most possible grace and with the least possible loss of dignity. But they will soon come to it. The idea of having their work handed down to posterity and exhibited fifteen hundred years from now is a little too tempting to hold out against very long."

"There is much curiosity in many quarters to know the attitude of your brother, Charles Frohman, in regard to motion pictures. What does he think of them?"

"He is thinking about them. We talk about them often, but, of course, I am not at liberty to divulge any of his plans. You may say, however, that Charles is sitting up and taking very decided notice. They are all thinking; all of the biggest men in the theatrical business. They are not only thinking of moving pictures, but they are talking and getting ready to act.

"Every successful theatrical manager to-day owes whatever he has achieved to mechanical invention. These men cannot afford to ignore this wonderful new invention—the motion picture. We are living in what will in centuries hence be known as 'The Inventive Age.' Most of us do not realize that we are living in such a period.

"It's funny, too, when you think of it," he remarked in closing, "that all these wonderful things have happened because people get hungry and have to eat."

The Picture in the Pulpit

By the Rev. Boudinot Stockton, S. T. B.

A FEW weeks ago in an article on the Picture and the Church we called attention to the fact that during the past year another educational use of the moving pictures had come into existence and that clergmen and other religious workers had begun to experiment with the films in connection with religious and devotional services as distinct from their employment as means of sacred and semi-sacred amusement and recreation suitable for Sunday. Now, there comes along a letter from the Rev. Edgar Fay Daugherty, A. M., B. D., minister of the First Christian Church of Vincennes, Indiana, who has been working along these lines for the past summer, that is well worth the consideration of those who are interested in this kind of work.

First of all Mr. Daugherty says:

> Thus far my use of the moving pictures has been more purely religious than educational. Last June I installed a Power's No. 6 and since then have used it in the Sunday evening services, my aim being to compete in a friendly way with the Sunday evening entertainments which were drawing the crowds in my town. As a result I have secured quadrupled attendance at my evening services, and while I propose hereafter to make such educational use of my equipment on week nights as occasion may advise or command in time to come, my firm belief at present is that I have only just begun to realize on the large religious and devotional uses of the moving picture and that my best efforts should be directed towards developing these to my own satisfaction and that of my people. In this respect, the thing that I would lay the greatest stress upon is the elimination from moving picture services of everything that either interferes with or even fails to intensify that sense of worship and devotion that is essential to a church service. The house of God is especially on Sundays a place of worship and I seek to emphasize that idea. So far I have had no difficulty in doing this.

As an illustration of the method pursued by Mr. Daugherty the program of his service for the evening of Sunday, September 22, may be cited. After an organ voluntary, the choir rendered the sacred song, "The Way of the Cross" which was at the same time illustrated by lantern slide pictures thrown on the screen. Then, after a responsive reading and a prayer, the choir and congregation sang the hymn "Work for the Night is Coming" illustrated by twelve slides. This was followed by the exhibition of Vitagraph's "An Innocent Theft" the collection of the offerings of the congregation and a short address on the moral taught by the moving picture. Then came another song, "Throw out the Life Line" illustrated by five slides, and the service concluded with the benediction and an organ postlude. Other photoplays used with marked success by Mr. Daugherty have been the "Passion Play," "The Greatest Thing in the World" (Vitagraph), the "Church Across the Way" by the same company and Selig's "The Vagabonds" while in the near future he intends to use a series such as "The Infancy of Moses" (C. G. P. C.), "A Prince of Israel" (C. G. P. C.), etc, accompanying these with stereopticon views of a historical and geographical character as illustration and explanation, reserving these exhibitions for the Sunday after he has preached upon the Biblical character portrayed.

Mr. Daugherty is to be congratulated on having solved his problem in such a simple and satisfactory way. The above service schedule is one that can easily be used by nearly if not every Protestant congregation with little or no change and for this reason we have given it in full. Another thing, the principles upon which the schedule has been formed are universal in character and are also easily adaptable to such set forms of service as the vespers of the Roman Catholic Church or the evensong of the Church of England and the Protestant Episcopal Church in this country. For mission services and in places or on occasions where it is impracticable or inconvenient to provide in sufficient quantities, hymnbooks, prayer books, Bibles, etc., a variation of the use of the stereopticon slides may also be advantageously employed; in fact, such use was successfully made of the stereopticon by two churches this last summer. Instead of pictures the lantern threw on the screen the words of the hymn or psalm or portion of Scripture wished and the minister and congregation sang or read from the screen. On two occasions the music as well as the words of unknown hymns were projected and the children were taught to sing. The evolution of the scheme was due to the fact that the two churches in question wished to hold open air evening services during the hot weather and were obliged to do without lights.

In another part of his letter Mr. Daugherty says:

> The greatest desideratum at present is for films that emphasize along broad lines the great moral and religious truths, strong dramatic photoplays that illustrate the fundamentals of life and character or are of historic interest religiously. At present the number of these films is so limited as to be embarrassing, and the few notably acceptable ones have such a Roman Catholic bias in garb and action as to make them undesirable for presentation to a Protestant congregation.

We must say that we cannot altogether agree with the Reverend gentleman in the above remarks. Strong dramatic photoplays that illustrate the great moral and religious truths of life and character along broad and universal rather than along denominational and sectarian lines are by no means uncommon, altho Mr. Daugherty is quite right in saying that there are by no means enough. We can recall at least a dozen in September and ten in August last. Moreover we do not remember any film that has a "Roman Catholic bias in garb and action." Mr. Daugherty probably refers to the use of the cassock and biretta (the boxlike cap worn by priests), and to the employment of the sign of the cross as an act of devotion. Neither of these things are confined to the Roman church. They are both used by the Church of England and the Protestant Episcopal church and we know of at least one Presbyterian church that employs them and have been told that several Methodist churches did so too. But even granting that they are essentially typical of the Roman church, in every photoplay in which they have been used to our knowledge the Roman Catholic setting for the religious element of the drama has been called for by the story itself. The scene of Edison's "Necklace of Crushed Rose Leaves" for instance is laid in Italy. Outside of Italy the story would have been improbable; in Italy a Protestant "garb and action" would have been ridiculous. A Protestant Episcopal setting for Edison's "Little Bride of Heaven" would have been technically as correct as the Roman setting used, but the atmosphere of the miraculous in the minds of the little girl and her mother was much more easily and effectively conveyed to the audience by the play as actually put forth. In neither of these plays was there any distinctly Roman Catholic doctrine taught. Both of them emphasized broad moral truths of universal application: the first being a powerful sermon on the second commandent and the latter an excellent illustration of the reward of trust in God and filial devotion and the observance of the fifth commandment.

We cannot think that Mr. Daugherty's congregation or any other congregation for that matter, be it Catholic or Protestant, is going to be so easily swayed from its denominational allegiance as his words would imply any more than they are influenced by the descriptions of such things that they come across in the novels and short stories they read. As a matter of fact the manufacturers are to be congratulated on the way in which they have steered clear of the rocks of denominationalism and sectarianism in their handling of religious subjects and things, and on the high degree of artistic and literary intelligence they have shown in adapting to the photoplay the literary canon that the religious costuming and action of a story should conform to the places, characters and incidents in the story itself. So far as criticism on this point is concerned, there seems at present only one thing that needs calling attention to, and that is that a little more care should be given to making the settings of the scenes conform consistently to the character of the minister or clergman portrayed. It is rather annoying and provocative of ribald comment when in an otherwise excellent photoplay we find an ultra Protestant meeting house whose minister is fully vested as a Roman priest, or a Protestant Episcopal chancel in which the clergyman dressed in a frock coat and a black tie, is conducting service before an altar. We have seen both and not so long ago at that.

In conclusion we would suggest to those who wish to use the films for the avowed purpose of propagandizing distinctly denominational tenets that they adopt the policy and practise of the business and scientific men who wish to use moving pictures for advertising and other special teaching and have made at their own expense negatives that are their own property and that they can have produced and can use as they see fit. Photoplays for general release should not cater to any of these objects and we would gently intimate to all those who object to a bias of any kind in the ordinary photoplays that as the persons they wish to influence against such things see the obnoxious garb and actions every day in the regular theatres and places of amusement, the deleterious effects can be most easily and effectively counteracted by showing the same films in their own services, pointing out the defects and teaching their people to look for the underlying truths of which those "wrong actions" are the bad expression. The way the characters in the play dress and act may be all wrong, but some of them tried to please God and some didn't and all got what they deserved, so there's a lesson after all for everybody, if we only look far enough for it.

"Chiquita, the Dancer" (American)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE new Western company of the American Film Manufacturing Co. has turned out "Chiquita, the Dancer," which will be released October 30th. This drama of mining life in the Southwest has the atmosphere of photoplays of this type, but is somewhat different from the usual run in several respects. The customary bad men take their parts in the story and meet their customary deserts; but there is a girl in the plot, a very unusual girl, and "demnition pretty." In the story she is Chiquita, in stage life she is Miss Geraldine Gill, and it being my first introduction to her on the screen or elsewhere, I doff my sombrero with profound sweep in deference to her vivacious acting and girlish beauty.

Eugene Bonner, the leading man of the new company, makes a very fine impression in the character of Jim Olcott, the sturdy young miner who is pressed hard by the bad men of the camp, but who comes out victorious through the loyal assistance of the charming Chiquita, whom he has learned to love. William Morse proves himself a capable "heavy," in the role of the bad man Foster; Walter Irving gives a capital character sketch of the old Justice of the Peace, and C. De Vere simulates the half-witted brother of Chiquita creditably.

The photography of the film has the stamp of merit throughout. The scenes of the story of "Chiquita, the Dancer," are laid near one of the border towns near American and Old Mexican territory, where Americans and Mexicans fraternize. Jim Olcott, a fine type of the American miner, discovers rich ore a short distance from San Pablo, Old Mexico. He stakes his claim, which lies in American territory, and hurriedly departs for Washington to raise money to work it.

Jim Olcott is well known in the neighborhood and has been an occasional visitor at the saloon, where Chiquita, a pretty Mexican girl dances to amuse the patrons. Jim had never given her more than a passing look on his calls, but that look had always in it courtesy and kindness. Chiquita had learned to admire the stalwart American, and during his trip to Washington missed him and wondered at his absence.

One evening, while seated behind a large palm in the drinking place, she overheard a conversation between two tough characters, Jake Foster and Ike Watson. These men talked of jumping Jim Olcott's claim, which they actually did, the following day. On Jim's return, soon afterwards, Chiquita told him of the plot. The miner immediately got his guns in order and started for his claim, where he surprised the jumpers and drove them from the locality.

But Foster and Watson were old hands at claim-jumping and resolved to dispossess Jim under the guise of the law. They call on an unscrupulous Justice of the Peace and secure a warrant for Jim's arrest. An officer is at once dispatched to serve the warrant, but is ignored by Jim, who marches him off the grounds at the point of a pistol.

A force of officers, accompanied by Foster and Watson, then go out to bring Jim in. He luckily spies them coming and, seeing that resistance would mean death, and wishing to avoid arrest, he flees to the home of Chiquita. She hides him in the barn before the officers arrive, and when they come up throws them off the scent.

Seeing that his case is desperate, Jim gets Chiquita to post a letter to his attorney in Washington, asking him to secure the services of a deputy U. S. marshal and come immediately to his rescue. Arriving at San Pablo, they go at once to the office of the crooked Justice of the Peace and arrest him and his process server. They then march them toward Chiquita's home, where things are rapidly growing serious for its mistress.

Foster, for some time, had cast his eyes on the pretty dancer and had resolved to marry her willy-nilly. Chiquita loathes him, which turns his admiration and desire into bitter hatred.

On the day in question, Foster and Chiquita's half-witted brother arrive at her home. She had barely escaped being detected on a visit to the barn, where Jim lay hidden. Foster seizes her with great brutality and kisses her. She escapes from his grasp and attempts to flee from the spot, but is caught by her idiotic brother and returned to the arms of Foster. At this juncture, the attorney and deputy U. S. marshal, with their prisoners arrive, and Foster is arrested and handcuffed.

Released from the foul grasp of Foster, Chiquita gives a scream and rushes to the barn, from which smoke is issuing. Jim, after lighting a cigarette, had unconsciously thrown the lighted match on the floor, where hay lay scattered. The fire spread rapidly and he made frantic efforts to break down the door, but failed. Just as Chiquita opens it he falls unconscious on the threshold.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Chaney's Tags.

H. L. CHANEY has been playing tag with the county fair attendants. He tagged the lot and now they are tagging him back and he is pleased. This is what he writes:

> I am enclosing herewith late programs and also a card showing a stunt that I pulled off during the County Fair Week. I took a friend of mine (an advertiser on my program) in on the deal. We attached several thousand of these to the vehicles and automobiles that were on the grounds and in the city that week. They were carried all over the county and of course it was pretty generally known at the end of the week that there was an "Orpheum Theater" in Hillsboro. I figured this to help build up a Saturday Matinee trade for out of town folks and made the cards good for an admission within a limited time if accompanied by paid ticket. There was at least seven out of every ten that went to the home of the owner of the vehicle and of course they would be read by some member of the household. This stunt will work all right for fellows living in small places where the County people congregate at least once or twice in a year. It brought me many new matinee customers. If you think anything of the stunt you may pass it on. Don't publish this leter as I am before the advertisers too often as it is.

We are disobeying Mr. Chaney's request not to publish his letter, because he writes of what he knows and when he comes "before the advertisers" bringing ideas we think he is entitled to full credit. He is one of the earliest contributors to this department and one of the most valued and he can get his name in the paper every week if he can think of an idea.

A Useful Card.

Being north of the Ohio, Mr. Chaney is used to the country fair, but further south we know of towns where there is a weekly fair with prize contests and all sorts of trimmings and here the card will be of weekly service. The reverse offers a rebate of fifty cents on any dyeing or cleaning job amounting to a dollar and a half or more. The Chaney side reads:

ORPHEUM—SPECIAL FREE OFFER—ORPHEUM

> Best equipped theater in county. Latest and most improved projection machinery. Pictures steady as a rock and clear as a bell. Free from eye strain and flicker. Latest and best personally selected films. Music in harmony with pictures. Clean, cool and comfortable. Matinee every Saturday and legal holidays. This card good for admission to any matinee if accompanied by paid ticket BEFORE NOVEMBER 1, 1912. Good only for patrons out of town.
> THE ORPHEUM, Stabler-Muntz Block, Hillsboro, Ohio.

It is printed on the usual baggage tag with a string through the eye hole and may be tied to any part of the vehicle.

Color Programs.

The late programs are some printed on lithographed fronts supplied by a jobbing house. These fronts are printed in million lots and sold to printers everywhere and enable the alert manager to have a colored cover for almost what the plain print costs. The results to house and advertisers are so vastly better that sometimes we wonder why the scheme is not more generally employed. The sheet is the same size as the old and carries the same clean-cut film announcements, but the effect is vastly better and the covers are pretty enough to be carried home (with all their advertising) for their own sakes.

We hope soon to be able to announce that Mr. Chaney has put his price up to ten cents. We feel certain that a man who can advertise as he does is giving a ten cent show at the very least.

From the Haynic.

The Haynic theater, Fairmount, Minn., echo our own thoughts when they write:

> As a matter of permanent advertising, we believe that a good trade name is of value. When we started we adopted the cut which appears above, and which is featured on every herald, hand bill, piece of stationery or newspaper ad. that we put out. We have electros of it in four sizes, ranging from double colum to one-half column.
> We use Hennegan heralds with our features once each week, mailing them to our patrons with a circular letter, sample of which we enclose.

Here is the letter that goes with the herald:

> Dear Friend:
>
> For next Wednesday and Thursday evenings it is our good fortune to be able to offer you a rare treat in moving pictures—one of the really big achievements of the picture art—Vitagraph's splendid three reel feature, THE LADY OF THE LAKE, dramatized from Sir Walter Scott's immortal poem of that name. Magnificently staged, elaborately costumed and portrayed by the best actors now upon the stage, this great picture offers an hour of entertainment which we feel sure you will not want to miss.
> This is one of a series of big pictures—the kind that are worth coming miles to see—which we are offering weekly for your entertainment. They are the very best that can be obtained in moving pictures, and we hope that you will be able to see them all.
> It is our aim all the time to offer the very best pictures the market affords, and you can rest assured that whenever you visit us you will see a dandy good show. On Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays the Haynic Five Piece Orchestra will be a regular feature on our program.
>
> Hoping that you will be able to avail yourself of the opportunity we are here presenting, and assuring you that your patronage will be apreciated, we remain,
> Sincerely,
> HAY & NICHOLAS.

As a literary effort we have seen better material, but this is straightforward, honest and gives the patron the hint that there is something worth while to be seen at the theater. We think that between polished phrase and this argument we would rather have a letter like this that says something and means what it says.

About the Trademark.

We confess to a weakness for the trade mark cut. It pays and it pays a big premium. Get something that is really distinctive and then hold to that even though you may later find something that seems to you to be even better. Put it on everything you have, over the door, on your slides, your letter heads, your lithographs, your employees and your patrons.

Several years ago we took hold of a theatrical office where the doors were ornamented by a cypher that suggested a ferry gate or part of a pair of lazy tongs. It was simply W. M. crossed; the initials of the chief's name, affixed by the signpainter. No one seemed to think much of the design, but when we took it up three years later a letter addressed to that monogram with merely the addition New York City was promptly delivered and it appeared on every piece of paper that went out from the office through the mails or on the boards.

If nation wide advertisers can spend hundreds of thousands to establish a trade mark, can't you spare a couple of dollars for cuts? Think what the circled A. B. or the Lubin Bell means outside your house. Do it for yourself. Have one really good drawing made. Get one original cut in each size and then use this to have duplicates made from.

We Suggest.

The Globe theater, San Francisco, asks for suggestions on a four page three-change program they send. The Globe is a part of the Turner and Dahnken circuit and we think that if this extensive chain of theaters would have a central publicity bureau it would be able to get better results for the same outlay, not that the Globe program is not a pretty good piece of advertising, but because we have in mind other chain advertising that is so very much better for the same probable outlay. With a central office to prepare copy, an attractive booklet might be had with just enough foreign advertising to balance the cost. They have twelve theaters in eight cities. With an eight or twelve page folder or even a sixteen, with twelve changes of copy and advertising for the towns, the changes coming on one-half of the form, much could be done almost as cheaply as one house can prepare copy for a smaller folder.

For the paper at hand we cannot suggest much improvement. An effort is made at uniform display which keeps the sheets clean and if the cuts (one to a page) were captioned—and the dates made more prominent we could offer small criticism. The casts are used where they are available. The use of an even type for all titles may seem to be a finicality, but it makes for evenness of display and the occasional use of a heavier face throws the special feature into prominence. We think the suggestion lies in the larger possibility rather than in the greater possibilities of this small sheet, which very evidently is the result of a combination of a good pressman and a good printer.

Not Well Balanced.

The People's theater, Sunbury, Pa., sends a special sheet for the Vitagraph release The Money Kings. We note that Mr. Blanchard has a new device for the head type spelling "Peoples Theater" in two lines, the middle letters rising to form a complete circle. This is effective, but it is very badly balanced by an oval cut of Leo Delaney on one side and a square trade mark cut on the other. The rest of the sheet is well displayed and makes this contrast all the greater. We do not suppose that people will stay away from the theater because the side cuts do not match, but we think that another oval in place of the trade mark would have made a more attractive sheet. We think, too, that the text might have been improved upon, even if smaller type had been used. The Money Kings was a big spectacle, but all the printing says is:

> A story of Wall Street and a daring Aviator. He carries a message far out over the sea to a young diplomat on his way to The Hague. This is a very sensational picture, but comes to us very highly recommended.

The idea of advertising is to present facts in so attractive a fashion that you feel that you simply cannot possibly lose the sight of the feature and if this was all we knew of the Vitagraph feature we do not think it would coax our money from us, though the full description of the picture would get us into the house. A hydroplane actually delivered a message aboard an ocean steamer and it would be curious to see something that was so really unique in the history of aviation. If Mr. Blanchard had read this paper as carefully as he should have done, he would have had more facts to work upon.

Keep Posted.

If we were running a house instead of this department we would regard The Moving Picture World and the advertising of the various manufacturers as of next importance to the lease of the house. We would have a catalogue card for every release of the service we were using and on that we would enter the page number of every item of the slightest importance; a reference to the company matter and anything else we could get hold of. If we had a large house we would have envelopes for each release that in any way might be regarded as out of the ordinary and into this would go every clip we could get hold of, even though it entailed a couple of extra subscriptions to the World. Then we would have each matter right to hand when we were ready to get copy up in a hurry and we would not have to trust to memory. In proper and systematic advertising is to be found the reason for the success of every house of any size in the country; to the lack of it may be attributed a full 95% of the failures.

Be Good All Round..

But mind you we do not regard the newspaper and special printed matter alone as advertising. Everything you do is advertising from adding $10 to your exchange price to dressing your ushers in uniforms. The front of your house may be all you need in the way of outside advertisement. We stopped this evening in front of a house that has at times been touted as a marvel though we confess that we do not like the managerial methods. It took us all of ten minutes to figure out the three releases for the day from the mass of stuff the lobby carried—so we went away from there and looked at another show that said "To-day" and gave the list of films. We like the projection at the house in questions, but we decline to enter into a guessing contest as to the day's bill. It was only ten cents lost to the house, but we think there were others with ten cent pieces who felt the same way we did about it. The house is on a well traveled thoroughfare, one of the busiest in the city, not even excluding Broadway, and the house is supported by a small regular patronage and the transients who do not care what they see, but money is being lost through failure to paper the front definitely. We have tried a dozen times to figure things out without success, so we know they have lost at least a dollar and twenty cents.

Don't list all of the releases you ever heard of, just because you have heard of them. Tell what you have so that it may be understood and then, if you have space, tell what you have coming.

Doing Things Well.

Sometimes we wonder why it is that New York managers are so slow even if they are in a town too big to be circularized. The other day we went to a Broadway house to see As You Like It. Over in one corner were some cheap circulars in blue on the cheapest sort of news stock. The next morning we got from Los Angeles the sheet given out by Tally's New Broadway Theater. This was a four page folder, well printed. The first page is the announcement, the second a brief condensation of Louis Reeves Harrison's story, the third the cast and special musical program and the fourth a resume of facts. We might have expected the Broadway sheet from Los Angeles and vice versa. The scale of prices was slightly in favor of New York and the New York house had the greater need of style. Sometimes we are almost ashamed of the New York City exhibitors. And for the use of others with other attractions, here is the Tally back page. It can be used for any special:

Better.

John B. Ashton, of the Princess and Ellen Theaters, Provo, Utah, sends another copy of the daily paper with a story from the Motion Picture Story Magazine and a half-page advertisement. The last time credit was not given the magazine and we are glad to see that Mr. Ashton has taken our hint that the credit should be given. The story this time is Edison's "The Relief of Lucknow," and Mr. Ashton writes that the subject was well worth the special mention.

The story runs pretty close to a full page and is probably as welcome to the editor as it is to the general reader, though it is almost impossible to write a good story from some one else's theme. The combination of a large advertisement and the story is decidedly good though we think that even more might have been made from it had there been inserted in the text, after the story turned the page, some two or three full-face announcements that the subject was to be seen at the Princess on certain dates.

That Letter Scheme Again.

H. R. Weber, of the Star Theater, Chambersburg, Pa., gives a new and very practical twist to the idea of special lettered cards for build-up work. Instead of a special card he makes the admission ticket do, but we will let him tell about that and a new slide wrinkle he has picked up. Just get the meat of his letter, though. "Don't be afraid of a few free admissions" if you can make them bring paid business as Mr. Weber does. He writes:

> I have a scheme that I worked at two different times to good success, if you think it of any use to other exhibitors pass it along. I had 55,000 coupon tickets printed by the National Ticket Co., in lots of 5,000 for each letter spelling STAR THEATER; on Monday we would give out an S to all comers who paid admission, on Tuesday we gave out a T and so on, each ticket had a large letter on the one end like sample enclosed, when any one had a set spelling Star Theater they were good for one admission. I advertised that they could be traded to make the set and no matter where they got them a set was the same as money, and believe me the kids traded tickets during school hours, and the men traded tickets in the cigar stores and in the shops, and the ladies were just as anxious to get a set. On one occasion we tore the roll tickets apart and mixed them up but this is some bother and I think the first way worked the best. It certainly kept them talking Star Theater and kept them coming. Of course, it is like everything else it gets old after you work it once or twice. Don't be afraid of a few free admissions, it has them all working and it is worth it. The cheap way to make announcement slides is to coat the glass with any color water paint mixed with mucilage and thinned with vinegar, after they are dry you can write or print with any pointed instrument. If you wish to have them colored slides, this is easily accomplished, nearly every theater has a very old set of song slides, take one apart and bind the glass with the picture over the one that you have just written on the various colors of the song slide will color your letters without showing the picture, and you have a permanent slide.
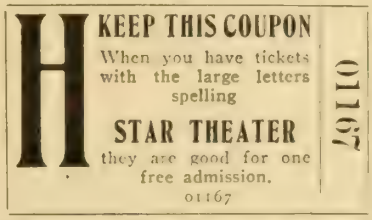
> The ticket looks something like this:



And for a tag here is a mighty good reading notice from one of the local papers:

> Several enthusiastic parties on coming out of the Star Theater Saturday evning remarked that the Star would make more money if they quit charging admission and took up a collection after each show as all the patrons would be willing to give a quarter after seeing the show and some a great deal more; another patron remarked that it surely is worth a quarter but all it cost him was a nickel and he was satisfied with the present system. The Star is a good place to spend these warm summer evenings.

Ever Stop to Think?

Did you ever stop to think just how some apparent piece of enterprise affected your audience. Here is a letter from a correspondent in Lancaster, who noted a recent synopsis of a fake Titanic disaster. He writes:

> I read with interest the letter published several weeks ago, analyzing the film entitled "The Titanic Disaster."
>
> A few days ago a theater in this city exhibited a three-part picture of "The Johnstown Flood." As I knew this would be a "fake," I went prepared to note the make-up of the picture.
> This is the way it went:
>
> FIRST PART:—
> Photographs of old woodcuts of flood scenes.
> Scenes of Paris during flood season.
> Posed scene of rider warning people.
> Still picture of fire scene with colored flames.
> Wreck scene, probably from one of the weekly news films.
> More woodcuts.
> The Conemaugh River.
> SECOND PART:
> Woodcuts.
> Clearing ruins (at Austin).
> Another railroad wreck.
> Buildings in the present Johnstown, represented as left standing by the flood.
> Site of the dam as it is at present.
> THIRD PART:
> Scenes of modern Johnstown, and, on the end of the film, this: "Thanking you one and all for your kind attention and let us hope and pray to God that we may be spared from such a calamity as the Johnstown flood."
>
> With this picture as the attraction, they did a fine business, the attendance being about double the average. With so many people seeing a picture of this kind, what will be the effect on the house?

Don't Fake.

It was all very well for Barnum to advertise a cherry-colored cat and then explain that he had reference to black cherries, but unless you have the Barnum gift for humbugging, make your efforts along safer lines, unless you do not expect to remain in the film business very long. Such things hurt not only your house but every house in your town and perhaps in surrounding towns. The time is not very far back of us when the picture show was a thing abhorrent and thousands of persons who might now be tempted to become fans are staying away because of the stuff they saw when they were tempted into the houses by the novelty of the idea. Don't fake. Take a pride in your work. Try to run your house on the best and squarest lines, leave humbuggery to the cheap road shows that are birds of passage. Week after week you'll be in the same location. Take a pride in the business you are establishing. Take a pride in your work and your accomplishment. Build broad and strong, for the business will not always be a ten-cent proposition and you want to be prepared against the time when the pictures truly come into their own, and perhaps you can advance that time.

But if you cannot or will not help—DON'T HURT.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Still Eager.

THE other day we said good bye to Frank E. Woods, who used to be "Dear Spec," but who now is one of the directors for Kinemacolor. One of the last things he said to us was that the company wanted good comedies. Now that they are going to work out West they will require stories that can be played in California settings and mostly out of doors. Light effects and dissolves and things like that are not yet for Kinemacolor because the pictures, it must be remembered, are taken behind colored screens and at double the normal speed, thirty-two instead of sixteen being made each second, so that only the brightest sunlight is a good light and the electric studio is an impossibility. Up to now Kinemacolor has done little and released less, but now the stock formalities are about completed and they are going to work three directors—mostly on comedy. Between "Spec" and David Miles, formerly of Majestic, you are certain of courteous treatment.

He's Reformed.

Lynn C. Hamill, who was the person meant when recently we spoke of a new instruction sheet that was being sold from Spokane, writes us that he has come to the conclusion that it takes something more than the possession of letters of advice and instruction sheets to make out a good course and that he has dropped this enterprise and will devote his time to learning how to write scripts himself. Mr. Hamill was by no means the only vendor of instruction who could not get his own scripts accepted, but as we said before, we think he has a conscience.

It Had to Come.

A Cleveland paper advertises prizes for the ten best photoplay scripts and announces that those accepted will be locally produced and presented in certain theaters. To help the contestants the lesson sheets of a local school are being run serially—which is a pretty good advertisement for the school. We do not believe that it will do outsiders any good to compete, so the name of the paper is withheld. The winning scripts will probably be in the nature of advertisements for the town, but meantime another few hundred incompetents will be tempted to waste time and postage trying to sell scripts elsewhere.

Giving Out Laughs.

Did you ever write for the literature of the correspondence schools? If you have not you have several laughs coming. A Boston correspondent turns up a new form sheet from one of the schools which contains a number of questions, the answers to which are optional. Some of these seem framed to get some idea of the education of the prospective pupil but two of them deserve a wider circulation. They ask:

> Would you ever care to accept a position as reader or critic of picture plays?
> Could you live in New York City if guaranteed a lucrative salary?

This is all well within the postal regulations. The school does not promise you will be given a position as reader or critic nor yet a lucrative salary, but think of the appeal these suggestive questions must make to the country boy or girl. To be given a lucrative salary to live in New York and read plays! It is easily worth the eight dollars cut rate that the school now makes—if you do not hold out answering long enough to get the still further reduction to two dollars for the complete course.

And to top that the letter states that "The only requisites are suitable ideas and a knowledge of the technical secrets." Even so. But how many of these instructors possess the ideas and knowledge themselves? But get some of the circulars and get all the laughs yourselves.

Prize Contests.

It develops that the contestants in a Brooklyn prize play scheme have begun to wonder what has become of their scripts. Several persons who were notified that their scripts were among the twenty-five most likely to win have begun to ask for action without being able to gain information. The contest was to have closed July first but was extended to September fifteenth.

No contest conducted by other than a reputable company with an outlet for its product through one of the four distributing agencies can be other than a scheme to obtain addresses and clients, and such schemes are not worthy the attention of writers of any grade. In one instance the scripts were retained for nine months and then returned only because of threatened trouble with the post office department and we have not yet seen any announcement of the prize winners. If you can write good scripts write them and sell them to reputable manufacturers. Do not speculate with more or less mythical prize contests.

A Cuban Contributor.

Irving James Doerr, a musician on the U. S. S. Newark, at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, sends us a photograph of himself in his quarters with his trusty typewriter close to hand and a bunch of bananas overhead. He writes:

> I have written and sent in about ten scripts in the past year and a half, and none of them have been accepted. Still I have no kick to utter against an editor. They have all treated me very courteously, going so far at times as to write personal advice. I think that when I write the kind they want they will buy and no sooner. If the energy expended in lamentations were spent in writing and the stamps used to send the scripts around, there would be less fault finding and more congenial reading in your department. We have our pictures twice a week even down here, and many a lonesome hour they pass away for us boys of the navy. Miss Lawrence is our favorite among the actresses, and King Baggot, Owen Moore and G. M. Anderson are the favorite actors.

That's the right sort of spirit for success. He thinks his scripts do not sell because he does not write what the companies want, and he is saving his stamps to find out what is wanted.

The writer who works in this spirit will succeed in the long run if he has it in him at all.

The greatest clog to success is the belief that the stories are stolen in the studios. No one who suffers from that belief is going to turn out really good work. There is always the constant undercurrent of thought that it is not worth while to exert oneself to do the best since it is merely being done for the benefit of some unknown thief. No artist can put his soul on the canvas knowing that another's name will be signed to the picture, no sculptor can work with loving care for the profit of a rival. It stands to reason that you are not going to send out your best work to be stolen, so you can't write your best story until you come to a rational frame of mind.

Here's Another.

We were mildly surprised at the number of person who spoke of the wrinkle for slipping the carbon back into the machine intact. It is one of those very little things that count. One correspondent improved upon it by using the lower half of a No. 9 envelope.

Here's another little wrinkle that you are less likely to find out for yourself since you are at the wrong end of the mail route.

When you send a return envelope, put it into the going cover with the flap downward. The blade of the letter opener is less liable to cut through both outside and inside flaps in that way. Don't tuck the flap inside the envelope—that makes the editor say things. Put it in top down.

Here's Hopp Hadley.

Hopp Hadley and Pop Hoadley are continually getting mixed up in the minds of photoplay people because their names sound so much alike. This is Hopp Hadley who lately became a Benedict and photoplay editor for the Majestic Company; not that the two events have any intimate connection, but because they both happened about the same time. Mr. Hadley is a graduate of the class of '01 New York University and holds the degree of Ph.B. He studied for the law in the New York Law School but went immediately to the stage, playing for several seasons with the Henry W.

Mr. Hopp Hadley.

Savage productions, gradually working over to the managerial end. Later he was general manager of the H. D. Carey attractions for five years, but he saw money in the photoplay and built a theater in City Island, a New York suburb, which he still owns. This brought him into touch with the production end eventually and his close knowledge of the business from the exhibitor's point of view particularly well qualifies him for the position of Editor. Mr. Hadley's family is inclined more to the church than the stage. His father was Col. H. H. Hadley, the evangelist, and three of his brothers are in Holy Orders. Mr. Hadley knows a good story when he sees it and knows where a good story should be when he does not see it, a more valuable trait in an Editor.

THE PROFESSIONAL WRITER AND THE PHOTOPLAY.

By Lawrence S. McCloskey.

It has been predicted that public demand will force the photoplay producer to such high artistic effort that he will be compelled to enlist the services of the ablest writers of the day in procuring scenarios of high quality.

Already film manufacturers are withdrawing their widely circulated ads which assured the public at large that "anybody can write a photoplay."

The supposition was that while it may take an able dramatist to construct a good play or a practiced story writer to write a successful book, anyone who had "an idea" could write a photoplay because dialogue, literary style or even good grammar were unnecessary in its construction. The only essential thing, they thought, was the idea.

It might as truly be argued that while only an artist can produce a good oil painting, anyone at all can be a successful cartoonist because all one has to do is draw a few crude outlines and have ideas—IDEAS!

The realization is upon us that Mr. Average Man can no more supply the kind of scenarios that are going to be demanded than he can paint pictures or write books.

Very well then, we shall have to look to the Professional Dramatist, Novelist and Short Story Writer for our scenarios and we shall have to make it profitable for them. A few of these already have a number of photoplays to their credit, but comparing their contributions to the number of films being released, they are a mere drop in the bucket. The great army of professional writers is still standing off.

Their reason for not coming in seems to be that they do not consider the photoplay generally worth while. Some of them have "tried it out," and have been disappointed.

On the other hand, Scenario Editors have said that the average professional writer is almost hopeless as a photoplaywright.

Every once in a while a Scenario Editor gets a letter something like this:

Film Manufacturer.

Dear Sir: Learning that there is a movement on foot to improve moving picture plays, I have decided to enter the field, and am sending you herewith my first contribution which you will find somewhat different from the kind of scenarios you have been getting. My work as a Short Story Writer is perhaps known to you, and, of course, you will appreciate the fact that my work is worth a higher price than you have been paying for your ordinary stuff. Understand that you are not to make use of any part of this manuscript until I notify you that it is your property, which I shall do upon receipt of a satisfactory offer. If your prices and methods suit me I shall no doubt in the future devote some spare time to writing photoplays, and shall give you the benefit of my work. Awaiting your immediate reply, I remain, etc.

The above is a fair sample of the manner in which "professional" writers (there are exceptions), attempt or condescend to "enter the photoplay field."

After being put in a properly humble (?) and hopeful (?) frame of mind by the letter, the editor examines the script. Sometimes it is "A one-act comedy" or "A drama in Four Scenes." Invariably it is a story absolutely unsuited to photoplay.

As he reads, the editor's hardened soul is torn twixt conflicting emotions—surprise, anger, insulted intelligence rise within him. Then contempt comes to the rescue, he laughs a bitter, mocking laugh, and ties the can on the Scenario Extraordinary, remarking that it is inferior to even the work of an amateur who has graduated from three or four "correspondence schools."

Upon return of his script, Professional Writer may do any of several things. He may be peeved to think that a manuscript bearing his hallowed name has been rejected, "and by a moving picture company." He may decide that there's no use in trying to help people who refuse to be helped, and vow never to give us another chance. Or he may write the editor a sarcastic letter, questioning his ability, holding forth on his own success, and close by sneeringly inquiring what kind of stuff the company wants. Whereat the editor may basket the letter, remarking that he "should worry." But if he's a good editor and is working for the best interests of the photoplay, he will know that one who can write good stories or plays also has it in him to write good photoplays, and he will, therefore, pocket his pride and go after the Eminent Author. If the erring brother is amenable to reason, he will in a few weeks be thanking the editor for having opened his eyes, and the photoplay will have gained a new and valuable friend.

It seems to be a fact that writers of the better class are surprisingly ignorant regarding the modern photoplay. It must be that years ago they saw a picture or two, formed their opinions of the silent drama from the crude productions than being exhibited, and have steered clear of photoplays ever since; for with his very first letter to a film producer he makes it clear that he considers the photoplay beneath him, and is only forwarding his script by way of doing a little "uplifting," so that reputable authors will be able to lend their names to screen stories without blushing.

As a matter of fact he is simply after a check. His story has been turned down by the magazines or "Mr. Belasco has spoken well" of his play, or perhaps some dramatist in need of a little change to tide him over a few weeks will be seized with the idea to extract it from the "picture people." He may be a really good dramatist with a number of successful plays to his credit, but when he sits down to write a photoplay it is with the idea that any old thing will do. His mind runs back into the good old days and he'll frame up something in which, in the last scene the villain says, "I owe you." You may accuse me of murder, but you can't prove it." And the door opens, the hero strides in and says, "I can, here are the baby's curls!"

Most professional writers assume that the "artistic who stops at nothing," the thousand per cent hero and the unruly actress are still rendering across the screen. They don't seem to know that all the old stuff has been canned. They seem to think that all they have to do is to take an old plot, any old plot, get it up in any shape which a manuscript might take them will do, ship it to a film producer with a request to act when they are and that the film producer will send a check and his thanks by return mail. They don't seem to realize that many photoplays are lacking only in artistic quality and all 'round merit, the drama of the stage.

As a matter of fact it will take the best efforts of the ablest writers to place the photoplay on any higher plane than it is at present. We shall need their assistance in advancing this new art, but before they can be of any use to us as contributors, they will have to tell us they should and get to work. Their cast-off material is not good enough for us. They will have to learn by repeated rejections what is not wanted. They will have to worry some about technique and by absorption come to know that there is a psychology of thought and action peculiar to the motion picture art of the photoplay.

To those writers who argue that it does not pay to write for the pictures it may be answered that they have tried to pull big checks by their reputations rather than by offering something worth the money.

Those of them who have contributed successfully have found the film manufacturer properly appreciative, their continued contributions being evidence of the fact.

Inquiries.

NOTE.—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of studio addresses, kept up to date, will be sent if a stamped and addressed return envelope accompanies the request.

C. G. S.—G. M. Anderson is most certainly alive. He has appeared in few photoplays lately, but this does not argue his demise. He has other and more important matters of business.

B. R.—Miss Lillian Walker is a graduate of the Gus Edwards companies, but is not now under his management. She heads her own offering. The blonde typist of the present act is most assuredly not Miss Walker.

H. G. R.—See just above for the elder sons. The younger were Robert Herron and Jack Smith. Your first question was answered lately and we have not the full cast of Friends.

F. H. H.—If Comet advises you that they are overstocked send your script elsewhere. We do not know whether it is a hint or a threat. The comedy rejection slip was not the way the slip was checked but some added matter, mostly to the effect that the idea dated to the time of Noah. We did not sidestep your earlier question. We just yawned and threw it into the waste basket. Melies doesn't want photoplays because the company is now in the South Seas. It is a waste of time to write costume plays as we have said very many times. Scripts approved by the editors are frequently rejected by the producers. The exact relative importance of editor and producer varies with the studio.

W. K. P.—No company is under obligation to comment on a script. The fact that it is returned is sufficient to show that it cannot be used by them. As you gain in experience you will be glad to get the script back. The free criticism department of the Universal was stillborn. The announcement was made in good faith but Hal Reid did not last long enough to put the scheme in operation.

PHYLLIS.—See last week for Great Brother. The trapper in In the North Woods was Charles West. Do not ask questions about matrimony. How do you know the player has a wife?

F. M. T.—During the winter outdoor scripts will not sell if sent to companies not working in the South or Southwest, but the California companies make summer stuff the year round.

J. A. C.—Wm. Goerner was the minister in Essanay's The Moonshiner's Heart. Mary in The Sands o' Dee was Miss Mae Marsh, who has lately returned to the Biograph. We have Mr. Johnson's authority for the statements that he was never a physician or a resident of Pittsburgh.

R. R. P.—You would be just as popular with the Answers Man if you did not write with a lead pencil. The home office does not know the Essanay player you refer to. This was made by the Western company. The next three inquiries refer to films too old to be identified now. Burton T. King was the Ranger in Lubin's The Ranger's Reward. Arthur Mackley was the moonshiner in Essanay's The Moonshiner's Heart, and the late Miss Vola Bertram the girl in The Smuggler's Daughter.

D. J. M.—Query Joe Roach of the Comet if your script does not get back soon and it is probable that your letter will be more courteously treated than those in the past.

T. Y. R. O.—You have your first Biograph question stated correctly, but Texas Gorman was Jack Mason in A Temporary Truce. Charles West was the lead in The Battle.

L. M. M.—We think Miss Pearl White was formerly with Powers and Lubin. We cannot answer that Biograph and never heard of the Glunt family.

V. A.—The identifier did not get Mr. Grouch. Robert Herron was Miss Sweet's brother in Man's Lust for Gold.

A. B. A.—Dell Henderson had the lead in Tragedy of a Dress Suit. Your other questions were very recently answered.

R. C. M.—Miss Pickford was the girl and Henry Walthall Dandy Jack in Friends.

C. B.—The pictures were made by the Paris Eclair and the name is not known on this side nor may the player's photograph be had. It would be useless to address the New York office.

G. A. C.—Miss Martha Russell was the mermaid in Neptune's Daughter. Undine was made near New Rochelle, where the Thanhouser studio is located. See last week for the other answer if you have not already seen it.

J. G. H.—We think the company will have the damaged script recouped if you get after them in a nice way. The other matter should also be taken up with the company. Not particularly interested in more kicks, thanks. We are getting a trifle blase on kicks.

BEVERLEY B. DOBBS IN TOWN.

Mr. Beverley B. Dobbs, who has just scored a triumph with his Alaska pictures in Chicago and other cities in the West, arrived in New York last week. It is Mr. Dobbs' intention to arrange for an exhibition of his pictures here.

Comments on the Films

"THE MOONSHINER'S DAUGHTER" (Lubin), October 8.—The early scenes of this picture, elaborate and careful, promise better things than so rawly melodramatic a story can possible provide. The heroine rescues the hero from in front of a fast moving train and this could not have been better done. Yet such scenes, at this date, appeal almost solely to the gallery. Besides, the acting here, though excellent through much of the picture, is often theatrical and artificial. The mob looks as though it were rehearsing, not acting. The gallery seldom notices small faults like this. So, for the gallery it is a good offering. Where we saw it, a Broadway audience laughed.

"THE CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE" (Edison), October 11.—A stirring picture of one of the most thrilling incidents of modern war. It has been reviewed by us at length and we add again that it is a desirable release.

"A FRESH AIR ROMANCE" (Edison), October 12.—Some time ago, William West played in an Edison picture an old country doctor. In this offering, he has a very similar role and gives a finely human portrayal. The story fails to convince strongly as life; but it is simple and gives the Edison players a good chance for artistic work. Supporting Mr. West are George Lessey, as the young doctor, his son; Gertrude McCoy, as the sick girl, heroine of the story; Mrs. Wm. Bechtel, as her mother; John Sturgeon, as her father; and Leonie Flugrath, as her little sister. It is a very pretty picture, sweet and wholesome. People will like it.

"THROUGH DERBYSHIRE DALES" (Eclipse), October 9.—By the showing of this picture the Derbyshire dales are lovely. It is short.

"A ROMAN'S CONVERSION" (Eclipse), October 9.—A gracefully pictured incident; it is hardly more than that. But it is an offering that is particularly good for Sunday schools, churches, etc.; also, because of its beauty, it will entertain any kind of audience.

"PASSING GYPSIES" (Pathe), October 9.—A love potion figures prominently in this picture, which deals chiefly with the woman's heart of one passionate girl. A man of her tribe loved her; but, it seems, her marrying him wouldn't make enough disturbance to suit her. She comes between a fisherman and his wife; but the fisherman's baby makes too strong an appeal and she relinquishes the pursuit. It is naturally acted and convincing within limits. As an offering, it is commendable.

"WHEN EDITH PLAYED JUDGE AND JURY" (Selig), October 9.—A very large audience received this fine, human picture with that undemonstrative but most emphatic applause, a slight rumbling of feet. It is, in truth, a tip-top offering and one that we can heartily commend for audiences everywhere. The setting gives us little glimpses of a ranch home and also some broad, sweeping views of a rolling cattle range country, wild and lonely. The action, though it is typical of Western life, has nothing rough; there is no crime, no shooting, no cowboys even in it, except in the distance. It concerns itself wholly with quiet human things and its interest, at every turn, comes from character and not from accident. Marked feeling for character is shown by the acting, and the wider backgrounds show that sense of locality that makes them seem contiguous in the picture, makes the backgrounds in the different scenes hook on to each other. Edith, the Eastern girl and heroine, is Phyllis Gordon, who ideally fills the part. Herbert Rawlinson plays opposite to her a manly young Westerner who has been misunderstood. Harry Ennis and Mrs. Shaw play Edith's parents. Mrs. Shaw has a good part and does very fine work. Camille Astor, Bessie Eyton and Fernandes Galves also have parts. Marie Evans is the authoress and Hobart Bosworth produced it.

"THE HORSE THIEVES" (Pathe), October 10.—A story of Indians and soldiers. Such offerings exist for the sake of action. The more Indians and soldiers there are and the quicker the movement, the better. Some recent pictures of this kind have been thrillers and have put the standards higher. This picture doesn't come up to the best; but it also is a long way from the worst.

"THE BELLE OF THE BEACH" (Kalem), October 9.—It is not surprising to find Miss Ruth Roland playing this summer girl comedy as the saleslady who, at the beach, is an heiress. The situation still pleases the audience, and this presentation of it made some hearty laughs. Ed. Coxen plays the man's role.

"ELECTION DAY IN CALIFORNIA" (Kalem), October 9.—A topical on the same reel with the above.

"THE END OF THE FEUD" (Essanay), October 10.—A love story of the mountains with an exceptionally pleasing ending. Francis X. Bushman plays a mountaineer just home from college. In his absence a feud has sprung up. He falls in love with the daughter of his family's enemy, played by Martha Russell. The story works out to a poetical climax in which the child of these two comes in between the feudists just as they are about to open fire on each other and unconsciously brings the trouble to an end. The story is well filled-in by good acting and freshness of treatment. There is some confusion of characters (the two girls) that obscures the story for a moment or so. Opposite to Miss Russell there should have been a dark haired girl, to make a distinction instantaneous and certain. Playing the Parker family are Bushman; Wm. Walters, the father; Harry Mainhall, brother; Helen Dunbar, mother, and Ruth Stonehouse, sister. Playing the Simpsons, beside Miss Russell, are Harry Cashman, father, and Bryant Washburn, brother. Fred Wulf has a minor part.

"EUCHRED" (Selig), October 10.—A love story set on a rocky shore. Skillfully made it is and keeps one wondering whether the revenue man will be euchred or the smugglers. It's a three handed game; for the smuggler's daughter has fallen in love with the revenue man and, as the cards fall, we find her helping first one and then the other. The climax, not wholly unexpected, has freshness and the offering, as a whole, gives good entertainment. Bessie Eyton plays the girl in a charming way. Her swimming is one of the features of the picture. The revenue man is Thomas Santschi; the girl's father is Frank Richardson; Long Pete is Herbert Rawlinson; Fatty is George Hermandez; Anna Dodge plays Bessie's mother.

"HIS MOTHER'S PICTURE" (Kalem), Oct. 11.—This motion picture asks us to sympathize with a "wanderer," because he shows a fondness for his mother's picture, set in a small metal frame and his only treasure. He also saves a girl whose shoe was fast in a frog between the rails, and does it at some risk. But when he loses his picture and learns that the girl has found it, he does a skillfully accomplished "second story job" like an old hand at that business. The girl, finding a burglar climbing in her window, bites him in the arm so hard that, next morning, the mark serves as identification (this was neatly done and helps the action) and a novel chase ensues. Someone had thought up the new chase and the picture was plainly made to accommodate it. To get it over, the leading player had to put himself in considerable danger; but none the less, it was artificial and thin. There are several conversations in the picture that add nothing, even stall the action for a moment. There is some good in it for everyone and the uncritical may like it as a whole.

"AN INTERNATIONAL ROMANCE" (Selig), Oct. 11.—A picture markedly in holiday mood. The setting is at a German summer resort near the mountains. Many pretty girls in peasant costume wait on guests at the beer garden. In the first scene, a baker's dozen German students are at the place and Lena, the host's daughter, is in love with Fritz. Poor photography keeps us from seeing who he is and one gets a blurred impression of the situation in consequence. When the American tourists come and Lena, to make Fritz jealous, flirts with one of them, the story becomes clear. The best of the picture is its fresh and jolly atmosphere. The German peasant dance is very well done and worth seeing. Because of its good qualities, not because of its story, it furnishes excellent entertainment. The author and producer is George L. Cox. In the cast are Winifred Greenwod, as Lena; Frank Weed, as Fritz; Wm. Stowell, as the American. The German characters are Mac M. Barnes, Josie Schmidt, Barbara Swager and John Lancaster. The Americans in the automobile are Thos. J. Commerford, Lyllian Leighton and others.

"THE CHIEF'S BLANKET" (Biograph), Oct. 10.—Good drama. There are fine natural settings and backgrounds, one especially where the camera is placed on a high hill, showing an extensive range of country, of winding road and farm land.

"THE PLAYERS" (Lubin), Oct. 10.—This is the second of the Edwin August pictures. It will be liked. There is a realistic picture of the back of a stage. A novelty is introduced in the setting of the balcony scene in "Romeo and Juliet." Instead of being portrayed on a stage, as the scenes leading up to it would apparently indicate, the action takes place in the open, on extensive grounds, the balcony being situated on a great mansion. Mr. August has several opportunities for effective acting in the course of the drama. He rises to them. The death of the actor is especially well depicted. He collapses during the balcony scene and is carried behind the stage. In the morning the woman with whom he was in love, but who has married wealth, reads of his illness and goes to his bedside, accompanied by her husband. The actor puts an arm about her neck, but it suddenly stiffens and slowly drops; the tell-tale stare settles in the eyes. The work of the woman who carried the role of Juliet is worthy of praise.

"NOT ON THE CIRCUS PROGRAM" (Essanay), Oct. 11.—There is a realtistic picture of a circus parade, which, of course, is the real thing. It serves as a background for the drama, which is well put on. There is one point, however, where the desire for dramatic effect led to the commission of a fault. This is where the clown and the bareback rider in returning the strayed child travel the highways in their ring garb.

"HIS COUNTRY BEFORE ALL" (C. G. P. C.), Oct. 11.—Good drama. There is one mighty effective scene wherein a monoplane is shown in flight, with a background of cloud—all effectively tinted. Another good picture is where the two lovers leave the group in the room and retire to a corner, out of sight of the camera, but are shown reflected in a large mirror. The disguise of the father was hardly impenetrable.

"THE REDSKIN RAIDERS" (Kalem), Oct. 12.—A picture of Indians and shooting and burning, relieved by good natural scenery, of tall grass, and one particularly effective bit of acting—that in the tent of the Indian when the emigrant, pretending insanity, informs the captive she is to be rescued that night. Still further libels on American and Indian marksmanship are perpetrated in the shooting scenes.

"THE SHOTGUN RANCHMAN" (Essanay), Oct. 12.—Good comedy-drama in which Arthur Mackley plays the woman-hating and child-hating "old bach." The little one is carefully trained and is more than interesting. There were two or three points which brought out hearty laughter; and to offset this there were one or two scenes where the audience was very quiet, as, for instance, where the bachelor misses the visits of the child and, going to her home to learn the cause, finds her ill.

"THE COMBINATION OF THE SAFE" (Kalem), Oct. 14.—A new view of the workings of the human conscience is given in this picture by Earle Foxe in the part of a trusted employee who robs his fatherly benefactor, who is played by Geo. W. Middleton. There is much more than this in it; for it also portrays the interacting forces that are sure to find a path, sooner or later, leading to the criminal. It is in this instance found in the repetition of a pet parrot of the figures of the "combination of the safe." The thief had learned them by heart, out loud, and the parrot repeated them at a critical moment. It interests deeply and instructs in a measure; but it leaves the spectator's heart cold. It is, in truth, a very clever piece of work. Stewart Holmes plays the detective. A safe offering.

"MY WIFE'S BONNET" (Selig), Oct. 14.—A clever, laughable comedy situation comes when Mr. Topnot sees his wife's bonnet rolling down the aisle of a theater. It happens that not only Mrs. Topnot, but two of her friends have hats just alike and when Topnot demands an explanation, the three hats, after much amusing trouble, help a little perjury in straightening things out. It tickled a large audience; is fresh and commendable. It has been adapted from J. H. Morton's one act comedy and was produced by C. D. Herbert. Lyllian Leighton plays Mrs. Topnot; John Lancaster, Mr. Topnot; Oliver Johnson, the cousin with Mrs. T. at the theater; C. D. Herbert, Frances Baylace, Rose Evans and John Larkin also have parts.

"A MISTAKEN CALLING" (Essanay), Oct. 15.—She was the best cook in the city until she called on Prof. Phreno, the phrenologist, who told her she ought to be a poetess. Some of the stuff she writes is put on the screen and it is good, just the poetry the city's best cook would write. The truth is that it is so funny that some of it would have been printed. The poetess has a hard time though until her memory looks back at the good things she used to have when she bossed a kitchen. Her adventures and the way they affected her friends and others are truly amusing. It is a good offering.

"THE WIDOW'S SECOND MARRIAGE" (Edison), Oct. 15.—On the same reel is this farce in which a widow has two suitors. One of these is played by Wm. Bechtel, the other by Edward Boulden. The widow is played by Bliss Milford. There are three pleasing little girls in it. The picture is weakened by the unfortunate casting of Mr. Boulden as the deacon who doesn't fit the part very well. It is a slight, pleasant offering, not very new.

"MAX FIGHTS A DUEL" (C. G. P. C.), Oct. 15.—Max Linder makes this picture as he has made many another. His acting is widely popular and deservedly so. Because of him, it is a good offering.

"THE VALLEY OF CHEVREUSE" (C. G. P. C.), Oct. 15.—A hand-painted scenic giving many delightful glimpses of old buildings and scenes of natural beauty. It is worth while.

"IN THE AISLES OF THE WILD" (Biograph), Oct. 14.—The Biograph Company's work shows pre-eminently artistic construction; the choice of incident in its picture is good. The action is nearly always significant of human things and nearly always it is carried forward with a sweep. Biograph weakness shows itself in the relief. When the picture is nearly all tragic we are not moved deeply. It gets a strong hold when some contrast deepens the picture by relieving the tragic cloud as against the eternal calm, the blue sky of life. There are psychological reasons for this. The picture before us was taken in a lovely forest country and the camera has caught some perfect views of it. The main thread is played by Claire McDowell and Henry Walthall with a second man, a very competent player. The secondary story, whose purpose was solely relief, is carried by a young player who wasn't quite up to it. As a whole, it makes a striking picture; but it deals almost wholly with passion and never reaches the deeper human interest. The worst that can be said of it is that it wasn't a very happy choice for a silent drama. It will astonish more than please.

"THE CRINGER" (Lubin), Oct. 12.—He is an old acquaintance, this cringer. Everyone maltreats him in the first act, and in the third he does something desperate "to prove" he isn't afraid. The character is interesting and fairly convincing; but the sketch gives us but a shallow view of human life; it is not a picture of courage. Courage has its foundation in wisdom and there is no wisdom and nothing that is commendable in this deed of the cringer. It convinces because of this very fact; the man is a cringer even to the bitter end. The picture has value as a side light on life and it suggests thoughts. In this case, the backgrounds are very interesting and the portrayal of the central character by Romaine Fielding is extremely competent.

"WHEN CALIFORNIA WAS YOUNG" (Vitagraph), Oct. 12.—A tragic love story, not new in either background or in outline; but filled in skillfully by intelligent actors whom we have never seen play this situation before. The author is Robert T. Thornby and the producer, Rollin S. Sturgeon. Earle Willions plays the poor Spanish lover whose sweetheart is stolen from him by a better dressed man, a wealthy official and who becomes a monk. The girl is played by Mary Charleson and Robert Thornby plays the man who marries and then maltreats the girl. It has good historical atmosphere; but gives us very little that is new.

"EVERY INCH A MAN" (Vitagraph), Oct. 14.—Wm. Wallace Reid has given us a good, fresh comedy in this little sketch. It shows a raw youth from the West who wants to be a detective. The city sleuths to scare him put up a game on him; but reckon without knowing their man. He brings them in tied up and the laugh is not on the boy. Hal Reid plays the boy's father; Rose Tapley, his mother. Robert Gaillord, Morris McGee and Frank Mason also have parts. It was produced by Wm. Humphrey. A good offering.

"MRS. LIRRIPER'S LODGERS" (Vitagraph), Oct. 15.—Mr. Van Dyke Brooke, who produced this picture, an adaptation of a chapter from Dickens by W. A. Tremayne, and who also plays an important role in it, has made a thoroughly delightful offering, full of the real Dickens' atmosphere and full of old-time courtliness. Mrs. Mary Maurice plays Mrs. Lirriper and her work and her kindly face are too well known to need further comment. She fills the part of this very human boarding house keeper in a very pleasing way. Clara K. Young plays Mr. Edson, whom her worthless husband (Courtney Foote) abandons at Mrs. Lirriper's. Van D. Brooke plays Major Jackman. It is surely a [illegible] and its treatment and interest pleased a large audience.

"THE UPRISING" (Lubin), Oct. 14.—The producer of this picture has given us something quite fresh and [illegible]. Neither romance nor battle hold the chief place in it; but the [illegible] to give a strong impression of realism. The picture seems a [illegible] nightmare; the spectators get what is in the heart of the [illegible] going to the mountains with a live baby to protect; but with pictures of ground [illegible]. Quite terrible it is and this part of the production [illegible] highly praised. The love scenes, we don't like so well. One scene in particular, a vision of a cross, seems wholly out of place and [illegible] stood. As a whole, it is a very desirable picture, something quite out of the ordinary.

"GLIMPSES OF BERMUDA" (Edison), Oct. 15.—Among other good things in this scenic film are some perfect views of the harbor at the sea, showing aquatic flowers and ferns. It is very good.

Independent

"EARLY DAYS IN THE WEST" (Bison-Universal), Oct. 12.—A two-reel picture of action. Its story is presented so clearly that subtitles are not needed. This is partly because the action is along familiar lines and the spectator already knows all that is needed about the characters. There is a good Indian portrayal in it. The redskin himself is far from good; he is very much alive and is the real hero of the story. Several other very attractive things will be found in the picture that will help in its popular appeal. In a wide country, a large immigrant train is attacked by as numerous a band of Indians. One of the white men breaks through and warns the soldiers at the fort, who effect a rescue at the critical moment. This messenger puts the Indians who are following him on the wrong trail by one of the cleverest ruses in pictures. It is absolutely convincing as shown, and in it his well trained horse has a prominent part. Where pictures of the early West are popular, this offering will rank high.

"THE HOODOO LETTER" (Eclair), Oct. 15.—The idea of this picture is not wholly new; but there is much freshness in the way it is used and it gives good entertainment and laughter. The ending chase is weak, but all the rest of it is fine. The tramp, who can't read and boasts so, reads a letter saying that he can't work (it says he has smallpox) and then goes out to beg, is very well pictured.

"ONE ON JONES" (Eclair), Oct. 15.—On the same reel. Jones is played by a good comedian and that means much in picturing an old situation. Let us hasten to add that, although the situation is old, it is worked out in a very fresh and a very laughable way and makes good fun. The two on the same reel go very well.

"TAMING A BACHELOR" (Comet), October 14.—A picture that is made pleasing by the players who act it. The situation is good; it has some dramatic quality; but it is not deeply significant, nor is it convincing as a bit of real life. It has value as a lightener on a program.

"A SECTION OF NEW YORK CITY'S NEW WATER TUNNEL" (Comet), October 14.—On the same reel is this very short filler. To New York audience it will be especially acceptable.

"THE DOUBLE DEBT" (Comet), October 12.—In many ways this is a beautiful picture; but it is confused by many characters and the main incident has been used in almost the same way at least once before. It is only possible to unravel the story by the closest attention to its faces; and without that attention, one is likely to lose it altogether. On this account we fear to commend it highly as entertainment.

"WHEN MERCY TEMPERS JUSTICE" (Thanhouser), October 15.—A fantasy presented as the dream of a judge. It has the fine qualities happily often found in offerings by Thanhouser. Containing, as it does, a plea for an equal justice to poor and to rich alike, and being presented in a wholesome, even-tempered way that never irritates, we commend it as a thoroughly worthy picture. Besides this, it will rank high as entertainment; for it is a well acted and gracefully conducted picture. Miss Anderson plays the wife and mother in the poverty-stricken family. One of her two little girls is the Thanhouser kid. The father, who snatches a bottle of milk to keep his kiddies from starvation, is Mr. Cruze, while Mr. Russell is the judge who has favored a rich thief and condemned a poor man. Miss Flo La Badie plays, with her usual grace, the Spirit of Justice, who comes to rebuke the Judge in his dream.

"FOR THE MIKADO" (Thanhouser), October 18.—Miss Taku Takagi, the graceful Japanese player, takes the lead in this heroic melodrama, as a girl who sacrifices her life that the Mikado's army may get plans of a Russian fort. Her husband had been detailed to get the plans; but at the critical moment he was intoxicated and she had to take his place. She is wounded by a sentry; but manages, not only to escape, but to delay the search long enough for her husband to get away with the papers. The early scenes, set in Japan, are marvelously like the real thing not only in backgrounds but in atmosphere including acting and conduct of the story. The Russian scenes are small, narrow views; but are very suggestive of Russia. It is a commendable offering, out of the ordinary in atmosphere, clear and thrilling in its story, and very pretty. Wm. Bowman plays the Mikado. The Russian traitor is played by Wm. Russell and the Russian secret service agent by Virginia Nardon.

"THE SIMPLER LIFE" (Majestic), October 13.—A romance in a village grocery. There are other sets and backgrounds; but the story centers mostly around the cans and the boxes. The idea, and most of the filling-in, too, is delightfully fresh and it makes a worthy, wholesome picture that can be highly commended. Its author, J. Russell O'Leary, is to be congratulated. Indeed, it is one of the most interesting pictures that we have seen this week. Anna Lehr plays an engaging part as the village grocer's daughter. Mr. Scardon plays the tired millionaire who, as a poor man, gets a job in the grocery. Mr. Wm. Lemp plays a rural comedy part.

"ALL FOR JIM" (Majestic), October 15.—A picture by Herbert Prior who plays the lead in it (an ambitious workman) with Mabel Trunnelle as his wife. She overworks herself at home, taking in sewing, so that Jim can go to night school, where he flirts with another girl. At length, she loses her sight temporarily; but his eyes are opened. It has a pleasant ending and, as a naturally acted, realistic story, should be generally acceptable. A very fair offering.

"THE BORDER DETECTIVE" (American), October 16.—A picture whose climax is the capture of opium smugglers on the border. It is a very poorly conducted picture, complicated and obscure. There is no clearly told story and the incidents are apt to show amateurishness; some of them will provoke a laugh. It is a mistake, we feel sure, to release such.

"THE NEW COWPUNCHER" (American), October 17.—The ranch hero and villain appear again in this offering in ways that have a slight but significant difference and furnish much freshness to an old story. It is an offering, in quality like others by the Flying A premier company. Richardson is the villain, Miss Pauline Bush the ranch owner's daughter and Kerrigan the new cowpuncher. It will furnish entertainment to most spectators, and it is safe to commend it.

"THE COTTON INDUSTRY" (Gaumont), October 12.—A picture taken in New England. It is very well photographed and shows the care and treatment of crude cotton and its spinning. We see the kind of work that girls in the factories have to do and we see the different processes in the making of thread and cloth. It is a very instructive and interesting picture, dealing with a subject that nearly everyone has heard much about.

"REUNION DAYS IN ELI TOWN" (Gaumont), October 12.—On the same reel is an extensive picture of the military and civic parade recently held in New Haven. All Yale men, and everyone else for that, will find it interesting.

"BEETHOVEN" (Gaumont), October 15.—A dignified picture full of much that is beautiful and (this is the best thing in it) the leading role is reverently and effectively acted by a first rate player. A grandly tragic story of the deaf composer has been grandly portrayed. It is a picture for cultivated spectators. The dream scenes that illustrate the symphonies are very inadequate, of course. They will probably displease true music lovers; but the scenes that suggest the closing-in of deafness, and the last scenes, especially that in which is symbolically shown the glory of his last great symphony, that his mortal ears never heard, are strong and emotional. We like this picture very much and a good sized audience that saw it with us seemed to be impressed by it.

"GAUMONT WEEKLY, NO. 31."—A well balanced and vitally interesting number.

"A FOOL AND HIS MONEY" (Solax), October 11.—A picture of colored people played by real colored actors. It features James Russell, the cake walk king of America, as Sam Jones, who finds a purse and is rich for a time. It's a love story with good darky comedy, human and fresh. There is a darky evening reception and dance that is something quite new. We think that it will please everywhere where any picture of darkies would be acceptable and commend it as a first rate offering.

"CANNED HARMONY" (Solax), October 9.—A farcical romance. The musician (Lee Beggs) dislikes the lover (Billy Quirk) of his daughter (Blanche Cornwall) because he lacks musical skill and Paderewski curls. After a few painful adventures, some of which were cleverly adapted from the works of William Shakespeare, Billy, with the help of Darwin Karr, his friend, gets the curls, a wig of 'em, and the skill, as much as a phonograph can give him. He wins his bride with her happy father's consent. The offering is lively, it will be found amusing and will be acceptable on a bill with more substantial offerings.

"THE PEDDLER'S FIND" (Reliance), October 12.—A picture showing the rise in life of a very poor Jewish peddler who has rescued a blind baby and brought her to his already overcrowded home. She brings good luck. The picture does not grow dramatic until near the end, when the peddler, now rich, doesn't like to have his son, now a doctor, marry the girl, and merely because she is not a Jewess. This end is pretty; but it doesn't convince. The theme, especially that of the first part of the picture, is fine; but poor photography mars it. It lacks strength; but has some of the qualities of popularity. A fair offering; many uncritical people will like it.

"THE SERGEANT'S BOY" (Bison 101, N. Y. M. P. Co.), October 11.—A two reel picture, opening with a rush of Indians on a cabin. The capture of the boy, his rescue by the troops and adoption by the sergeant are stated in a skillfully pictured whirl of turmoil, dust and battle. A few years are now skipped and we find the lad grown up, a private soldier. The picture tells a garrison love story, new in films, and its climax fittingly is also a whirl of dust and war. The sergeant's boy has proved himself a hero and is buried, after a very emotional scene, with the honors of a soldier. Some will weep over it and it will be liked everywhere. A very desirable release.

"AN INDIAN LEGEND" (Broncho), October 9.—A story told to tourists by an Indian guide and giving the reason why "Ghost Lake" is haunted by the wraith of an Indian girl. Such stories are more effectively pictured when the narrator is kept in view. This is troublesome to do; but it has been done. It has a good story for a picture; but the fact that it was told to tourists weakens it just a little with a sense of unreality. In the legend a white man turns from an Indian girl with whom he had flirted and marries a white girl, a new comer to the settlement. The Indian girl disappears and her tribe attack and wipe out the settlement. The Indian girl comes into the picture again; kisses the lifeless body of her white lover and then walks into the lake. As an offering, the picture ranks well, it having much prettiness and plenty of action.

"PEDRO'S DILEMMA" (Keystone), October 7.—A split reel. Pedro is played by Mack Sennett, who makes a very comical Mexican lover, passionate enough, but nervous and eccentric. His chosen sweetheart (Mabel Normand) sends him a note proposing an elopement. Mabel's friend (Virginia Ferde) under a veil marries him. Mabel's father follows and makes Mack glad that it's Virginia and not Mabel. It is a sure laugh-maker and, with the following, the film makes an excellent light offering.

"THE BEATING HE NEEDED" (Keystone), October 7.—On the same reel. This subject, the sissy cowby, has been used a number of times; but we find it so cleverly handled here that we believe it the best picture of its kind. It is very amusing; there is nothing offensive in it, and it ought to be generally acceptable.

"THE OLD SWEETHEART" (Imp), October 14. Jane Fearnley plays the lead in this drama which has for its prime motive a jilted suitor's reverence for an old sweetheart. Both the rivals are well depicted. Jack, who has been rejected for drinking, and who goes from bad to worse, afterward is admirably presented in his scheming for revenge on a quarrymaster who refuses him a job. The humor in the final situation leaves a pleasant flavor. The scene in which Jack finds his old sweetheart has a splendid dramatic quality. As a whole the film gets over in good shape.

"PATSY'S MISTAKE" (Nestor), October 16.—This comedy was produced from the idea that twins, even when they mature into extremely large women, look very much alike and may be mistaken for one another when, after a separation as children, they meet again by chance as grown ups in the same town. The basic idea is an old one, but it has been developed here with an original viewpoint and some novel turns which make the story refreshingly new and interesting. Patsy, who has the good fortune of marrying one of the twins and the bad fortune of mistaking the other for his wife, is a good comic character. The probabilities are not strained in the succeeding entanglements, and little by-plays skillfully introduced from time to time are very successful. The production will win a laugh in any playhouse.

"GOLDEN ROD" (Powers), October 16.—A fiftieth wedding anniversary serves as the beginning of this series of pictures from the love affairs of the old couple. The scenes, taken together, tell a sweet story in which goldenrods flourish throughout. Those who enjoy a quiet story well and clearly presented will enjoy this film.

"DOES IT PAY?" (Powers), October 16.—On the same reel as the foregoing appears this slight comedy, picturing in a highly amusing manner the troubles of a mild, shy little man who finds a pocketbook and barely escapes with his life in trying to find its owner. His misadventures are laughable from first to last.

"CAPRICES OF FORTUNE" (Eclair), October 17.—This is a strong two-reel production. It deals with a young man's pursuing of the will-o'-the-wisp, fortune, and of his finding it one day while he is asleep. His undercurrent of philosophy throughout is very pleasing, and the love story adroitly woven into the main thread will win much sympathy. The fortune hunter's first hunting ground is Homestead; a smoky, lurid city of steel, catches the fancy in particular. Failing here, he searches successively in the southland, in the far West, in a Mexican cabaret and in the gold country, but fails in all of these to find wealth. How he finally succeeds and is made to distinguish the good in a girl whose love he scorns to begin with make a very praiseworthy drama. It would be unusually commendable as a scenic alone. More than that, it has the strength of a worth-while idea and commands attention for its able presentation.

"WHEN KELLEY WENT TO WAR" (Milano), October 26.—This half-reel farce comedy introduces Kelley, a soldier without a peer, who fights and vanquishes a foreign foe singlehanded and alone. He returns to a prospective father-in-law, who has sent him to war, with one of the enemy in a suit case and many other trophies of war, thereby winning the esteem of father-in-law-to-be and the greater love of the daughter. There is a good laugh in this.

"STAR EYES' STRATEGEM" (Bison), October 15.—No white character appears in this Indian drama, telling of the great love a Cheyenne brave bore for a daughter of the Sioux. The love for torture, the treachery, the savagery and primitive emotions of the original Americans are admirably expressed in a strong, well-molded plot. The capture of Crowface, the Sioux lover of Star Eye, the heroine, is very commendable. A war dance following the capture of the Cheyenne is extraordinarily colorful. One can almost hear the drums. The whole is full of life and vigor and spirited action and is bound to win strong approbation among those fond of Indian lore. The production compares well with the best of one-reel subjects.

"I. O. U. $10" (Nestor), October 14.—Barring the improbable conditions of a girl promising to marry that one of two rivals who has the most money at the end of three months and of a strange will which gives one of its beneficiaries a million dollars "when he is debt free," this comedy is highly commendable and will get a laugh anywhere. Once the main situation is developed, it grows very amusing. The efforts of Jones, who tries to pay Brown a debt of $10 which Brown does not want to see discharged, are extremely laughable at times. The finish must satify everybody because while one fellow gets the girl the other gets the million. The action is lively and clear.

"THE GIRL IN THE GINGHAM GOWN" (Champion), October 14.—Very good and altogether sound is this clean-cut drama handling the clash between the loves of a rich man and a simple country fellow for the "girl in the gingham gown." An heiress jealous of the country sweetheart causes the rivals to come to blows and almost murder. The quarrel is presented convincingly and its finish is full of snappy, unexpected surprise. Interest is steadily maintained throughout by good acting and a plot which is never thin and doubtful. No one could miss the story and all will follow it with interest to the end. As a whole, the film will meet with universal approval.

"THE WHITE BONNET" (Eclair), October 13.—The idea back of this drama is very original and of a strong European flavor. The shrewd father of the heroine asks the two rivals for her hand to send for their mothers. One of the young men proves ashamed of his mother and he is told that he is not a fit son-in-law. This is a simple story, but it is admirably presented. The acting is splendid, there is never any doubt about the meaning and the characters are all clear-cut.

"WHEN TWENTY IS IN LOVE" (Rex), October 13.—This comedy portrays the amusing adventures of a very young man who makes an outcast of himself for the love of a very young girl who takes life very seriously. The fun is wholesome and will have a wide appeal.

"HER DRESSMAKERS' BILLS" (Crystal), October 13.—Pearl White as the extravagant wife and Chester Barnett as the husband who pays the bills play the principal roles in this light comedy. The latter decides to cure his wife of her extravagance and disguises himself as a detective to arrest her for not paying her bills. The resulting situations furnish considerable amusement.

"McGUIRK, SLEUTH" (Crystal), October 13.—On the same film as the above is depicted this brief, disastrous career of McGuirk, an amateur sleuth, who has nothing but a badge to justify him in being in the profession. He comes to grief by interfering with an elopement and throws his badge away in the end. The humor is broad and will miss fire nowhere.

"WHAT THE BELL TOLD" (Gem), October 15.—Interest in this creditable drama centers about a child who ventures to scrape rust from a church bell at midnight because an old negro mammy tells him that such a proceeding will cure his mother who is dangerously ill with a fever. The town is roused by the clanging of the bell and the general gathering of people at the church has been handled as a comic relief. The film will have a wide appeal.

"ON ACCOUNT OF A HANDKERCHIEF" (Reliance), October 16.—A handkerchief blowing from one apartment into another causes the misunderstandings and troubles which characterize this comedy. It makes its point interestingly and vigorously.

"THE BUG AND THE COUNT" (Reliance), October 16.—Following the foregoing on the same film appears this comedy in which an escaped lunatic confiscates the clothing and identity of the Count Derinsky. The scenes are speedy and furnish good food for laughter.

"HIS NURSE" (Lux), October 18.—The foreign flavor of this well presented drama is very pleasing. A sick old man, a prodigal nephew and a pretty but very poor nurse are the principal characters. They are clearly delineated and the situations are all very natural. The film will meet with general approval.

"THE BLIND MAN'S DOG" (Milano), Oct. 19.—Typically Continental is this drama, in which is featured a very intelligent animal. A blind man earns his living by his violin. He is aided by his sister. The sister is abducted by an Apache and concealed in a shed. The animal climbs a ladder and locates the missing woman. He conveys a note describing the location. With the aid of a friend the brother rescues the sister. It may seem to some that if the dog could reach the sister, the sister should have been able to reach the ground and to escape. Nevertheless, the reel will hold.

"THE POSTMAN" (Imp), Oct. 19.—Fred Mace appears in this skit, and contributes to a bit of fun.

"THE EVENTFUL BARGAIN DAY" (Imp), Oct. 19.—On the same reel as the foregoing is an amusing comedy in which Violet Horner, as the woman who would a bargain-hunting go, takes the part of the distressed mother in search of a babe which had been taken from its carriage by a sympathetic old man. A poodle-loving woman, also bargain hunting, had deposited doggie in the carriage. Mother discovered the substitution when she got home. There'll be no complaint about this film.

"HER FRIEND, THE DOCTOR" (Nestor), Oct. 18.—This will make a fair release.

"THE WEDDING MARCH" (Rex), Oct. 17.—A variant of the stolen score story. In this drama by a strange combination of circumstances the thief leads to the altar the daughter of the man who wrote the successful music; the composer is asked to preside at the organ for the ceremony and is given to play his own music. He recognizes the composition in spite of his recent loss of memory, and precipitates a scene, during which the old musician takes his laughter out of the church—unmarried. It will hold.

"THE FUGITIVES" (Imp), Oct. 17.—This is a well-made picture. Herbert Brenon produced it. There are several scenes in which the stone walls of Sing Sing appear. William E. Shay has the role of the Governor and Vivien Prescott is the Governor's wife.

"KING, THE DETECTIVE, AND THE OPIUM SMUGGLERS" (Imp), Oct. 24.—King Baggot has in this melodrama the leading role. Jane Fearnley has the part of the girl. Fred Kelsey is the bully. All are good. There is action aplenty and the interest is sharp.

"THE SHERIFF'S ADOPTED CHILD" (Broncho), Oct. 16.—Fair Western. There is in this picture another case of using a girl to portray the part of a boy, though it is difficult to understand why this is done. It is transparent; therefore it is unconvincing. There are some large scenes and views of fine country.

"THE GOLD BRICK" (Solax), Oct. 16.—A comedy based on the combined stupidity and avariciousness of mankind. Lee Beggs makes fun as the farmer who by a combination of circumstances is permitted to buy a genuine gold brick.

"THE ORGAN GRINDER'S WARD" (Reliance), Oct. 19.—A melodramatic story of a girl who befriended an organ grinder and who repaid the debt by furnishing her a musical education.

"THE BEST MAN WINS" (American), Oct. 21.—This picture is notable for the excellent photography of some charming country views. There is a new stunt in rough-and-tumble fighting. The hero draws the other man's pistol and shoots the man coming to his opponent's aid. The picture will hold.

FORSYTHE OPENS FEATURE EXCHANGE.

J. J. Forsythe, of Shamokin, Pa., has gone to Pittsburgh, where he will open an exchange for the Feature Film Co., of New York City. This firm is the largest importer of strictly feature films in the United States. Mr. Forsythe while manager of the Empire purchased all of his feature films of the above firm and owing to his splendid business ability and reputation for honest dealings he was selected from quite a number of applicants as special manager for the Pittsburgh branch; in fact, the office is being opened with $50,000 worth of films for Mr. Forsythe, who has had vast experience in the feature film business, formerly owner of the state rights for the "Frontier Celebration" pictures of Roosevelt at Cheyenne, Wyoming, which picture was very popular.

PICTURE TO EMPHASIZE VALUE OF BIRTH CERTIFICATES.

The Essanay Company has just completed a full length photoplay that should arouse the tardy interest of negligent parents in registering carefully the birth certificates of their children. This film is booked for release in the immediate future. The photoplay was produced at the suggestion of Dr. George B. Young, the well known Chicago health commissioner, and is the starting of a campaign of education involving the important use of the motion picture. Dr. C. St. Clair Drake, of the Chicago health board, arranged the scenario, and the film will be put out as a regular release by the Essanay Company. It will also be shown in connection with the traveling exhibit of the Woman's City Club. The story of the photoplay illustrates in a most startling way the lax methods of physicians and parents in not registering the birth certificates of their children and, in direct contrast, portrays the immediate registering of dogs and the rushing business done at this office. The result of parents' negligence is vividly depicted when the boy, whose birth certificate has carelessly been unrecorded, is refused permission to attend school, fails to find office employment, cannot obtain a marriage license and seeks in vain to establish his right to an inheritance, all because of the lack of a birth certificate. The film will undoubtedly go a long way toward arousing public interest in such vital matters.

"ALKALI IKE" IN DEMAND.

Augustus Carney, Essanay's world famous "Alkali Ike," is having the reception of his life in Chicago at present. Ever since Carney appeared in person at the Orpheum Theater two weeks ago and addressed the enormous crowds, Chicago photoplay theater managers are clamoring for his services. Carney addressed the audiences of the Lyda Theater, 38th Ave., and Lake St., during the past week, and met personally every man, woman and child in the neighborhood. The Lyda was packed to the doors throughout the evening shows and the appearance of "Alkali," in his Western garb, was the signal for wild demonstrations on the part of his admirers. George H. Hines, manager of the Lyda, was only too proud to escort "Alkali" to his home for dinner, and the sirloin steak that "Alkali" demolished was not at all in keeping with his diminutive stature. "Alkali Ike's Pants" was the film shown that caused the greatest laughing demonstration ever seen in the theater. Mr. Hines declared he never saw a film "go so big," and is preparing to hold a carnival of "Alkali" pictures for the perpetuation of hilarity among his patrons. Meanwhile, "Alkali" is being featured in some comic masterpieces at the Essanay Chicago studio that are booked for November release.

THE ARMY AND NAVY STRONG FOR POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH.

Instruction given by the aid of the eye has been fully recognized by the leading educators and the world's greatest scientists. A great and very important field, to which the motion pictures could be applied with beneficial results, is the instruction of the recruits of the National Guard with the aid of the cameragraph.

Films could be produced of a company of "regulars" going through the various facings, foot movements, company movements and the manual of arms, which would show clearly and distinctly the correct positions, attitudes and foot movements in the most minute details. Instruction in this manner would prove a great aid to the drill sergeant in the practical training of the soldier recruit.

The success of such instruction would depend a great deal on the film and the machine which projects it. We recommend the installation of a Power's cameragraph at all armories for instructional purposes. These machines are now in use and have given splendid results at the U. S. Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.; the U. S. Military Academy, West Point, N. Y.; Fort Sill, Oklahoma; Fort Scriven, Georgia; Fort Monroe, Virginia; Fort Ethan Allen, Vermont; Fort Totten, N. Y.; League Island Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pa.; the Navy Y. M. C. A., Brooklyn, N. Y.; the Army Y. M. C. A., Boston, Mass.; and also have been installed aboard the U. S. S. Florida, Utah and Panther.—The National Military and Naval Review.

POWER BACK FROM EUROPE.

Nicholas Power, whose name is known to practically every moving picture man in the country, has just returned from an extended tour of Europe. Mr. Power was away about six months. He returns looking hale and hearty and has already buckled down to hard work at the factory. We may look for something new in the way of Power's projecting machinery before long, now that the presiding genius is again at the helm.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON

From Los Angeles.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Mr. J. G. MacLean, operator of the Teatro Hidalgo, which is, according to the letter head, the only theater in California showing Spanish vaudeville direct from Spain and Mexico City, contributes the following:

> A few words from the "city of Angels" to inform you that the exhibiting business is good here. Mr. Bierhaus (manager and owner, I take it.—Ed.) and myself are constant readers of The World and we both derive much benefit therefrom. This house was opened on September 14th, and we are playing to S. R. O. most of the time. Mr. Bierhaus imported a stock company, composed of ten people, direct from old Mexico and we are catering exclusively to the Mexican population of the city. We show four reels of fourteen-day independent pictures. I have as good an operating room (not a "dog-house," "coop" or "box") as there is in the city. We have the first and only Simplex projector in town and my projection is considered the acme of that article. I also have a spot and dissolver, which makes a very complete equipment. The operating room is 20 feet long, 9 feet wide, and 8 feet from floor to ceiling. It has two large outside vents. I am a member of the I. A. T. S. E., Local 150, and can report very favorably upon conditions generally, with the exception of the license proposition, which we are trying to remedy, and are leaving no stone unturned in the endeavor to bring about a change.

It is not a pleasant thing to have to publish such a report concerning the city of Los Angeles as the one printed recently. I would suggest to Brother MacLean, and to Local 150, that it probably would not do any harm to send a committee up to the Mayor and show him what we have said about the Los Angeles examination, and call his attention to the fact that that report has gone all over the civilized world, asking him if it is not about time such a disgraceful thing was remedied.

Power's "Five" Outside Shutter.

Wilkie, Sask., Canada, writes:

> In looking over back numbers of The World, I ran across a letter headed "Flicker." In this communication it was stated that Power's Five should be made flickerless by the use of a three-wing outside shutter. I would appreciate information as to where an outside three-wing shutter attachment could be had for Power's Five.

So far as I know, Wilkie, it cannot be "had." You have to make it yourself. If you go back far enough in your back numbers, you will find two or three photographs of Power's Fives, for which the operators have themselves made three-wing outside shutter attachment. It works very good. You might, however, first try Mr. Lavezzi's three-wing inside shutter. I cannot say whether it is valuable or not, as I have never seen or tried one, but you might purchase one, provided Mr. Lavezzi will give you a proper guarantee. Let him do one of two things, viz.: either send a shutter to the department to be tested and reported on through these columns, or else let him send you one on agreement to return the money within twenty-four hours of your receiving the shutter if it is not satisfactory. Twenty-four hours will give you ample time to test the shutter and decide whether it is all right or not.

Simple Questions.

Washington, propounds the following questions:

> Why is it that, on a. c., when you run too fast or too slow the picture flickers; more especially when you run too fast? We are using a two wing shutter, two 6½ condensers, 12 foot picture. Use 50 amperes and are not able to get a white light. It seems to be blurry and yet not out-of-focus. Am using a rheostat. What is the difference between 30 and 60 cycle 110 volt current, and what difference does it make in the light? What is the difference between a multiple and series rheostat; which is best and why? I hope to have an early reply, and to meet you at the 1913 convention, to be held in Seattle.

Some of your questions are very elementary, though the first two are somewhat puzzling. You will of course, get a flicker when you run too slow. The reason therefor has been explained and re-explained many times in this department and in the hand-book. But why you should get a flicker when you run too fast, using a two wing shutter, I am unable to understand, unless it is that you are using 30 cycle current and the two wing shutter gets in synchronism with one side of the alternations. This would produce a flashing of the light, the same as we have when using a three-wing shutter on 60 cycle current and overspeeding the machine. If you are using 50 amperes of 110 volt current, you are wasting more than 3,700 watts, and I would suggest that you get a transformer, mercury arc rectifier, or motor-generator set right away. I don't know exactly what the result would be using 30 cycle current through a rheostat (neither do I know you are using 30 cycle or only guessing at it), therefore will not try to answer your question about light until I have more definite information. The difference between 30 and 60 cycle current is that with 30 cycle there are 60 alternations per second and with 60 cycle there are 120 alternations per second. The 60 cycle would produce a more steady light than the 30 cycle, since with 30 cycle current the alternations are so far apart that there is likely to be a perceptible flickering of the illumination. Multiple and series you will find set forth fully in either the old hand-book or the new one. If you have not a copy of the old book, you should have, and I would advise by all means that you send in $2.50 for the new hand-book—a book of about 400 pages, in which all these things will be thoroughly and completely explained. We hope to have it ready for delivery about November the first.

Address Wanted.

Mr. L. H. Chapman, Prop., New Gem Theater, 211 Bieecker St., Utica, N. Y., writes:

> In reading a recent issue of the Projection Department, I notice an item from our friend in Kalamazoo, Mich., in which he says he used a preparation which is furnished by the International Exhibitors on his plastered-wall screen. Now, as the writer wants to keep up-to-date and is always on the lookout for any improvement which will better the service in his house and give greater satisfaction to his patrons, he takes the liberty of asking you to furnish the address of the International Exhibitors, as referred to in the Kalamazoo letter.

I am as much in the dark as you are, friend Chapman, and have given your address so that Kalamazoo can supply you with the necessary data by mail, thus avoiding any delay. I would however, request that he also supply the department with the address and further information about the coating, if he will be so kind.

Great Heavens!

Erie, Pa., propounds the following:

> (1) What is that shutter between the lamphouse, lens and slide opening for? (2) What is the correct way to set the fan on Power's 6A machine? (3) Why does a rheostat have to be connected with a picture machine? (4) Does it make any difference what way a film is patched? (5) How should my rheostat be connected to get the best light? (6) Let me know where I can get an operator's license, as we have no license here in Erie. I have trouble with setting my carbon and get a blue spot in the center of the picture. What can I do to overcome this?

Man, I don't think you need to hunt up any licensing authority, because you could not come within a hundred miles of getting a license. My advice to you is to proceed to serve an apprenticeship under some competent operator. I believe I cannot be accused by anyone of refusing to answer elementary questions, but there is a limit to everything and it is plain to be seen, Erie, that you have absolutely no knowledge whatever of operating, therefore I could not consistently kill the space necessary to answer your questions. This department is designed and intended to aid and assist operators—not to make operators. I fully understand and realize that the small town man is likely to propound some very simple questions, and I am willing to answer them too, but where he displays an absolutely total lack of knowledge—that is something else again, since he cannot possibly put on a creditable show, and I would merely be assisting in imposing inferior projection on audiences that pay their money to see a show. Go somewhere and serve an apprenticeship, Erie. That is all the advice I can give.

Impossible.

New York City, writes:

> Will you kindly supply some information in regard to the relative merits of Arco B, and Bio carbons. This will settle a dispute between a carbon dealer and myself. The dealer contends that the quality is the same, only they have two brands. I have used both and think one is better than the other.

It is out of the question, New York, to supply such information as that through the department. Also there is no necessity for it. If you think the Bio are the best, buy them. If you think the Arco B are the best, buy them. Whichever one you may wish to purchase is your business, and not the business of the dealer. As for me, I would purchase whichever one gave me the best results, and the dealer could talk himself black in the face before I would change that determination.

In Error.

Princeton, Ill., propounds the following:

> Believe I have something of interest to my fellow exhibitors. You will note by the attached light bills that the rate for one week was 8 k. w. at six cents, or a total of forty-eight cents, for the week; whereas, the succeeding week, the bill was thirty-six cents, this being the bill for the Eagle Theater, where I used a compensarc on the 60 ampere notch, running six nights from 7 P. M. until 10:30 P. M. This is of course, for the machine only, it being on a separate circuit. However, do you not consider it as being very, very low? I use a.c., 110 volt, 60 cycle, but the current saving device (compensarc) alone would account for it, as I use the same kind of outfit at the Stevens Theater, using the compensarc on the 40 ampere notch, and the attached bill shows $9.34 for one month.

In the Stevens, we used No. 6 wire for the machine, of which there is but one. In the Eagle, however, I used a No. 4 wire from the meter to the compensarc and No. 6 from there to the machines, of which there are two. My theory is that exhibitors can save money by using large wire; also by having two machines, used alternately. The wires from compensarc to lamp do not get so hot. We use the compensarc on the 60 ampere notch all the time at the Eagle.

Princeton is in error in attributing the low rate to the large wires. There is no appreciable loss in the wire itself so long as there is no considerable rise in its temperature, but if the wire gets hot, then there is considerable loss as well as injury to the illumination. However, No. 6 wire in good condition would be far more than ample to carry the primary current to a 60 ampere arc attached to a transformer secondary. As a matter of fact, Princeton has got things exactly backwards. If No. 4 wire is to be used, then it should have been used between the compensarc and the lamps, instead of between the switch and the compensarc, where the amperage is much lower. Sixty amperes at the arc would mean only about 25 amperes between the switch and the compensarc, and a No. 6 wire is rated at 46 amperes. Of course, if your switch were located a long distance from the compensarc, that would be something else again, but it would have to be a good way off to cause any heating. If your No. 6 wire at the Stevens gets hot there is something wrong with it, and you had better rip it out and put in a new wire. The charge of thirty-six cents is ridiculous for the amount of current used. The only explanation I see is that there is something wrong with the meter.

Not Correct.

Helena, Ark., writes:

I would like to have you advise me as to what time you expect to have your new Operators' Hand-Book on the market for sale, as I wish to obtain one as soon as possible. I would also like to have you give me the address of some firms in your city that are in a position to furnish countershafts and various motor connections to put on the different machines and supply three wheel grooved pulleys of various diameters of say 8, 12 and 16 inches to fit shafts of about 5/8 inch. Do you think it a good idea to install a shaft about 10 inches long with the cog, sprocket and grooved pulley in the same position as the upper sprocket wheel now is, to permit the use of a drive from this point, i. e., to take out the shaft which the cog wheel and sprocket are attached to, and put in a longer shaft with the addition of a grooved pulley about 3 inch diameter? In conection with the Edison Model "B."

In a recent argument with a supposed to be Operator, he claimed that the longer the throw of the motion picture lens, the less the picture was apt to jump, but I looked at the matter entirely different, that is to say—that the shorter the throw the less apt it was to jump, for the simple reason that on the long throws the least lost motion in the intermittent, which results in a jumping of the film, will multiply in proportion to the length of the throw, whereas, with the short throw, the same defect in the intermittent will not multiply so rapidly owing to the shorter radius. Why was the Pathe machine taken from the American market? When can I obtain a list of all the M. P. shows in Arkansas?

As before stated, we expect to have the hand-book ready for delivery by November the first. We do not guarantee this, but expect to accomplish it. As to the address, I would suggest that you secure one in St. Louis, or Chicago. Write the Enterprise Optical Co., 564 West Randolph St., Chicago, Ill., mentioning my name, and I belive they will supply you with the name of a Chicago firm who can furnish the articles you need. I see no reason why the Edison Model B should not be driven in the way you suggest. You are in error about the magnification of movement with an increased length of throw. Your sketch shows plainly where you fell down in your calculations. Of course, if you increase the throw and the size of the picture, or if you increase the size of the picture without increasing the throw, then you would increase what movement there might be, in proportion. Added length of throw increases any movement which is due to vibration of the machine itself, but vibration of the film in the machine—that is to say, jumping or side movement, is only increased when size of the picture is made greater.

I cannot tell you why the Pathe machine was taken off the market: Most likely it was because the sales were not large enough to justify the selling expense. I presume any one of the Little Rock film exchanges can supply a list of Arkansas picture theaters.

Camera Movement.

Louisville, Ky., propounds the following:

I would like very much to have information as follows: What movements are generally used in moving picture cameras? If the Star Wheel movement is not used, why not?

The movement most commonly used in M. P. cameras is what is known as the claw movement, colloquially termed by operators the "finger feed." The star and geneva is not usually used. Cameramen claim that the claw movement is more decisive; meaning that the film travels downward with a more snappy jerk than can be had with a star and geneva movement, which is more or less rotary in action.

Condenser Mount Suggestion.

Minnesota, sends the following valuable contribution:

For the benefit of those who still use the old style lamphouse with round condenser casing, and are troubled with condenser breakage, let me suggest a remedy as shown by accompanying sketch. The mount is to be set so it will not extend into the lamphouse nor even touch it. This can be accomplished by using washers as shown. I was troubled with chronic condenser breakage, even though back of lamphouse was entirely removed. Condensers fitted very loosely, and I was not pulling more than 25 amperes d.c. Set my condensers as per sketch, about a year ago, and since then have not broken one lens. You will note that air space in an article in last week's issue, and another illustrated some time ago where practically the same results were accomplished by punching holes around the mount in lamphouse. But why punch holes when there is a simpler method?

The proposed change is a radical one indeed, and I am not at all prepared to say what the result might be; still after all, I am not at all sure that the introduction of an open air draught would not work all right. I would suggest to machine manufacturers that they experiment with this idea and see if it is not of value. The opening would, of course, have to be covered with wire gauze in order to satisfy the authorities. I am inclined to advise operators to test this scheme out, where they can do it without injuring their lamphouses. I had an idea of my own several years ago as follows: Set the condenser half an inch ahead of its normal position and make the lamphouse with two front walls, with an air space, open top and bottom, between; the hole in the back wall to be closed with sheet of annealed glass. The trouble was, however, that I could not get annealed glass which could be depended upon. One piece would be all right and the next would break very quickly. Your sketch has been reduced, so the exaggeration is not so very noticeable. The 1/16 inch space is marked plainly enough to give the idea.

Calcium Light.

Urbana, Va., writes:

We are traveling exhibitors using calcium light, and while we are constant readers of the Projection Department, we have seen very little concerning this illuminant. We use an Enterprise Model B gas making outfit, but have a good deal of trouble with it as the flow of gas is uneven; also there is boiling over. Could you tell us the cause and how to remedy it? We also have an Edison gas making outfit which gives an even flow of gas, but which consumes sixteen cakes of ozone in half an hour—about three times more than the Enterprise. This of course, is prohibitive. Should the Edison use that much? If not, what is the cause of the excessive consumption? We get a good sharp picture at 20 feet; lamphouse back 14 inches; small spot, and lens in close, but when we have over 20 feet throw, our picture is not sharp or clear. We have tried moving our lens and lamphouse nearer without results. 20 feet gives a 6 x 7 picture.

We are having articles on gas making outfits prepared, or at least we have requested that they be prepared both by the Enterprise Optical Company and the Edison Company. They will doubtless appear shortly. The reason you have not seen much about gas is that there is not much gas used nowadays. We shall be glad indeed to have articles from gas users giving complete instruction in the use of gas and of its making; in fact all the points that might be of value to gas users. As to your Enterprise Model B, there is something wrong with it. The combination of uneven flow of gas and boiling over would indicate an uneven pressure in the gas chamber, but I am not familiar enough with this device to say what would be the probable cause of such a condition. As to the Edison, I think there is no doubt but that there is a bad leakage of gas somewhere. That is what the condition you describe would indicate. It is also possible that you are using a very large tip on your burner. If so would suggest that you get a smaller one. As to the out-of-focus effect when you throw more than 20 feet; when distance from lens to screen is altered, distance of lens from film must also be altered by means of adjustment screws. Very likely your lens has not enough adjustment to take care of the added throw.

Alternating Current Pressure.

Denver, Colo., writes:

The statement was made to me recently that the current we commonly term 110 volt or 220 volt a.c., is not that at all. In other words, the pressure of a.c., as indicated by the voltmeter is not the real pressure. Now is this correct? If it is not correct please explain the matter.

The voltmeter pressure, Denver, is the correct pressure—that is to say, it is the correct effective pressure, but it is not the extreme pressure. Alternating current starts at zero voltage at the beginning of each alternation, and mounts upward until the peak of pressure is reached. We thus have two extremes. During the first part of the alternation the pressure is low, and during the last part it is very high, the mean effective pressure being about 70% of the extreme. The peak pressure of 220 volt alternating current is really over 300 volts, and the 220 represents the effective pressure. This is, however, a question of no particular interest to the operator.

If you take the peak pressure (I have manufactured the term "peak pressure" myself to suit my own convenience) of a.c., it would only have about 70% of effectiveness as compared to a similar pressure of d.c.

Light Trouble.

South Berwick, Me., writes as follows:

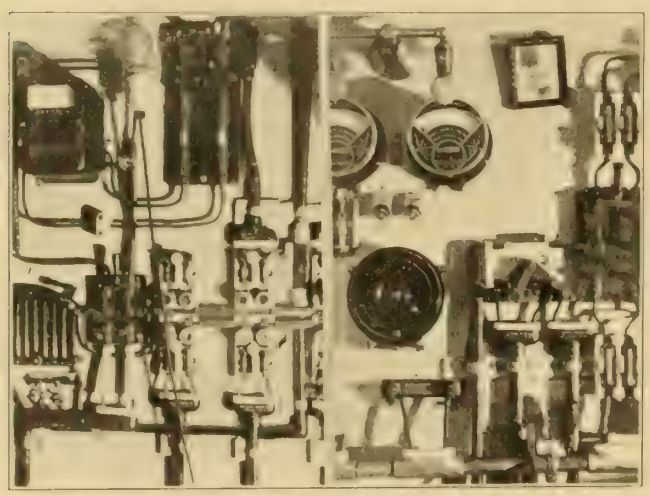
Trust I will be welcomed to the department. I would like to ask a few questions, and know of no better place to go for information. Am using Power's 6A and the manager says my light is O. K., but it doesn't suit me. Am projecting a 14½ foot picture at 47½ feet, using from 25 to 60 amperes of 110 volt current; two 6¼ condensers. My light is unsteady and am compelled to keep changing from 25 to 35 and 45 and sometimes even to 60 amperes. This is not due to loose connections, as I have examined everything carefully. Do you suppose it could be in the transformer? I worked in the same place last year with Power's 5 and it was the same story. The arc sometimes makes more noise than a saw-mill, and the next instant I can hardly hear it, and bang! the light goes yellow. Have already broken two condensers. If I use one 7¼ and one 6¼ could I pull the arc back farther from the lenses, and thus avoid breaking them? Am using a transarc. I used the same Power's Five last winter at the beach, and the current was steady as a rock. We are running five reels of licensed pictures, with the opposition running the same.

The conditions, as you describe them, seem to indicate fluctuating pressure. I would suggest that you have the light company test the voltage of your feed wires on the primary side of the transarc. Get them to put in a voltmeter and leave it there for one day. Just what the cause of the fluctuation is I could not say, but from your description, that is undoubtedly what happens. It is possible that your street mains are feeding some big hall, or a theater in which large numbers of lights are switched on and off occasionally, and that the street mains are overloaded when all these lights are on. I don't know that this is the fact, but it is the most likely explanation of your trouble. If you find this is not the case, then there must be something wrong with that transarc. The projection machine itself has nothing to do with the matter. Yes, one 6½ and one 7½ lens would bring your arc farther back, but it might cause a ghost. You can try it and see. As to your being "welcome to the department," my dear sir, the department is open to any and every operator and manager in the United States, Canada or any other country. The only requirement is that they be in need of information or have something interesting and of value to contribute.

Various Things.

Conneaut, Ohio, contributes the following interesting letter:

It has been some time since you heard from this town but I assure you we are still on the map. We now have four moving picture shows and one vaudeville house. There are seven of Power's "Six" machines and one Edison in operation in the city; six of the former being run by motor, belted to the fly-wheel (which is mechanically bad). Of these, four are under my own care. Two have been run for a year and nine months, and we have yet to pay out one cent for repairs. Aperture plate shows some wear; so do the sprockets. I know of four other Power's "Sixes" and one Power's "Five" run by motor belted to the fly-wheel. The five was run four years by hand and the last two years by motor, and has never been back to the factory. James Chambless, Evansville, Ind., makes a motor drive attachment which looks good to me. I enclose two photos of my switchboard on the back wall of the operating room. You will notice I have my a. c. service switch and meter and d. c. meter pilot lights; field regular ground detectors; five double branch cut-outs (only three showing); house light dimmer; double pole, double throw switch, and three point sliding switch for rheostat, all where I can reach them. I expect this kind of an arrangement would not pass in some places, but I built the whole thing myself and would not have it any other way. Some men kick about the field regulator being in the operating room, but after working in one house for two years with the field rheostat down cellar and no way to get at it, should the voltage raise or drop, without stopping the show, I most emphatically do not agree with the regulator being located anywhere else than within reach of the operator. One man says the operator has all he can do if he watches the picture, which is all very true with some men, but I know of one who would not sit looking at the picture and let his light go out. On the switchboard will be seen house light dimmer, marked 1, which is used to dim eight 40 watt tungstens in green glass shades. Three houses use this system. Now just a word about those ground detectors concerning which you asked information: They do burn in series but a ground on the positive wire, negative lamp, burns brightly. The sliding switch, marked 2, is used in connection with Power's rheostat and a Sterling coil. With lever as shown, it is for a. c. through the Sterling. If moved to the next point we have eight coils, and on the next point five coils of the rheostat. And now a word or two about our power plant: We have a 7½ k. w. dynamo, twelve h.p. engine, and use 50 amperes of 110 volt current. We don't use a.c. when the plant is running. We use 110 volts because we have to use a.c. sometimes in the forenoon, as we only run five hours a day. Now do not think because I have not asked you a lot of questions that I don't have any trouble, for I do. But with good oil and horse sense I get along in fine shape. We just could not manage without the Moving Picture World, and hope that, for ever and ever, you will keep the good work up. I am waiting for that new hand book to come off the press. Please excuse mistakes as I am a better mechanic than writer.



The record of Power's "Sixes," in Conneaut, shows that they have had the right kind of usage and have been properly lubricated. If those machines had been grinding film through at the rate of ten minutes to a thousand feet, and had been lubricated with a mixture of one drop of oil and seven drops of advertising, there would have been a different story to tell. I would suggest that this man Chambless either send one of his motor drives or else an adequate description of it, so that we can set forth its points in the department. Your switchboard is excellent, the only objection there could be is that in some cities it is required that all switches and fuses be enclosed in metal cabinets, but with a rightly constructed board, such as yours seems to be, there is no especial reason for this, other than the vagaries of the authorities. I thoroughly agree with you that the field regulator should be within reach of the operator when he is seated in operating position. I am decidedly of the opinion that the operator should have his eye on the picture all the time, and I claim it to be a fact that unless he does watch the picture every second it is on the screen, he cannot properly project it. This does not mean, however, that he watches the picture in the same way that the audience watches it. I have run a picture half a dozen times, watched it every instant it was on the screen, and could not then have told you what the picture was about, except in a very, very general way. I was watching for faults in the light and to gauge proper speed of projection—not to follow the story of the film. The operator who watches the picture will learn to read his lamp adjustments through the fault appearing on the screen, and will know exactly what should be done to remedy it; and the doing of the thing becomes an automatic action, so far as his hands are concerned. I maintain that this is the only proper method for the operator to pursue if he wants to produce really high class projection. Your explanation about the ground detector doesn't explain. What I want to know is this: If two lamps are connected in series between the two positive and negative wires, what in Sam Hill prevents those lamps from burning at about a half c.p. all the time, regardless of whether there is a ground or there is not a ground? There is some point there that I haven't caught, and it is that particular point I am after. Kindly come forward with the explanation.

Altering Lens.

Nevada, writes:

Have been informed that an ordinary projection lens may be made to vary the size of the picture somewhat by varying the distance between the separate elements which go to make up the lens. Is this true? If so, how is it done? What condenser combination do you regard as best when using a 5 or 5½ inch e. f. projection lens on a 68 foot throw? What can you say as to the adaptability of the so called adjustable lens for projection? Am not supplied with a hand-book, but want to get one when the new issue comes out.

It is quite true that the varying of the distance between the two factors of a projection lens will vary the size of the picture, but it is also likely to injure the definition, and I would not advise anyone to attempt any such stunt as this. The distance between the two factors may be shortened by cutting off a portion of the lens barrel and re-threading. It may be lengthened by adding an extension ring, which any competent machinist can make. Two 7½ condensing lenses should be O. K. I have seen adjustable lenses which gave excellent results, but it has not yet been proven to me that these lenses may be uniformly relied upon for the best work. We are bending every effort to get the new hand-book out by November the first, and expect to fill the orders already in the office on that date.

Advice Wanted.

Ottawa, Canada, writes:

I would like to ask a few questions concerning an invention I have been working on for a long time, and which I believe I can get to work satisfactorily. It is an automatic fire shutter which is supposed to close down when the film stops passing through the gate, or if the film breaks the shutter will drop and shut off the light. I have not seen any machine equipped with this kind of a shutter, and would like to know if it is worth while patenting such a device. Would you kindly advise me before I go any further in this matter?

I am afraid it would not be wise to patent such a shutter. I could not speak with authority without first having examined the device, but I very much doubt your reaping any financial reward. In the first place, there have been a number of such shutters invented and some of them worked quite well too, but they didn't seem to meet with favor. There is no man on earth who could say positively that it would not pay you to patent such a shutter, but my own opinion, based on such knowledge of the matter as I possess, leads me to believe it would not. I am sorry to have to tell you this, but it is better to drop the matter now than lose money.

"At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs."

By G. F. Blaisdell.

THE Lubin debut of Edwin August will afford gratification to his friends, as it will give pleasure to many who have not before seen his work on the screen. In "His Life," Mr. August has a good opportunity to show what he can do in drama of to-day. For one scene, that of the masked ball, we see him in Roman costume—a garb between which and Mr. August there is much in common. Lubin's new leading man takes to costume work like a veteran of the old-time stage. As a matter of fact, he has had training in this department of acting under stage veterans of standing. Those who were privileged to see Mr. August in "The Blot in the Scutcheon" know what he can do in costume before the camera. It is to be hoped he will give us more of this kind of drama. Unquestionably there is a market for it; and there seems to be no attempt to produce costume plays on the part of American manufacturers, the field practically being left clear for the foreign makers.

In "His Life" we see not only good drama, carefully portrayed and painstakingly staged. We see most effectively brought into play the refinements of the screen—the use of an initial curtain, which, being parted, reveals the title of the play and an announcement of the stars; these, in turn, fade into an animated photograph, introducing Miss Hawley and Mr. August, which is all very prettily done, the two shaking hands and bowing and smiling; the photograph dissolves into the opening scene of the play—Mr. August caressing the hand of his crippled mother and kissing her good-by as he starts for the city to begin the battle of life. Throughout the play much use is made of the dissolving picture—the scene changing from the city to the country. On the one hand there is the successful man, surrounded by metropolitan allurements, his mother and sweetheart forgotten; on the other, the sweetheart paying devoted attention to the helpless mother, now wheeling her out into the sunlight, again changing her over in front of the fireplace, and in the glow of the coals sitting at her knee and reading to her.
